The Passing Of A Great Cheif

JAN 1 1 1941

The sudden death of Paramount Chief Seeiso Griffith, which occured at Maseru about three weeks ago, removes from our midst one upon whom the whole of Bantudom looked for great things. It was the expressed opinion of all those who knew him that he had the qualities of his great grandfather—Moshoeshoe. For this reason they saw in him a man who was to play an important role in shaping the destiny of the nation that was gathered out of the confusion of tribal wars and formed into a united people by that great diplomat our race has yet produced. That he was capable of playing this role no one can deny. During his short term of office, he proved beyond doubt that he was a man of vision. Like Moshoeshoe, he saw no hope and no future for his people except under the protection of Great Britain.

"We are proud," he said at the ceremony of his installation as Paramount Chief in February last, "to belong to this Government with which we are content and which was secured for us by our ancestor, Chief Moshoeshoe, from Queen Victoria, the Good. It is our wish and request that this protection and guidance may never be removed from us." These are words of a wise man, of a far-seeing man who thought more of the future welfare of his people than of his personal ambition.

The late Chief Seeiso had a full understanding of what the British Empire stands for. He realised that within its borders and under its protection there was room for the growth and development of any race irrespective of its colour or creed. Consequently he was deeply loyal to the British Throne and in this war he was ready, if need be, to hurl the flower of the Basuto manhood into the fury of battle in defence of the Empire against the forces of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy.

"It is with great regret," he told the High Commissioner, "that we have learned that His Majesty's Government has again been unavoidably forced into war with the German Government, because the British Government will not allow small nations to be swallowed up and trampled under foot by powerful nations. On behalf of the Basuto I declare that His Majesty's Government is fighting a just war, and we Basuto join with other countries of the British Empire in our unswerving loyalty to the King's Throne and declare that we are ready to sacrifice everything for the sake of achieving victory for Great Britain in this war as in the last war."

This striking statement was followed by deeds which have won the admiration of all those interested in the future welfare of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Beside, assisting in raising funds from his people towards Empire war efforts, the late Chief Seeiso influenced the National Council to vote £100,000 for the purchase of spitfires for the Royal Air Force, and he himself earmarked the sum of £20 per mo from his salary for the purpose enabling Great Britain to ach. victory and thus overthrow Nazid and all that it stands for. This act was prompted by his realisation that the defeat of Great Britain in this war meant the hurling of his people back into the darkness of ignorance and slavery from which they were rescued by European missionaries under the protction and guidance of Britain. It is an act which reveals the greatness of his soul and the depth of his mind. It is, therefore, no exaggeration to say by his death the Empire has lost not only a loyal subject but also a great admirer of British institutions of justice, liberty and fairplay.

To the Basuto nation, the passing of Paramount Chief Seeiso is a national calamity. They did not expect that the life of the man they loved so dearly would be nibbed in the bud and that he would thus in the prime of his life and at the beginning of his reign be removed from them with all the great things they had expected from him. One can only imagine rather than describe their feelings of sorrow and bewilderment. Moreover it would be unwise to inflict more pain upon their wounded hearts by trying to probe into their feelings. Suffice it to say the loss is irreparable and is mourned not only by the Basuto nation but also by Africans throughout the length and breadth of Southern Africa. Like the poet we can only say:

"Death like an overwhelming stream
Sweeps us away;
Our life is a dream."

But in our grief and sorrow, let us not lose faith in Him who, after the death of Moses, provided the children of Israel with Joshua to lead them to the promised land of security and peace.

A Plea For Bantu Music

FEB 7 1941

We owe Adams Coll[illegible] great debt of gratitude for being the first African school to take Bantu music [illegible] seriously as to honour it with a special department of Music.

If anybody had told us some eight years ago that some time in the near future there would be [illegible] the Native Institutions of [illegible] School of Music to be [illegible] wholly devoted to the training of African musicians, vocal and instrumental, he would not have been taken seriously. This, in spite of the fact that it is generally agreed that Africans are extremely musical. "Give them Agriculture, give them technical training as carpenters, builders and the like make them teachers and give them a fairly comprehensive education in preparation for that if you like, but music, painting, sculpture, and all those higher arts which make life ever so much more beautiful for the individual, but do not really benefit any body else, well, it is not really necessary to give the African that." If a few of them know enough to play the hymns in Church that ought to be enough. All the same they are wonderful singers, their sense of rhythm, their power to harmonise at sight, their ability to play the piano or organ without much tuition is simply marvellous." And so for over eighty years African boys and girls in Native schools have been fed on this poisonous praise of their musical ability. How they have believed it!

And what has the effect of this praise been on the young mind, has it inspired him or not? If inspired has he had any chance to improve himself in this line. Very very little. Instead one has sensed a self-complacency that has become a poison.

FEB 7 - 1941

This casual and careless attitude is partly due to kindly but unthinking praise so generously given. Why should they exert themselves when those who ought to know think so much of their of their singing? One would like to appeal to the younger generation now at school to take music more seriously than has been done by the generation now in its prime, and to go back to the standards set by those stalwarts of forty, fifty years ago, who felt so keenly that they had to prove that the Bantu could reach up to the heights other nations had attained and won us the praise we so little deserve to-day.

Medical And Dental Training For Africans

Five Scholarships Available

The University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, has made arrangements to enable a limited number of non-Europeans to obtain full training in Medicine and Dentistry at the University in Johannesburg, commencing on February 3, 1941.

As a result of this, the Department of Native Affairs has decided to provide, from the South African Native Trust Fund, five scholarships to be awarded to Africans on a competetive basis on the completion of the first year course in Medicine and Dentistry. That is to say, the scholarships will operate as from the commencement of the second year's courses in Medicine and Dentistry. Africans who have already fulfilled the requirements for the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry will be eligible at once. The scholarships will cover all University fees, equipment and other necessaries and reasonable living expenses during term-time. The scholarships will be open to men and women. The selection will be made from students who have completed the requirements of the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry.

Biennial Registration Of Voters

The Comet — Nigeria

New Regulations For Coloureds

FEB 22 1941

CAPE TOWN

The compilation of the new Electoral Voters' Rolls will shortly begin and will be proceeded with in accordance with the Amendment Electoral Act, which provides for the compulsory registration of Europeans, who enjoy what can be termed "manhood" suffrage, that is, 21 years of age and being "White."

The Coloured voter must be a male over 21 years of age, able to sign his own name and fill in his occupation and place of residence, reside in premises valued at least £75, earn £50 per annum. These conditions apply to the Cape Province. In Natal the residential qualification requires the premises to be valued at least £10 annual rental.

The forthcoming registration is of considerable importance to the country for provision has been made for the enrolment of all those on active service, inclusive of those outside the Union, both European and Coloured.

Those on active service will be registered at their last addresses and the forms can be signed by any responsible member of the family.

The changes in the Electoral Act provide for a month's residential qualification—the former qualification being 3 months—and require the signature of only one witness, whereas usually the signatures of two persons were necessary.

According the last figures, the number of Coloured voters in the Union were just over 30,000, but it is possible that this figure could be exceeded considerably as there are many Coloured men who have not registered.

Enumerators are to be sent out shortly by the respective Electoral Officers and with the new conditions, it is most probable that the voting strength of the Coloured male population would reach the record figure of 40,000 allowing for a 33 per cent. increase.

The vote of the Coloured man is going to be of the greatest importance at the next general elections starting with the Provincial election early in 1942, and it is essentia that Coloured men eligible for the vote, should register.

Organising Native Voters

A convention of the African Voters' Association comprising the different branches from the Cape, the western and eastern circles, and Griqualand West, was held in the Community Hall, Bloemfontein, recently to consider the rights and privileges of the African registered voters in the Cape Province. The President, Prof. [illegible] Jabavu, presided.

The Rev. R. M. Tunzi presented an encouraging report on the negotiations that he had undertaken with the Native M.P.'s in connection with the conditions and status of the African registered voter.

Mr. E. D. Tsenyego then gave an account of his activities in organising and enrolling the African voters of East London, where the Association had its most powerful branch with well over 1,000 members on the roll.

He said that he had first sought the co-operation of employers who used Native labour on a large scale, for under the Urban Areas Act it was necessary for every employer before engaging a Native who was not registered as a voter, to pay his registration fee of a shilling. It was therefore an advantage to employers if Natives were registered and he had thus been able to gain their support, which in some cases involved permission to address meetings of their employees.

NATIVES SUSPICIOUS.

The Natives themselves, however, were often suspicious, being inclined to interpret his efforts as attempts to recruit them for war service. He had explained to them the advantages of registration, which enabled them to be exempt from the many pass laws and offered a better chance of employment.

The speaker said that although there had been no registration for the supplementary list during last year, there will be a general revision and registration throughout the Cape Province in February of this year, and it behoved every Native with the necessary qualifications to register himself. He appealed to employers of Natives to give all the necessary help to all those wishing to register themselves.

After much deliberation on the matter, the convention finally decided that circulars be printed and circularised throughout the large centres in the Cape Province and that canvassers be appointed to each centre to organise the voters.

Working On The Mines

FEB 22 1941

On the Mines, First Aid is always spoken of with respect and even honour because of what has been proved not a matter about which something is "going to be done," not a matter of "fine words" without any useful action; but something about which there have been the clearest proofs, the most beneficial results. It has all been proved. Instance after instance has occurred where the knowledge of First Aid has been a boon indeed; goodness knows the number of times on Mines that what looked like a little thing, say a scratch or something like that, has been prevented from getting worse or developing into mischief for one reason or another, simply by prompt application of cleansing (cleaning) the flesh near the injury and bandaging if necessary. First Aid has been thoroughly organised on the Mines.

First Aid once learned is never forgotten altogether but it is necessary at least every three years to refresh ones memory by taking another course of instruction. It is considered that the training remains sufficiently fresh for that period because it is so strict; and after what you have read in past articles and are going to read in these columns, you will say that it is a good thing that the training is strict. The instructors in the subject are all experts, and though they are strict—they have to be in order to win attention and to ensure learners concentrating on the teachings—yet they are kind and most encouraging; they have a deep respect for, a love of, First Aid. They know what good it does and can do. They realise that in the event of an accident on a Mine or anywhere) even on the veld or a road) a fully qualified native mine worker could and would do the wise thing pending the arrival of the Doctor. Not long ago you read in one of these articles how a motor accident happened in East Griqualand and two Mine workers (natives) who were on holiday there at the time, happened to be near the scene. They were fully-qualified in First Aid, and they rendered help and assistance to the injured until the Doctor came. The conduct of these two Natives was spoken of in the highest terms.

First Aid is something clean and helpful, something good. There is nothing selfish about it, and the very training in it keeps the mind active and bright. The Native Mine workers who qualify in First Aid are interested in it because they are taught so well. A high standard is set and there is no departure from it: everything must be done well. And the Native Mine workers who qualify realise right from the very start of their study that they are acquiring knowledge, precious knowledge, that will be useful to them as long as they live. All this is true. Is it any wonder then that First Aid is spoken of on the Mines with respect and even honour.

Next week we hope to give you some figures showing the progress that First Aid has made on the Mines.

MORE AND MORE AFRICANS LEARNING FIRST AID

MAR 1 - 1941

Truly the advance made in knowledge of First Aid by African Mine workers in the Transvaal is wonderful. Five years ago, that is, about the year 1936, fewer than 10 000 of them were trained. Today more than 30,000 are trained.

X X X

Since the year 1920 as many as 160,000 African Mine workers have passed the Red Cross Society's examinations. These examinations are not easy; they are not meant to be easy. There must be serious, severe tests before certificates can be awarded. The African Mine workers know this fact, and therefore they give their minds to First Aid. They are interested and they want to learn.

X X X

About twenty-five years ago comparatively few Mine Africans knew anything at all about First Aid, and certainly there could not then have been the great Competitions that now take place every year. So important are these annual Competitions that last year, as you have been reading, a Cabinet Minister came to present the trophies, and medals and prizes and cash prizes.

Yes, today there are hundreds of highly-skilled Africans working on the Mines who have been taught First Aid and who are fully fitted to deal with almost any kind of accident. That is what the Minister of the Interior and of Public Health said the other day, and he ought to know.

X X X

The teaching of First Aid has made Mine employees, both Europeans and Africans, more safety-minded. That in itself is a testimonial to First Aid.

One Mine African, Abraham Haloza by name, has won sixteen medals and decorations in First Aid Competitions, and there are a good number of other Africans — your own people — who have also won medals and decorations similarly.

MAR 1 - 1941

The African Mine workers recognise that the Doctors and First Aid Trainers wish to help them (the Africans) to add to their knowledge and knowledge is one of the precious possessions of life; nobody can take it away from you. This knowledge is imparted to the Africans in an interesting way.

The numbers of African Mine workers who know First Aid keep increasing.

Superiority Complex

THIS trait of human character is as old as human life in this world. Its origin can be traced to the jungle law when the objects desired by the then denizens of the world were enjoyed by the strongest and the fittest physically and mentally. The lower and the weaker creation had to serve the interests of the higher and the stronger. The whole of ancient history is full of the activities of the highly developed at the expense of the weaker and the less developed. When mankind latterly came into his own this world-wide trait was at work and it would seem in the present age that this trait is as hard to outgrow as sin itself.

It may not be erratic to assume that the first murder on record may have had as its basis, this very trait of character. Adam's eldest son may have assumed that as the eldest son all the good things of this world, including the Divine favour, should be accorded to him and that when his brother was favoured above him, his superiority complex was affronted. Thereafter the whole human history is replete with evidence of a similar or identical character in that the privileged — physically and culturally, conclude that the best things of life were their due against those of the less endowed with the above human characteristics.

The history of human wars is always traceable to the same complex "I am higher than my neighbour, historically and culturally—therefore it is my natural prerogative that I should overcome him and thus win by means of war all that is his so that my conscience will agree with my belief that I have not robbed him of his rights but have won them by open conquest."

The present war has come about by reason of that state of mind. The German chancellor with his advisers has been troubled for some years at the sight of the vastness of the British Empire and may have argued in his mind that the Germans being the fathers or elder brothers of the present British nation, have, by of right of primogeniture, legal claim to all, if not the greater part of the younger brother's belongings.

Education and religion have brought about a great deal of good to the world but it would seem that these two powers have not fully gained the fealty from human beings to which they are entitled. Perhaps the world will have to wait a few more centuries before the great nations are prepared to submit their conquest rights under that greater authority. The same trait of character is noticeable in the East in the Sino Japanese war which has been waged for more than two years.

This Superiority Complex is at work in Africa more then anywhere in the world. First, the Portuguese, then the Dutch and latterly the British and the Germans and the French have taken possession of this great continent so that now except a mere spot in North Western Africa the whole has come under European powers and now there has come about this Great War to prove that might is right and that the weak must come under the strong —nothing mattering whether the weaker has transgressed against the stronger or not, but the aim must be that the stronger nations must have the lion's share of the good things of this world.

The pitiful plight of the Bantu in South Africa is a clear example of this attitude of mind. They are badgered on all sides to give their labour to the privileged races and the jobs open to them are the lowest paid and the heaviest and to gain recognition of their grievances and doing them justice takes very long and rarely fully accorded. That is the effect of that monster — the superiority complex.

Non-European United Front

A PUGNACIOUS SUGGESTION

Sir,

FEB 2 2 1941

It is quite impossible to tell the much ostracized Bantu to join hands with Indians and Coloureds whereas they do not show signs of social capitulation. From this fact, a Non-Europan Front of these three mentioned peoples is an exceedingly pugnacious suggestion.

If Indians and Coloureds really knew how much some of us detest their co-operation and leadership, they would leave us alone. Certain things, privileges given to these people, their attitude towards us in their recreation and social places has made us undergo complete metamorphosis, and if they knew this, they would be dumb-founded and amazed. True enough; human nature is the same the world over, but environment and tradition create degrees of difference. One thing the world should always bear in mind, we are thinking of our freedom and liberty but we're going to work towards this end solely by ourselves and lead by Africans.

Bantu labour under great handicaps suffers from discrimination, and how then can they have the doggedly audacity to urge us join a Non-European Front? The future of India and Indians all over the world will be decided by the Indian Congress in India. The day India receives her full independent status, all Indians will be freed, but not the Bantu. They will remain where they are.

A Front without social and political equality of the peoples is without a fixed purpose and life. If Indians, for instance, want our hand let us have equal shares in society and politics, let us mingle in Patidar and Gandhi halls as we do at the Market Square.

Dr. Dadoo sees the misery of the Bantu and at his sight they have an overflowing gratitude and see him as God-sent leader. In them he sees a forlorn, leaderless children. It will be remembered the first time he appeared in court, after the adjournment he was carried shoulder high down Main Street by some Bantu singing beautifully our sacred national anthem. At this sight I was filled with shame and pity and sorrow at my people's easy going about things. This is what is rightly called the "black mind of a black man." Many Bantu leaders have done much for the welfare, development and progress of our people but they have not been carried in the air. Many of our people have sacrificed for the upliftment of Africa but we have not sung "Nkosi Sikelel' iAfrika."

I should not be mistaken as a racialist or pripped by the Malanite nationalist spirit. The only thing is that I love my country and detest the ignorance and foolishness of my people. I would that we cherish the broader spirit of fraternity, but many a time there's been unpleasant feelings between Indians, Coloureds and Bantu. Also, we must not stand on the giving end only but also the receiving end.

No alien person can lead us from bondage to freedom. He who believes that he can lead us is not a leader but an opportunist taking advantage of the adverse conditions of the blackman. The mass will follow him to end in nothing better than where they began.

No Bantu man, or woman, worthy his or her salt can join such a movement. There's no honour in joint partnership. "The African," says Mr. H. Dhlomo in one of his plays on the above subject, "must battle, bleed alone to victory and glory." The Bantu who follow this path will live

It goes without saying that we forever, whereas those who join the front in the battle for freedom have chosen the course of sensationalism, sterility and will end nowhere.

If the Bantu can lead us to LIBERTY we invite no other alien friend to do so. And before a leader can shepherd a people, he must remove their ignorance rather than encourage absurd offensive sentimentalism expressing itself in wrong political notions. Because most leaders do this, we don't want a United Front.

Native Farm Labour

In its eleventh annual report for 1940 the South African Institute of Race Relations observes that the report of the Committee on Native Farm Labour, appointed by the Minister of Native Affairs in 1937, was published in 1939. It is noteworthy that the members of the Committee did not visit farms but received representatives from farmers, farm workers and others interested, at numerous urban centres. The publication of the Report has not made any less desirable the investigations into actual conditions on the farms, as planned by the Institute before the Committee was appointed. The Institute's report on the farm conditions in the Orange Free State is being followed up by plans for a fuller study in the Transvaal. This investigation will be commenced before the end of of 1940. Special attention will be given to social conditions, such as housing, health services, school facilities for children, and their influence upon the migration of farm labour into the towns. The Report of the Native Farm Labour Committee shows that improvements in wage conditions alone will not be sufficient to encourage farm workers to remain on the farms, and the investigation now being arranged should result in further proposals likely to help the agricultural industry to retain its labour. It has been entrusted to Mrs. Rheinallt Jones, to whom has been handed the grant of £200 which was recieved for the purpose two years ago from Captain G. Thwaites, a member of the Institute.

During the year, increasing evidence has been received from the rural towns that aged and infirm Africans who cannot supply the labour of members of their families as workers on the farms, are being turned away. They seek shelter in the near-by small towns, where the Municipalities are unwilling to allow them to settle in the Native locations. This growing probem will be covered in the investigation.

TRAINING OF AFRICANS IN MEDICINE AND DENTISTRY

FEB 2 2 1941

SCHOLARSHIPS TO BE GIVEN

FUNDS are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified African students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and on passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

Non-European Hospital Space Bigger

THESE facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is also giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare, for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of African students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P O. Alice, C P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the matriculation examination and after that to take up and pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for the award of five scholarships, on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum, tenable for one year, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

ABOUT EDUCATION

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. DANIEL J. JWILI, Bulskop Ethiopian School, Ventersdorp, writes: Sir,—Allow me in "Umteteli" to say something that might be of great help to our Bantu race. It is now the time for all Black men and women, in South Africa, who see how important education is, to be up and doing. And so we will have to see what we may do for ourselves. I agree with the use of the word, "education" without the slightest hesitation. It is not only our young persons, who are in need of education; it is needed by all of us, men and women in addition to boys and girls. Day schools are of no use for persons who are working in the day. And so we will have to go in for night schools. In what places are night schools needed? The answer is every place where a number of Africans are living together: In locations, compounds, and on farms.

We all know that teachers will have to give some knowledge of reading and writing. Persons who have had no schooling will naturally make a start with their language (Xhosa, Secoana, Zulu, or whatever it may be). After that, English, because English is the most necessary language for all persons who have a desire to go forward with education.

Some will naturally put the question. Who will be teachers in night schools? The answer is: Those who have a little more knowledge than others. For example, one man may have a good handwriting. Let him become the handwriting teacher; even if he has not got as far as Standard VI, he will still be able to do good work by teaching others the one thing of which he has knowledge. Another may have no knowledge of English, but may be quite good at reading Xhosa or Secoana. It is wise that he should became the teacher of those who are still unable to do any reading or writing.

There is a wrong idea among some of us, who foolishly make an attempt to keep our little bit of knowledge to ourselves. Our bit of education gives us the feeling that we are "higher" or "better" than others, and some of us may have no desire to give away our knowledge to others. But, oh! what a narrow way of looking at things. I suggest that if Africans would become teachers of whatever knowledge they have, surely it would be a great help in improving our nation.

African Troops Welfare

Recreation For Soldiers

REPRESENTATIVES of the African Troops Welfare, headed by Messrs O. Stern, S.M. Bennett Newana, and J. D. Tsamaesi met officers of the Native Military Corps at their headquarters at Woltemade, and discussion ensured on establishment of a recreation hut. The Welfare Troops' representatives asked for permission to establish a recreation hut in which African soldiers would be provided with writing materials and newspapers. The representations of the committee were highly appreciated by the officers of the N.M.C., who promised that facilities would be made to enable African soldiers to have such recreation as suggested by the committe representatives of the African Troops Welfare.

It was pointed out by the army representatives that the soldiers should be provided with kaffir beer, as marewu was the only beverage allowed to them.

The committee is now engaged in solving the problem of recreation for the African soldiers in the Peninsula.

Factories' Amendment Bill In Senate

Minister Assailed With Incontrovertible Arguments

SEN. MALCOMESS PROVES UNECONOMIC RESULT OF INDUSTRIAL SEGREGATION

During the Senate debate in the second reading of the Factories Machinery and Building Bill on April 1, the Minister of Labour was engaged in a back-to-the-wall fight by the Natives' representatives in the Senate. Although the latter lost all their amendments to obviate a colour bar and other inaccuracies, their opponents were relegated to the shadows of defeat in that Senator the Hon. C. H. Malcomess, to quote one representative was conspicuous when he argued as follows:—

Mr. President, we all here on this side realise that the life-long work of the Minister of Labour has been to assist the working people of this country and to give them a little more in life than a mere existence, but now what I should like him to do is to extend that sympathy he has got for the European to the Native people.

What he has to realise is our taxation of the Native, the Poll Tax, as far as the Natives who live in the territories are concerned: he is no doubt aware that a boy of eighteen has to pay his pound. In the Reserves he has no opportunity of earning sufficient money to pay that pound, so he has to go out and work, and the whole of your industrial legislation is attracting the Native to the big centres.

DIRE POSITION IN TOWNS

The unfortunate position of those people who are living in the towns is that they are not earning sufficient money to pay for the ordinary requirements of life. I think the average wage in the main centres of this country is about £4 a month, and all economists have proved that the minimum requirements of a Native to live an ordinary life is £6 or £6 10s. The natural result is that the wives, the mothers, are also forced to go out to do some work to try and assist the husband to earn the bare necessities of life, with the result that although there is a minority of children who go to school, the great majority of the children today are growing up in the streets and the gutters without any home life; and

I would like the Hon. Minister to consider what the future is going to be unless the present Government protects the growing youth and stops the deterioration of the race that is taking place. I do not want to refer to any lower courts. Natives known for their special knowledge of Native custom often advise the Commissioners in their task. Altogether the atmosphere of reliable authority in decisions is well established in the two courts discussed above.

It would have seemed unfortunate therefore, if the Appellate Division had decided otherwise than directing appeals to come through Native Appeal Courts. Satisfaction is felt at this decision, firstly because it enhances the prestige of the Native Appeal Court that the Appellate Division should decide appeals in the light of its views. Secondly, the large volume of work handled at Bloemfontein seldom includes consideration of intricate Native law. Decisions of the Native Appeal Courts should lighten the burden of the higher court while consolidating its judgments.

The Natives in the Cape to-day realise the great friend they have in our present Prime Minister, in Mr. Hofmeyr and in the present members of our Senate, where there are a good many Afrikaners, and they also remember that at the time when Gen. Hertzog's Bills were before the Joint Sitting of Parliament those who voted in favour of retention of the Native franchise were eight Afrikaners and four English. They have not forgotten that. But to-day the Hon. Senator Fourie was nominated to this position on the ground mainly of his thorough acquaintance by reason of his official experience or otherwise with the reasonable wants and wishes of the coloured races.

I do not want to enter into the position of the coloured people but I had the opportunity about a year ago with a member of the Labour Department of attending a joint council of the European and the coloured people. I did not take part, but I listened for about three hours, and the utter hopelessness of the Coloured people in the outlook of the future was really very, very bad. The class of Coloured people that I have to deal with in Eastern Province—I judge the Coloured people according to those—bring me to the conclusion that the Coloured people here in Cape Town are a class of people I would have no hesitation in saying are a very fine class indeed, and one of their leaders told me, as I was walking home, that the Coloured people, skilled workmen had the right to vote for the members of the Apprenticeship Board but that employers gave preference to European children. If Coloured children wanted to learn a skilled trade they had to commit some sort of crime and be committed to a reformatory so that they could learn a skilled trade. It is the most damnable thing I have ever heard of, and I do think that something should be done for those people.

AGITATION DENIED

I do not want to enter into argument on the speech made by our philosopher Senator Heaton Nicholls. I do not think that in the four years that we have represented the African people here in the Senate and in the other place, that I have heard of one single instance where any of us acted in any way as agitators against the Government. We have been exceptionally careful, and I can say without any fear of contradiction that I find the educated Native in the Cape Province which I represent, and in Bechuanaland, of tremendous assistance in keeping the Natives moderate. But the Hon. Senator Nicholls must not forget that the Natives are restless.

The Hon. Senator occupies a very good position on the Native Affairs Commission, which is mostly in Pretoria. If he travels he goes to the big towns. I have been a Senator for the Ciskei for four years and I have not met a single member of the Native Affairs Commission in my area amongst the people. I have met them in the towns but not in the districts.

The Hon. Senator made a remark that there was no starvation amongst the Natives. I can tell him that the tribal Natives are living below the bread line. You do not meet an individual Native who is starving because the other Natives would always give something of their food to him, with the result that the whole of the tribe are living below the bread line. What I should like the Hon. Senator to realise is this, that what the Natives feel is this constant discrimination against them in every possible way.

POLICE TREATMENT DISGRACEFUL

The treatment of the Native by the police is disgraceful. We have constant instances all over my area where the police go and ransack homes in the middle of the night, putting everyone, man, woman and child out into the open.

You have a tax against these Natives which no other people in the country pay and you have pass laws against them. In the Free State as many as eighteen passes have to be carried. The Minister of Native Affairs has stated there are laws with which he cannot agree, but I say in cases like this it is for the Government to lead the people and not to be led by them. I really did not want to say this, but I do feel that there are constant insinuations that Senators here who represent the Natives do not realise their responsibilities and are not playing the game. The Natives did not ask for us. Their franchise was taken away and we were forced on them and it is perfectly natural to-day that the Natives should follow us.

What I am very anxious to do is to co-operate with the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Labour has never been a personal acquaintance of mine, but I have known him for all the years that I have dabbled in politics, and he has been looked upon as a friend of the underdog. Now I put a question to him yesterday to which he did not reply, and I am very anxious to find out his attitude towards the Native people.

I asked the Hon. Minister to exempt certain locations with regard to the erection of school buildings. He replied to that question that it was merely for want of labour.

THE MINISTER OF LABOUR: NO.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order. The Hon. Senator should not go into the general history of segregation and its general merits and principles. He should confine himself to the measure in the clause under consideration.

Senator Malcomess: My attitude is this, that I want to understand the attitude of the Minister before I know how I am going to vote. If I know the Minister is going to stand for a colour bar then I certainly will vote for the amendment that has been proposed. The Minister told us yesterday that he was very much against segregation and he would not have it in any possible way, but that he wanted separation when it was necessary. I agree with him to a certain extent, and I think we all agree with him, but to-night he tells us he wants the right to segregate when he considers it necessary.

Now I was also told yesterday by the Hon. the Minister that I had made a threat. I never made a threat. I tried to explain the position as I saw it. What I want the Hon. Minister and this House to realise is that less than six years ago the Natives in the whole of the Union were composed of different tribes. Gen. Hertzog's Bills have made the Natives into a nation, and they are becoming race conscious and they are taking an interest in these things. They are having their big congresses, and I should like to know whether the Minister will give us an assurance that as far as the wages of the Natives are concerned he is going to help us, so that they live on a proper basis."

Increase African's Purchasing Power

South Africa is a leading state of the African continent and if she is to maintain this position permanently she will have to include Africans in her economic development, not merely as labourers but also as consumers. The days when the African was only an asset to South Africa as a labourer are fast passing away. The impact of civilisation upon his life has completely changed his mode of living and it has whetted his appetite for the good and higher things of civilisation. His ancient life is fast disappearing. In urban as well as in the reserves, he is discarding the old way of life, he is plunging deep into the civilised way of life.

This change has naturally increased his wants and it is his ambition to fit himself into the civilised life of to-day. He realises that unless he does so, his race might share the fate of the Red Indian of America and the Bushman of Australia and of this country, who could not resist the destructive influence of Western civilisation. He knows that the salvation of his race in this Europeanised Africa lies in his adapting himself to civilised conditions, and not in clinging to the manner in which his ancestors lived and worked.

There are people, no doubt, who think that it is wrong for the African to adopt European mode of living, who think that he should be encouraged in this Europeanised Africa to continue to live the life of an Africa that is no more. These people, we know, are afraid of the advancement of the African. On account of their prejudiced minds they are unable to realise that the advancement of the African is not detrimental but beneficial to the welfare of Europeans in Africa. It will give impetus to the development and expansion of inlustry and commerce and thus increase facilities for the employment of those Europeans who are to-day living in poverty.

It is gratifying to note that there is a growing number of European business men who realise the importance of African advancement and who believe that its exploitation will enable South Africa to maintain her leading position on the African continent. They feel that Africans should be enabled to participate in the economic development of this country after the war. In this connection let us quote Councillor S. P. Lee who told the Ratepayers of Johannesburg the other day that "there is need in the Union of an immediate progressive increase in the purchasing power of four-fifths of the population so that post-war products might be more readily absorbed. "Councillor Lee went further and said "he was convinced that a progressive increase in Native wages over a period of years would have a definite effect on the expansion of industry, because the additional purchasing power thus granted to Natives would mean additional employment for Europeans as overseers and charge-hands."

We are glad that this view is gaining ground in spite of the inability of the majority of Europeans to outgrow the belief that the black man should not be paid a living wage. We are glad that there are men who realise that the impoverishment of the Africans does not enrich the white man; but that it retards the progress of South Africa. The increase of the wages of African workers will not in any way be detrimental to the welfare of Europeans; it will not in anyway affect White security in Africa but will enable our industrial products to be absorbed in this country. The Africans are an important internal market which unfortunately is not being properly cultivated. Few business men know of its existence and as the result this market is hardly being tapped. The days of "Kafir" trucks are fast passing away. The ambition of the new African whether in urban areas or in the reserves, is to posses the good and higher things of civilisation. He has learned to appreciate a beautiful home containing all the requirements of modern life. He likes good food and to dress decently. If he is well paid, he will certainly spend his mney in South Africa and thus contribute his share to the prosperity of this land.

African Libraries In The Making

City Bantu Display Big Interest

(BY SOL. L. SIDZUMO)

THE City Council of Johannesburg continues to render great services to its Non-Europeans. In addition to its big housing and transport facilities of recent years the Council has perhaps crowned its efforts by establishing in the City a fine Non-European library.

City Council's Helpful Work

In January last an experiment was made in this direction by the City Council. Through the directorate of the well-known Bantu Men's Social Centre, the Council was able to utilise one of the spacious rooms at the Centre for a Non-European library. Situate almost in the heart of the city, and conducted with marked efficiency, the "B. M. S. C." has served its purpose most efficiently. The hub of the social and and recreational life of the Non-Europeans, and essentially a Christian institution, the Centre has certainly gained in attrac.iveness through its library and has almost doubled its membership.

Annual £300 Grant

The Library receives an annual subsidy of £300 from the Council, of which one half is borne by the Native Affairs wing of the City Council. There are two well-educated Bantu young men in charge at the library; who are, however, directly responsible for it to the City Librarian, Mr. Kennedy.

By the end of June the library had a solid membership of 706, made up from Bantu, Coloured and Indians. No charge is levied for membership. On enrolling, however, members are made acquainted with the rules of the library, and of the need to abide by them.

It is perhaps noteworthy that, of the 706 members enrolled between January and June, 461 were Bantu; 175 Indians and 70 Coloureds. The Bantu total was made up of 394 men, 44 women and 23 children. That of the Indians was made up of 139 children and 36 men. Here it will be seen that no Indian women were enrolled as members during this period.

There were neither women nor children of the 70 Coloured members. All were men; of whom the majority were school teachers. The total number of books borrowed, and returned after a period of two weeks, during the six months was 3,985. It is regrettable that, while it has been found essential to supply both Coloured and Indian schools with books from the library, this privilege should be denied the Bantu schools.

Fact Preferred to Fiction

What seems, however, at the moment to be a great difficulty on the part of the authorities is just to know exactly what type of book is likely to meet with satisfaction among the members. For while English fiction claims a comparativley high percentage of readers among the Europeans, the contrary is just the case with Non-European readers. Of the 3,985 books borrowed 698 were English fiction, 276 children's and 247 in vernacular languages. Books on philosophy and religion numbered 319: while those on Education and Sociology were 797, Those on Science and Art, and Literature and Language numbered 504 and 352 respectively. Books on History, Travel and Biography were 691. The period of two weeks over which a member had to retain his or her book or books proved, however, rather short. There were, in consequence, occasional delays in the returning of the books borrowed. These delays have since been overcome by allowing an additional week.

Perhaps no people have since the creation of Non-European Library in the City been shouldered more heavily than these responsible for the task of selecting books for the library, For this task a small committee was formed.

Incidentally a fine building has been erected at the Western Native Township to be known as the Winifred Holtby Memorial Library for Non-Europeans.

Certificated Native Teachers

Salaries In Cape Province

IN the Cape Provincial Council during the last session, Mr. H. Burman (Native Representative, Cape Eastern) moved the following resolution:

"That, in view of the fact that salaries of certificated Native teachers compare unfavourably with wages of unskilled Native labourers in many centres in the Union, notably within the Cape Province, this Council is of opinion that an increase in the salaries of all Native Teachers, amounting to twenty per cent. on the average, should be granted without delay." JUL 1 9 194

Explaining the resolution Mr. Burman said that he thought all members realised that their main function was the provision of education for all races, not least of which were the Natives. He asked members to give careful consideration to the motion before Council. "I feel the scale of pay for Native teachers in this Province is an oustanding scandal," said Mr. Burman. "How anybody can say that they are adequately paid is beyond my understanding. Certificated Native teachers are paid £5.10. per month on an average, which compares most unfavourably with the wages of unskilled Native labourers in urban areas. A Native who pushes a wheel-barrow at the new Provincial Administration building, in Cape Town, gets nearly £8.10.0. a month, while labourers on the roads in urban areas are paid a minimum wage of £1.10.0. a week. Native boys employed in shops to sweep floors and do other manual work also receive a minimum wage of £1.10.0. a month. JUL 19 1941

"I do feel that the time has come that the whole system of paying Native teachers must be completely amended," said Mr. Burman. "White civilisation should realise that such a change will be in its favour."

Mr. Burman pointed out that Native teachers are put to enormous expense during their years of study. In order to qualify as a teacher they had to raise the status of their own living. It should be made more worth their while to become teachers than to go and work on the roads. Teachers were put in charge of classes as big as 60, 70 to 80 children, and were expected to keep them away from crime by teaching them discipline, morals and cleanliness. The task of the Native teacher was to create civilised labour for the Europeans. Members would agree with him that an educated man was far better than an uneducated one to perform the average duties. The Native teacher had to maintain a certain standard of living in order to set the example to his people as was expected from him. His proposal would entail extra expenditure of only about £80,000 a year which would mean an increase of less than £1.10.0. a month for each of the 4,500 Native teachers. This amount was very small if compared with the salaries paid to European and Coloured teachers. The proposed increase would give Native teachers at least the same chance as an unskilled Native labourer.

Mr. Burman added that members should treat this as a matter which was in their own interests. Without the Native teachers the Native community would be a much more lawless one. It was their duty to see that the Native teachers had something to strive for. The Education Department, he felt, was best suited to decide how the increase was to be distributed. JUL 19 1941

Of Paramount Importance

Captain J. G. F. Moult (Native Representative, Cape Western), in seconding the resolution, said that this was a subject of paramount importance not only to the Native teachers themselves but to the whole of the community. The Province should be able to obtain the money for the proposed increase from the Department of Native Affairs.

The Administrator, Captain F. A. Joubert, in replying to the debate, said that in 1930 and in 1940 again Native teachers had received slight increases of salaries as a result of money made available by the Department of Native Affairs. This year he had approached the department for an extra £10,000 to enable Native teachers to meet the increased cost of living. He wondered whether they should not rather consider the appointment of more Native teachers to relieve the present understaffing in Native schools, and the question of pensions for Native teachers. He was, however, quite prepared to make representations to the Department of Native Affairs and hoped that something would be done to alleviate the plight of Native teachers. He agreed that in order to become a teacher a Colored Workers Suffer Discrimination in Defense Industries Despite Crisis.

LONDON, Sept. 18—(Special ANP Correspondence)—The question of racial discrimination against Africans and people of African descent but who may be said to be British subjects is so keen that it recently was the subject of discussion in the House of Commons when Vernon Bartlett, diplomatic correspondent of the London "News-Chronicle," speaking on behalf of black workers from the colonies, asked the Minister of Labor whether he was aware of color discrimination at the labor exchanges.

Mr. Bartlett asked whether Minister Ernest Bevin, hailed as the great labor leader of England, who is the trade union boss in this country and minister of labor, was aware of the difficulties which colored workers experienced when they attempted to be of service to the nation during this time of crisis.

BEVIN DUCKS ISSUE

Minister Bevin, whose position is for all the world like that of President Green of the American Federation of Labor, plus that of Sidney Hillman of the OPM of the United States, employed the same tactics which they do, ducking the issue and evading the question.

"If my honorable friend has any particular case in mind, perhaps he will let me know, so that I can consider whether there is any action I can usefully take," Mr. Bevin replied to Mr. Bartlett.

Bartlett, knowing as did all the house who heard the question, that Bevin was trying to evade a question which everyone connected with industry knows exists asked again, "Is it not a fact that in quite a number of these firms, there is this discrimination and should not the government do everything it can to discourage it; first, to increase the labor potentiality of the country and second, to remove any discrimination which should not exist in a great democracy?"

Bevin, known as one of the great labor leaders of the world, wiggled but did not reply. It is a well-known fact that Negroes have been refused work on the ground of color and that most of the cases have been reported to the ministry of labor, but nothing has been done about it.

A NATIVE RULER SAVES FREEDOM 'N FRENCH CONGO

Adolph Eboue Defies Nazis and Vichy; Aids British Success in Libya.

BY LELAND STOWE.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE
Of The Chicago Daily News Foreign Service.
Copyright, 1941, The Chicago Daily News, Inc.

Douala, French Cameroons—(By Plane and Ship from Africa)—Here, in this Cameroons colony and in adjacent French Equatorial Africa, lies the front the world has forgotten. Of all the colossal French colonial empire, these two French possessions constitute the only first-rank, extensive geographical units that have never renounced the French Republic and have stood loyalty by the Free France of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

Where the governors and military leaders of Syria, Algeria, West Africa and Indo-China watered down their patriotism to the fizz of Vichy abnegation and Vichy bootlicking, these vast Central African colonies stood by the republican system of liberty, fraternity and equality which brought them—late but steadily progressing—into the 20th century.

By doing so they contributed notably to recent British victories in Libya. What is much more startling is the fact that they may well have saved a large part of Africa for Britain and her Allies—and a good many experts still insist that the second World War will be won in Africa.

Feats of One Man.

More than by any other individual or group of individuals, one man saved the vast resources and spaces of the French Congo for the defenders of self-government, free men and free speech. Through an almost incredible bit of poetic justice the man who did this was a black man, and a native of the French West Indian island of Martinique.

In its tolerance and lack of racial bigotry the French Republic had educated him and reared him in both social and political equality. It had made him a trusted leader of its colonial civil service in West Africa, a chief administrator in Guadaloupe and finally the civil governor of the extremely strategical province of Chad in northernmost Equatorial Africa.

Because of this upbringing under applied democracy and because of his devotion to the freedom that France had given him as a black man, Adolphe Felix Sylvestre Eboue became the first man anywhere in the farflung French colonial empire to strike a decisive, incalculable blow against the advocates and practitioners of subservience to Hitler and Nazi Germany.

Wins Respect in Rule.

Today 6-foot, dark-skinned, ex-Martiniquan Adolphe Eboue is governor-general, not merely of Chad province, but of all French Equatorial Africa with its 912,049 square miles of territory—a kingdom which is probably dozens of times larger than any black man has ever ruled before. It is his job to govern 3,500,000 natives and many thousands of whites as well, but he enjoys the unqualified respect of Frenchmen and natives alike. After all, he is a Frenchman. Curiously enough, a Frenchman from the Americas.

In the first days of last September Monsieur le Gouverneur Eboue was in charge of sprawling Chad Province, whose southern savannahs and northern sands from the fateful link—or barrier—between French West Africa (about to repulse the overtures of Gen. De Gaulle) and the overwhelmingly important Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, with its rich cotton-growing valley of the White and Blue Niles.

If the pro-Vichy, pro-Nazi French authorities in Dakar could browbeat Governor Eboue into falling in line and abandoning Chad to the puppet government of Petain and Laval, German and Italian troops might one day invade the Sudan from Chad Province and so conquer Egypt from the rear.

Capital Is Key Center.

Eboue's capital was Fort Lamy, a highly strategic military center: Undoubtedly the most important in north-central Africa. Air lines both from Timbuctoo to the west and from British Nigeria to the southwest converged at Fort Lamy, then continued on the direct route to Britain's Sudan fortress of Khartoum. Fort Lamy was also a vital center for French African troops. With these facts clearly in mind, Dakar informed Governor Eboue that emissaries from Vichy were en route to Fort Lamy and ordered him to declare adherence to the Vichy capitulation at once.

Close friends here describe Eboue as quiet and big, for years a star player of rugby football, a man of exceptional forcefulness and will power.

The bravest black man, and certainly one of the bravest men, black or white, in the vast French colonial empire responded entirely in character. Immediately he sent back word to Dakar that no emissaries of the traitorous Vichy regime would be received by him, that none of them would be allowed inside Chad Province, and that any or all who set foot within his province would be arrested on the spot for treachery.

Stand United in 'Revolt.'

Simultaneously, without consulting any neighboring provinces of the French Congo and without going into a huddle with politicians anywhere, Gov. Eboue announced officially that Chad Province had joined the "Free France" movement of Gen. De Gaulle. All his troops, white officers and native men, stood by him. It was the first "revolt" for freedom anywhere in the French colonies. Incidentally, none of the Vichy emissaries were so lion-hearted as to attempt to enter Chad. There, for the first time, Gen. De Gaulle had French soil upon which he could fight.

The leadership of Martinique's native son touched off the spark that prompted all of French Equatorial Africa to declare its fidelity to the French Republic. It paved the way, especially in the capital of Brazzaville, for the arrival of another loyal Frenchman shortly afterward. He was Gen. De Larminat, formerly French chief of staff in Syria. He reached the French Congo in disguise, but found that most Frenchmen there were completely in accord with Eboue's action in Chad. Grave doubts existed, however, about resident Gov. Gen. Husson.

At 2 o'clock in the morning a young, slender, monocled French officer named Capt. Bonnet went to the governor-general's mansion. He told Husson that the French Congo had risen for "Free France" and Gen. De Gaulle. The governor-general protested, declared that the Congo empire would support Vichy and shouted for the arrest of Bonnet. Without so much as jarring the monocle from his eye, the mild-looking little captain knocked the politically-minded M. Husson down. Within 10 minutes he was under lock and key.

Tribute to Great Man.

This is how and why Gen. Edgar Rene Marie de Larminat became high commissioner of French Equitorial Africa and M. Eboue, the man who saved the French Congo, became its governor-general. This, too, explains the lines of erect, proud French and native troops that stood at attention when our airplane landed at Douala. They were paying tribute to the former priest, Commandant Thierry d'Argenlieu — the officer who went ashore under a white flag at Dakar to negotiate for Gen. De Gaulle. Although he presented himself unarmed, Commandant D'Argenlieu was fired upon without warning and his leg is still bandaged from the wound he received at that time.

The French and native troops at Douala airport were paying tribute to a man of great spiritual depth and of exceptional patriotic devotion. But in their faces and in every gesture one could also see they are consecrated to a cause that is not lost and to a nation's freedom that may have been saved, oddly enough, in darkest Africa—by the example and courage of a black Frenchman.

LOVEDALE LED THE WAY IN NATIVE EDUCATION

—GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Their Excellencies, the Governor-General, the Right Hon. Sir Patrick Duncan, G.C.M.G., and Lady Duncan, visited Lovedale on Monday. They were received at the steps of the main educational building, where the large company of staff and students had assembled.

Dr. B. W. Wilkie, the principal, in welcoming them, expressed regret that affairs of State prevented Their Excellencies from being present at the Lovedale Centenary celebrations a month ago.

The Governor-General, in reply, said that he regarded Lovedale as a wonderful example of what can be achieved by the labours of a few devoted men, building better than they knew a sure foundation of faith and courage.

Lovedale, he continued, had grown from a small beginning to a great institution, a nursery of fruitful ideas and a field in which they can be tried out and take practical shape. It had led the way in education for the Native peoples, both industrial and literary.

The two matters must be carefully co-ordinated if we were to avoid the danger of our education leading not to opportunity, but to disappointment and disillusionment.

There had certainly been within his recollection, said His Excellency, a marked widening of the scope for the employment of Native students. Health officers, agricultural demonstrators and court interpreters were examples, and Colonel Deneys Reitz, the Minister of Native Affairs, had foreshadowed a larger field of employment in the offices of native commissioners and elsewhere.

He hoped that the position of the Native teachers might be made more attractive than it was at present for educated men and women.

At Alice, their Excellencies met Native leaders, who presented an address of loyalty, praying for "the victory of the democratic countries now fighting for the freedom of mankind against the destructive forces of evil."

Replying, His Excellency said South Africa had been in a state of savagery and barbarism, and bloodshed had been rampant. Now spears had been turned into ploughshares, and it was nothing less than remarkable that such strides in progress and enlightenment had been made in such a short period of time.

The problem that overshadowed all others in South Africa was the peaceful and equitable settlement of relations between the Native and European peoples on lines of justice and fair play.

He had heard it said by people, who professed to speak on authority, that the problem was insoluble, but he did not believe it. Looking back over the years he had spent in South Africa, he was surprised at the change that had come about in the approach to the problem, and at the growing desire manifest everywhere to co-operate in bringing about fair and equitable relations between black and white, which he regarded as one of the best omens for the future.

The Negro in America

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE FROM "THE SUN" CONTAINS FACTS THAT WILL INTEREST OUR READERS :

America has a great colour problem in the twelve million Negroes who constitute such a large and generally inarticulate section of its population. Recently the English magazine, "Picture Post," devoted some space in a special "America" issue to this problem. In the belief that this information will be of interest to many of our readers we give here a resume of their article.

As Picture Post says: The Negroes have freedom but scant equality. They are the least fortunate section of the American democracy. Now, under Roosevelt, their prospects have begun to brighten." But to judge from the facts that the paper gives, it will be a long, long time before the majority of the Negro population achieves a satisfactory level of existence.

In a section which extends from the State of Virginia to the State of Texas more than fifty per cent of the population is Coloured. In America, it should be remembered, the term "Coloured" is used in speaking of the Negro generally. In this belt, then, are eight million Negroes, and it is here that their plight is most serious. For, as Picture Post says: "The economic and social discrimination of this region represents the most complete denial of democray in the Western hemisphere." Here the system known as "share-cropping" is still working. About two million white and black families are tenants on land which they work, and then pay for the privilege with the bulk of their crop. As a result, the living conditions of thousands of Negroes in the South has sunk to almost sub-human levels.

Professors Illiterate?

Says Picture Post: "The Negro has been to the reactionary southern politician what the Jew has been to Hitler." The unfortunate Negro has been used as a means to ride to political power on the issue of 'White supremacy.' Although the Constitution allows the Negro an equal voice in political matters, yet in the South he has never been allowed to vote. Not so very many years ago it was the Klu Klux Klan and similar organisations which were used to intimidate those Negroes who showed any inclination to make use of the vote which the law of the country allowed them. Nowadays there are more subtle restrictions which are none the less effective. In eight states the Negro is expected to pay a poll tax of about seven shillings before he is able to vote. Well, we ourselves here know how hard seven shillings are to come by. It is not to be wondered at that the seven shillings are very rarely forthcoming. Then in other cases, the Negro has to pass a "literacy" test, and here again, says Picture Post, Negro college professors have been known to fail when their white examiners wished them to!

"New Deal" Suppresses Race Hatred

Among the poor white farmers of the Southern States is found a parallel with this country. Reduced in their standards of living to a level which is akin to that of the Negro, these whites are persuaded by unscrupulous politicians to vent their hatred on the Coloured man. Listen to what Picture Post has to say about this:....."No poor white is so miserable that he cannot console himself with the thought that the colour of his skin makes him superior to the black man. His emotions. twisted from childhood by race hatred, make the average Southern White easily movable to defend 'White Supremacy' especially when the politicians present the 'menace of Africanisation' too vividly during election campaigns."

President Roosevelt's "New Deal" has opened the way for advancement to the Negro in America. For the first time they are admitted to the benefits of education, health and social services. The Government also assists in raising their standards of living, and various Negro organisations are now raising their voices to demand the rights which the constitution of the country allows, but which prejudice has withheld.

Medical And Dental Training For Africans

FIVE SCHOLARSHIPS AVAILABLE

The University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, has made arrangements to enable a limited number of Non-Europeans to obtain full training in Medicine and Dentistry at the University in Johannesburg, commencing on 3rd February 1941.

FEB 1 1941

As a result of this, the Department of Native Affairs has decided to provide, from the South African Native Trust Fund, five scholarships to be awarded to Africans on a competitive basis on the completion of the first year course in Medicine and Dentistry. That is to say, the scholarships will operate as from the commencement of the second year's courses in Medicine and Dentistry. Africans who have already fulfilled the requirements for the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry will be eligible at once. The scholarships will cover all University fees, equipment and other necessaries and reasonable living expenses during term-time. The scholarships will be open to men and women. The selection will be made from students who have completed the requirements of the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry.

All enquiries should be addressed to the Registrar, University of the Witwatersrand, Milner Park, Johannesburg.

Bantu Markets

A very valuable typewritten pamphlet has just been received by us. It carries with it a very good idea worthy of being eagerly taken up by the Africans wherever circumstances will allow. The idea has been suggested and brought into action by one of our greatest friends and sympathisers, Dr. Lewis E Hertslet. This idea is the introduction of weekly markets in areas occupied by Africans in their locations and reserves. The present condition of our people justifies such a move. Our people are just in a state when their economic position demands that they open their eyes more than they have been doing heretofore and to make efforts for the improving of their status in monetary affairs.

We can see no way to attain this end other than our people making themselves grow as a group as the result of their own efforts. Hitherto the majority of our people have relied only on getting money by going out of their areas to seek work in the towns and labour areas. The idea of self-support has been conspicuous by its absence. That has been one of the reasons why theirs has been the lowest paid labour in the country. This stagnation has been the cause of their proverbial poverty so that their men are called "boys" in this country. This idea will instil into their minds a money sense which must fill them with ideas of improving their lot.

The author of this pamphlet is one of our staunch friends whose interest in us is not that of merely seeing that he gets as much as he can from us. We are glad to note that this group of true sympathisers and friends is steadily increasing. It encourages us the more to see the name of Mr. D.L. Smit, the Secretary for Native Affairs which proves once more that he is solicitous for our real good and does his best to help us ascend the ladder of progress by self help.

We also note with pleasure that Dr. Brookes has also a message in the pamphlets for his constituents.

We must express our thanks to the Natal University College, Durban, and its Department of Economics for having financed the publication and who are ready to supply gratis the pamphlet to all who desire to secure a copy.

It now remains with us to faithfully play our part and justify this worthy attempt for our improvement, by seeing to it that these markets be established wherever circumstances warrant and secondly to see to it that they are not suffered to lack commodities for sale as well as buyers. We are now no longer in a stage in our development when we should be satisfied with having everything started, maintained and financed by others while we only follow. A virile people like us should now exhibit its own ability to start and support our own beneficial projects and once started, to see to it that they are not left to stagnate.

The project deserves the acceptance and support of all classes of our people as even the unlettered have now a working knowledge of money matters. This will lead to the enhancement of the worthy idea of also bringing into existence such home industries as a paying concern for the majority of our

Medical Scholarships For Africans

FEB 1 1941

The news that five scholarships in medicine are to be provided for Africans will be received with grateful hearts by all Africans who are eager to see the day when there will be many qualified Africans able to serve their people. We understand that the scholarships are to be provided by the South African Native Trust Fund — a result of the decision of the Department of Native Affairs. There was a time when the majority of our people did not believe in European medicines and looked upon these as inferior to their own preparations. This happily has changed. Our people have begun to have more faith in the white man's medicine. The proof of this is the number of patients now filling and overflowing the existing hospitals.

The need for our own doctors grows everyday and the opening now being made by the Native Affairs Department is a praiseworthy step. The source of our information does not make it explicit whether this will be an annual grant or whether students will be granted these scholarships for a number of years necessary for their qualifying as fully-fledged doctors before the next five students are offered the scholarships.

Present conditions among our people justify the gesture made by the Department of Native Affairs. Sickness of a trivial or avoidable nature is playing havoc with Africans and some unscrupulous practitioners help to fan the fire of credulity and wastage of money by African patients who consult them. Some give them false information—much of it being in order to exploit their own people for the sake of gain. The above forward step comes at a time when this condition is acute. Some medicines given by people who have no knowledge or incidence of disease and progress as well as the proper methods of curing these result in dealing conditions on patients which did not exist before the commencement of these doubtful remedies. FEB 1 1941

With the increase of medical practitioners who have been properly educated, there is hope that the deterioration in health of so many of our people will be arrested and in time be eliminated so that those who are becoming victims of malnutrition will be a fewer among our people. FEB 1 1941

It is pleasant to learn that these students will be given full training in medicine and dentistry at the University ot the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg.

What is more gratifying is that both sexes will be eligible for this course and will be competed for after the students' first year course of study. The decision so far of encouraging women to study medicine has been negligible but it is hoped that they will, as usual, prove equal to their menfolk in their devotion to study and successfully passing the prescribed examinations.

South African Teachers' Federation

Presidential Address

FEB 8 1941

After paying tribute to the retired president, Professor D. D. T. Jabavu, for his able leadership since the inauguration of the Federation, and for the principle of unity for which he has consistently striven in this and other ways, Professor Matthews M.A. LL.B. made a review of significant Educational activities in the last two years. FEB 8 1941

CONTROL OF NATIVE EDUCATION.

When we last met this question was the foremost in our Education. Professor Matthews complimented the Federation for their sane lead in this question. It was the resolution of the Federation that was finally adopted at the big Education conference held at Johannesburg that year. FEB 8 1941

Due to the war and change of government, both this question of control as well as that of finance were shelved. In the meantime the Minister of Finance has increased the funds for Native Education by a sum of £90,000 unconditional, and from General Revenue. This is a welcome relief but we must not fool ourselves into believing that the struggle is over. "We can in no way relax our efforts in insisting upon the claims of Native Education not only for funds but also for a type of Administrative Control which will not hinder its development nor drive it into a blind alley. In our approach, however, we must endeavour to reconcile our claims with those of the rest of the population."

DAY SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

"We welcome the establishment of several of these, mostly in urban areas. They enable poor students to get Secondary education which they could not pay for at our colleges. Several problems arise in this connection: (a) Suitable Buildings. The South African Native Trust Fund has helped in the erection of two such at the Cape. In this connection, local authorities ought to take great concern—in the Education of the Africans on whose labour so much of the prosperity of their areas depends. Suitable hostels should be built for children from neighbouring areas."

With the regard to staffing and Curricula, Professor Matthews said all sections of the Bantu people, even students, resent the attitude of some authorities—sometimes in supposed friendly quarters—of denying the Africans responsible positions in their own schools. "It is high time a more pro-Native policy was followed in Native Schools; and, indeed in all Native services. Also "we demand for our children an education which will take due account of the fact that they are living in the modern world.....any course which purports to prepare students for a purely African environment will not be tolerated by the African."

FREE PRIMARY EDUCATION.

We appreciate the announcement that the Primary Education is, going to be free. This is a development in the right line. We welcome the establishement of milk to farms and the supply of milk to Bantu Children as is taking place in certain areas.

A new feature in our Education is the School-farms at Inyanga and Lady Frere. We are interested in these experiments.

In connection with the Interpreters' Course at Fort Hare, we welcome the Statement by General Smuts that the policy of Employing European instead of African Interpreters especially in the departments of Jusitce shall be discouraged. FEB 8 1941

With this and the Higher Agricultural Course and Domestic Science Course, we sorely require, we hope the country will make openings for Africans and give attractive remuneration.

In connection with the Medical Training opening at the Witwatersrand University we would urge the African Societies to folow the lead of the Trust and the Bunga in creating Scholarships.

The Jan Hofmeyr School of Social Work is another milestone in the History of African Education and African Development.

With all these encouraging developments, the major task of Education, which is not to minister to a select few, but to build up a sound education for the masses of our people, still remains. Thus we have hardly begun to tackle the problem of Illiteracy, Ignorance and Superstition; these prevail among young and old in the bulk of our population.

Watch the Educational Organs for the verbatim report, you will find it useful. FEB 8 1941

African Police Inspectors

THE "West African Pilot," in commenting on the recent appointment of two European Assistant Superintendents of Police, has made certain critical observations to which we wish to lend support in this Editorial. These are briefly that by the appointment in question, the two Officers have been made to supersede "their colleagues with whom they are officially of the same rank and some of whom are their seniors in years of service...." Secondly, that "a great many trouble with the African Rank and File could be averted if there were Africans in position to undertake executive responsibity...." Thirdly, that the vexing catch-phrase of "deserving men of good intellect" take that in the face of the achievements of men like Inspectors J. T. Ogbolu, D. A. Awode, Artbur E. Prest and A. S. O. Agbabiaka...."

Finally, the Editorial in question submitted for the kind consideration of His Excellency the Governor, the necessity for having at least two African Assistant Superintendents of Police in the Nigeria Police Force. We wish to say that these candid and well-founded observations are in complete "pari passu" with our wishes. Whatever may be the facts against African Inspectors there certainly can be no doubt that they have also proved themselves worthy of the post which are assigned to them and if there is anything which we particularly resent it is the quibbing statement which is generally advanced by the Heads of Government Departments on the capability of Africans to hold key positions.

If, indeed, African members of the Police force are not efficient to take up executive positions, in spite of the fact that the Nigeria Police Force has been in existence for many years, then it is simply the fault of those in charge of this department. But the facts are that the position is on the contrary. Take the case of Mr A. S. Agbabiaka, Chief Inspector of Police, who does, in fact, the work of a Police Superintendent by prosecuting during the High Court Sessions, a duty which has often merited him favourable commendations from Judges in the open Court. Can the disdainful appellation of non-qualified men be applied to his case? If not why not give him a higher post? Why not give his equally qualified colleagues a chance too? We want to know!

Yaba Trained Practitioners (2)

HAVING adduced reasons to justify our demand that the salary of Yaba trained Practitioners should be re-considered in order to draw the best brains into the profession and enable such locally qualified Practitioners to maintain a magnitude of respect among living in some degree of comfort, we now intend to discuss the restrictions which have been placed upon them as distinct from their colleagues who had qualified overseas. In the "Objects and Reasons" of the Medical Practitioners and Dentists' Ordinance, 1934, it is stated that "a Medical Assistant, on obtaining a diploma, will therefore cease to be a Medical Assistant and will become a Licentiate of the School of Medicine of Nigeria."

A succeeding paragraph adds: "He will then be registrable in Nigeria and will be entitled to practise upon the the same conditions as Practitioners qualified in the United Kingdom." Clearly, this announcement implies that no discrimination would be allowed between the oversea trained Practitioner and the locally trained Medico. But how does this work in practice? In the first place, whilst the overseas trained Medical Officer receives a starting salary of £300 a year the Yaba trained Medico receives something comparatively lower. But as if this was not enough, he is also precluded from doing private practice until he attains to the rank of Senior Assistant Medical Officer, a post which would take him some twenty-one years to attain.

Even then, this right may be allowed only "in individual cases for special reasons." Now then, what do these all mean? Isn't it obvious that by this attitude Government is giving the impression that foreign trained Medical Officers are best qualified than those trained at Yaba? How then is this consistent with Government's claim that Yaba Graduates (and of course this is true), are being given the same training as their overseas colleagues? We seriously submit that if overseas Medical Officers can be allowed to practise privately, then there is no earthly reason why Assistant Medical Officers should be prevented from so doing. Yaba Medics have proved themselves useful to the country and must, therefore, be encouraged Check this as No. 2.

Temporary Closing Down Of Achimota College

Governor's Address To Pupils

Sir Arnold Hodson recently visited Achimota College and addressed the pupils. His Excellency, in plain and easily understood phrases, gave an account of the war and what would happen to the world if Hitler and Mussolini were successful. He pointed out that since the collapse of France the position in West Africa, and the Gold Coast in particular, with regard to the war had changed. For this reason it was necessary for the Government to take further precautions.

His Excellency stressed that it was for this reason that the holidays were being started earlier than usual. He said that rumours were very easily started, and some people might not understand the true position. It was therefore the duty of every boy and girl to explain carefully to his or her parents and friends the facts mentioned above and to emphasise the following:—

(a) That owing to the earthquake and other causes, there was not sufficient accommodation for Government purposes.

(b) That it was therefore necessary, for the time being, to utilise Achimota.

(c) That there was no cause whatsoever for any alarm or despondency.

(d) That the Government had not the slightest intention of closing down Achimota, and that the pupils would reassemble about January 1, in temporary but suitable quarters, to continue their studies and usual activities.

His Excellency felt sure the pupils and their parents would accept the inconvenience caused by this move willingly, cheerfully and in the right spirit, and bear in mind the far greater sacrifices that were being made by many people in other parts of the Empire. "AFRICAN WORLD."

IN three previous instalments, we had striven to present the case of the Yaba Graduate, in so far as his salary, promotions, private practice, leave, travelling and housing conditions are concerned, and we believe that an impartial analysis of the points adduced by us would convince the most hyper-sensitive individual of the necessity of our demands and the expediency of taking steps to supply them Thus far, we had refrained from making impossible or impractic able demands and unless where the instrument of justic and fairplay is denied the necessary application, it is to b presumed that the Yaba trained Practitioner, following ou observations, would now be able to enjoy life more abundantly

There is yet one paramount fact, however, which mus be borne in mind, and that is, that the Yaba scheme was the outcome of the Third Conference of the Senior Member of the West African Medical Services held at Accra in December 1925. At that meeting it was decided that "in order to make the service attractive and to ensure the uninterrupted flow of suitable candidates for Medical Assistants in sufficient numbers, adequate inducements must be held out from the beginning." Now, unless we are to be given the impression that these proposals were meant to be a question on paper specifically and that Government is simply not disposed, in spite of facts, to review the subject pathetically, there is no reason why the original proposals should not be translated into practice.

Example, it is said, is better than precepts and if the existence of the Yaba Higher College is to be justified; if the best brains in the country must be recruited into the Medical profession; if the Yaba graduate is to be given the consideration which is due to the followers of the honourable profession of the immortal Hippocrates, and if the impression is to be finally removed that a line of demarcation exists between the locally trained Practitioner and that which qualified overseas, then something should be done to improve the plight of the Yaba Medico. With this view, we are earnestly appealing to His Excellency the Governor, Sir Bernard Bourdillon, to leave a name for posterity by giving the case of the Yaba Graduate the consideration which it deserves.

African Juvenile Delinquency

Among the problems threatening Bantu social life, that of African juvenile delinquency is probably the most stupendous. Any opinions expressed by ardent students of this phase of Bantu national weakness, if pregnant with possible solutions, cannot but be regarded as a service to Africans. Thus do we regard the comprehensive dissertation by Dr. Wolheim, principal of the Welsh Native Secondary School, East London before a meeting of the E. L. Division of the South African Medical Association recently on the above subject.

He showed, inter alia, a graph of the total number of convictions of juveniles for all crimes during 1939 at East London. The rate of delinquency for Coloured and Native juveniles is three times that of European. The police crime list, however, does not show the various crimes nor the distribution of ages, so that these facts had to be extracted from a different source and were shown in a different graph. This information was obtained from the cause list of the probation officer for six months July-December, 1939, and shows a total of 393 cases of juvenile delinquency among Natives. The crimes have been grouped under three casual factors, namely (a) peverty, ignorance and idleness, (b) vice and (c) violence. The first group includes all kinds of theft and robbery, traffic offences, loitering, contravention of Master and Servant Act and other petty crimes; under vice are included all liquor and dagga offences, drunk, disorderly and riotous behaciour and sex aberrations; under violence are included culpable homicide, murder, assault and obstructing police.

Over 60 per cent. of the crimes were the result of poverty, while vice and violence acounted for a relatively small number of cases. There is a steady increase in crime as the age increases, which seems to point to the fact that juvenile delinquency could be greatly lessened if proper care were taken of the younger offenders. The apparent drop after the age of 20 is probably fallacious, as a large number of these youths would be classified as juveniles but would be treated in the normal manner as adults.

There is widespread poverty among urban Natives, said Dr. Wollheim, and this poverty is at the root of practically all juvenile delinquency.

In the location rents for rooms ran from 10/- to £1 a month according to size, so that a complete family in most cases was obliged to occupy only one room and to board relatives and friends to eke out the rent. This was a direct cause of the terrible overcrowding in the location and a subsidiary factor in the causation of Native delinquency.

Dr. Wollheim then pointed out other subsidiary causes of juvenile delinquency which were resultant upon poverty. He mentioned broken homes caused by incompation because there was no place of detention or hostel at East London. The magistrate in desperation then prescribed 12 cuts and turned the youth loose again to commit further crimes in his search for food or an outlet for his adventurous spirit. The local probation officer states that a "good proportion of the delinquents appearing before the local courts either have appeared before or are likely to appear again." Most of these delinquents were juveniles who had never been to school and had no proper homes or parents to take control over them. If they had parents, then both were out working, so that the children were simply turned loose from morning to night.

The speaker mentioned four means of treating deliquency. He pleaded for an extension of the probation officer system with properly qualified and adequate staffs, and the establishment of children's courts in all the larger towns to deal more adequately with the problem.

He asked for more reformatories where the worst cases could be placed and where rehabilitative work lasting over a long period could be undertaken.

Most of all, he pleaded for the establishment of a hostel and place of safety and detention for Bantu juvenile deliquents at East London and at other places lacking such places, and the establishment of industrial schools for Natives similiar to those for Europeans.

The speaker went on to outline a scheme undertaken by the local Child Life Protection Society whereby such a place is to be established if funds were forthcoming. It was proposed to erect an institution on the lines of the Native kraal in the Transkei with mud bricks and thatched roofs on the rondavel system. In addition to cheapness, this system had the great advantage of being more in line with the standard of civilisation of the delinquent, so that he would be the more easily able to adapt himself to the new conditions of life along social instead of anti-social lines. At this place there would not be any confinement behind walls or wire, but good food and clothes and a decent hut to sleep in would be provided. The colony would be run along the lines of a farm, so that children committed there would learn the rudiments of sowing, cultivation and reaping; how to run a vegetable garden, a piggery, a small dairy; how to shear sheep and keep poultry. In this way delinquents would learn that social behaviour was more comfortable and pleasant than their old anti-social behaviour when they were continually on the run and half-starved.

As preventive measures Dr. Wollheim mentioned the economic rehabilitation of the Native as the most important and proper housing the rehabilitation of the home and family and the proper adjustment of education as other measures. He stated that the wages of the Native had to bear a relation to his cost of living, and that this could be attained in both of two ways, namely, the raising of his minimum wage to a reasonable level by wage board determination or industrial agreement and the lowering of his rent by housing schemes under the Government sub-economic loans.

Finally, Dr. Wollheim stated that education should be compulsory in urban areas. Although the Union percentage for children attending schools was only 40 per cent., the position was much better in East London than it was in most other larger towns. He estimated the figure as about 60 per cent. Compulsory education would thus not cost so very much in the towns. He maintained that if municipalities were at all worried about their Native populations and about delinquency rate, they would take steps to erect school buildings and rent them to the province. This system was well known and obtained all over the province among missionary bodies. The speaker pleaded for rational financing of Native education from general revenue based upon the number of children attending school, the better training of Native teachers and the raising of the paltry pittance for which Native teachers were expected to do their work.

Our Post-War Aims

HIS Excellency the Governor in his address, delivered to the Chiefs at their Annual Conference at Ijebu Ode, said among other things that he heard it suggested that this was a white man's war in which Africans were not concerned, and then proceeded to state that the condition of the African would be one of slavery if the Germans conquered.

Although His Excellency did not state who made the suggestion which he was quoting, we have to say that the reiteration of what would be the relation between the Germans and the Africans, and the argument that Nazi Colonial policy holds no future but servitude for the Africans, as a means of spurring the African to increase his war effort is an insult to him and his intelligence.

The African war effort is not brought about by threat nor by the repetition of what might happen to him in the hands of the Germans if he did not aid the British cause. He is no longer that child who does not know what is good for him and who has no judgment. He balances the future mentally and reasons his results with his experiences of past events, and makes his decisions.

The result of that calculation in this instance is in favour of his Imperial master and overlord — Great Britain. In the words of Mr Arthur Henderson, although we must first of all endeavour to win the war, a statement of what would be British intentions after victory would make a remarkable incentive. Of pre-war relations we know, but tell us of post-war relations. That would be a great source of inspiration.

Native Administration Appointments

THE Chiefs, in the recent Conference of Western Rulers, made a very significant and far-reaching decision in agreeing to throw open the doors of one Native Administration to the Natives of other Administrations. In other words, posts in one Native Administration office can be held by people from other parts of the country.

We congratulate the Chiefs on tearing off the screen of prejudice, jealousy and suspicion which in this instance had guided their policy in the past. It is gratifying to note that the Chiefs are now conscious that Nigeria is an indivisible whole, and have ceased to think each in terms of his Province alone. There appears to be no reason why Ijebu people should not find employment in the Egba Native Administration or in the Benin and Oyo Native Administrations, and vice versa.

There have been disturbances in some Native Administrations in the past, and one of the causes is that people who are non-Natives of one Native Administration are given posts which the Natives consider an encroachment on their right. Attempts are made to find faults with the work of the stranger, and frequent complaints and petitions are lodged for his removal.

When people from one section of the country work and play with those from another, then a sense of one-ness slowly develops among them, and each will realise that he exists for all and all exist for each. Then that will bring forth the much-needed and much sought for co-operation among all the people, and a realisation that segregation and discrimination cannot help them.

We hasten to support the suggestion, made by the Alake of Abeokuta, that persons of one Native Administration should be employed by another Native Administration even though the candidate is not a Native of the place. In other words, these Administrations should encourage inter-tribal co-operation and understanding.

In this matter, which in some cases touch traditional prejudices, we feverently ask all Native Authorities in Nigeria to support and adopt the Alake's suggestion. We are particularly glad that it has come from one of the great Native Authorities of the land at the head of a powerful Administration.

Our progress in this country has been greatly handicapped by the policy which makes it almost impossible for a Nigerian to seek employment except in his own Native Administration, with the result that we have been divided into small sections each feeling securely alienated from the other. There is no tribal sympathy; no national spirit.

Time was when the man in London was regarded as a stranger in another town in England and was subject to certain restrictions, but that has given way to a national spirit which is bearing Great Britain today. The great source of our salvation will come when we begin to think in terms of Nigeria and not in terms of tribes and districts.

RACE RELATIONS CONFERENCE

Addresses On Urban Native Affairs

From four different points of view the Urban Native question was laid bare in the course of the public session of the South African Institute of Race Relations, at East London.

Four speakers gave addresses, each contributing from his own special standpoint towards a comprehensive understanding of the problems o Urban Native Administration. The speakers were Mr. A. L. Barrett, former Chief Native Commissione. for the Cape, who tackled the background and the principles of urban Native legislation; Mr. Z. K. Mat hews, African member of the staff of Fort Hare University College who gave the African reaction to legislation; Senator Rheinallt Jones, who discussed administrative difficulties; and Mr. Godlo, member of the Natives Representative Council, who gave the African view of the legislation.

THE BACKGROUND

Mr. Barrett gave foundation to all the speakers by sketching in the background of urban Native legislation. Before Union the urban Native was regarded as a sort of adjunct who would be absorbed into the urban area. Native affairs in those days implied little more than tribal differences, boundary disputes and the collection of hut tax. Eventually important questions arose, including such as security of tenure for Native inhabitants of urban areas. This question was not finally settled yet because it was still a practica. problem.

The Native Affairs Department intervened in urban affairs for the first time at Worsten, Port Elizabeth, and Mr. Barrett was one of the original commissioners of inquiry. Their first efforts at improving conditions were not a great success, but conditions were vastly different then, especially financially.

After Union it became clear that some form of authority had to be vested in the Native Affairs Department. This went through stages until the Urban Areas Amendment Act came into being as the present-day stage of legislation.

PHILOSOPHICAL

Mr. Barrett spoke of the need for a philosophical frame of mind in considering the inevitable clash between the local authority and the central authority. There was need for uniformity and a high general standard, but there was also the democratic principle at stake of each local authority being "maser in his own house."

Mr. Barrett then summarised briefly the provisions of current Urban Native legislation. These are that local authorities are obliged to house their Native populations, and in return can check the entry into the area of additional Natives from outside, as well as exercising control over the labour force within the area. Other provisions dealt with the Native revenue account, with a the principle of consultation with Natives in all decisions affecting Natives and beer.

In general, he said, the position now was that the State and local authorities had responsibility for the physical well-being of the Natives, but urban areas were regarded as being predominantly White, and Natives were permitted to remain here under restrictions.

"WONDERS"

Mr. Z. K. Matthews, presenting the African viewpoint, explained one aspect thus: Among Africans there is a common belief that Europeans expect the Africans always to thank them for the wonders the Europeans have done for the Africans. Nonetheless, he said, Africans were appreciative of the fact that at last Native administration was no longer regarded as "nobody's business". The Native was at last being regarded as an asset, recognition was at last given to the fact that Native and European welfare go together, and to the fact that some Natives are now permanently urbanised.

Mr. Matthews spoke on Native suspicion of beer halls and of their feeling that they had no representatives on the councils. In conclusion, he appealed for recognition of the fact that urban areas administration was not a static thing for Native life was changing rapidly, and he hoped municipalities would not succumb to the craze for uniformity.

ONLY A GENERATION

Senator Rheinallt Jones dealt mainly with administration difficulties—one of which arose from the fact that it was just a generation since the consciousness of Native welfare had developed. There were difficulties of checking the influx of Natives to towns, of carrying out the segregation principle in practice of setting up housing schemes for large Native populations, of deciding where and how to finance the Native account, of the proper position of advisory boards, and in registering Natives for labour requirments. In this latter direction Senator Jones suggested that labour exchange would be better.

REPRESSIVE

Mr. R. H. Godlo, voicing African opinion on administration matters said that on the whole municipalities did not seem to take advantage of all provisions open to them for betterment of Natives, but seemed rather to concentrate on repressive provisions of the law. To segregation, in its meaning of separation, or setting apart, the African had no real objection. But unfortunately in South African legislation segregation meant merely that Africans should occupy an inferior position.

Mr. Godlo, in conclusion, said that advisory boards were not sufficiently consulted.

EDUCATION

The main topic discussed was Native education. The chairman said that most domestic servants worked a 12-hour day and had very little leisure time. Yet it was wonderful what sacrifices they were ready to make in order to obtain some education.

Mr. Maurice Webb (Durban) said that adult education was a necessary extension of schools. In Durban 900 Natives attended night classes. They were mostly illiterate servants who wanted to learn to read the the letters they occasionally received from their kraal homes. There was a great need for adult education in South Africa, and he suggested that a commission of inquiry was needed to survey the whole field.

The Rev. C. Birt (Cape Town) described an experiment at the Diocesan College, where a number of the boys, guided and directed by members of the staff, had started teaching the house-boys employed at the college. The Natives wanted to be able to read and write, not to pass particular examinations. Professor Hoernle referred to a night school in Johannesburg run by university students. More than 100 Natives crowded round tables and learned subjects like geography and Native administration as well as English.

Senator J. D. Rheinallt Jones said that intelligent ideas and interests had to be cultivated, in addition to literacy among adults of all races.

The Rev. P. Ibbotson (Bulawayo) reported that the night school in Bulawayo had an attendance of 400.

Mr. Julius Lewin (Johannesburg) thought that it would be premature to ask for commission of inquiry now. What night schools needed at once was equipment—tables and chairs, blackboards and suitable textbooks in English and in the vernacular languages.

It was finally resolved to ask Mr. Webb to conduct an investigation into the present position and to report to the next council meeting.

On the question of Native schools, Senator Rheinallt Jones said that the Natives' representatives in Parliament were urging the Minister to put Native education on the same basis as all other education, namely, to have it financed out of general revenue, not from Native taxation.

Professor D. D. T. Jabavu (Fort Hare) regarded it as important to obtain recognition for the principle that the State should support Native education out of its general funds.

The council instructed its executive committee to press for Native education to obtain a subsidy from general revenue.

Mr. W. Jamieson, of the Central Housing Board, explained official policy in regard to housing. He hoped that shortly local authorities would be allowed to merge old and new loans, thus reducing the rents payable by Natives. Though the Board was not opposed to the use of Native labour in building locations, it would not approve schemes unless fully satisfied that the results would come up to the standard attained by white labour.

Senator Rheinalt Jones asked that municipalities should be encouraged to make experiments in using Native labour under adequate supervision, and that the work should be done departmentally.

Expenses in transport in urban areas was a real problem of Native costs of living, and other related questions were education and the burdens of the aged and the unfit. It was clear that it was necessary to consider the wage system with the provision of social services.

"The colour bar," he said, "is the most expensive thing in South Africa. If we want to keep it we must pay the inevitable price of providing social services."

AFRICANS LEARN TO TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES

Africans working on the Mines learn to use their commonsense and so they keep out of harm's way.

From the time they arrive as "new Boys" they are encouraged to follow carefully the instructions they receive about doing their work in the right way. And they wisely obey.

It is by doing their work in the right way that they keep happy—and safe.

The instructions that "new boys" receive are the result of experience.

One thing that they are told, for instance, is that they must, before going to work underground have a box of matches on them; and another thing is the wisdom of wearing hand guards and hard hats during underground work. These protect the Africans from getting hurt,

Another thing they are told is—never enter the working place before the White boss says it is all right. He always examines it and makes it safe before he allows the Africans to enter it.

You have read about the pictures put up at the Mines that tell the Africans what to do and what not to do. The Africans are advised to look at these pictures and to learn from them.

All the instructions given to the Africans about taking care of themselves are easy to understand, and by obeying them the Africans, as indicated already, keep well and happy; and if they save up, they have money in hand when they finish their contract and go back to their homes.

What Happens At Cape Town To Africans Looking For Work

A committee meeting under the aegis of the Convention Committee (Western Province) was held recently at 128 Newmarket St., Cape Town. The committee met to discuss, amongst other things, the closing of Cape Town to Africans who come from other centres to look for work, and the manner in which they are repatriated. After discussion the committee came to the conclusion that the manner in which the Africans affected by the measure are being repatriated is unsatisfactory and unsympathetic, in so far as it does not provide for transportation. The committe also noted the fact that most of the Africans come to this centre in ignorance of the closing of Cape Town against them.

A motion by Mr. A. Mbiza that the committee should call a public meeting in order to inform the people of the position was unanimously adopted.

A large number of people including school children in their various uniforms witnessed the finals of the Ninth Annual meeting of the Grier Cup Competition which was held yesterday at St. Gregory's College, Ikoyi.

The standard of the various events was good and one Nigerian record was broken in Putting the Weight event in which E. Okogwu (St. Gregory's College) threw the iron ball 42 feet 5 1/2 inches thus beating the old record of Ogbe of Government College, Ibadan, in 1940 (41 feet 10 inches).

By this, Okogwu has created a new record for the Grier Cup Competition and a Nigerian Schools' record.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Bourdillon were earlier arrivals on the grounds and were received by the Director of Education, the Hon. E. G. Morris, O.B.E.

Perhaps the most interesting of the events was the invitation Mile Medley Relay Race won by the Police and in which teams representing the Police, Lagos Amateur Athletic Club, Yaba Higher College, Marine Athletic Club and Railway African Club took part.

XV: Taxation

BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES

APR 26 19

There must be very few people who do not know what are the special taxes imposed on the Bantu. For the sake of completeness, however, it may be as well to summarise them.

All men of Bantu race over the age of eighteen, unless specially exempted as students or for other reasons, must pay a poll tax of £1 per annum. Those residing in Reserves or rural locations must, in addition, pay a local hut tax of ten shillings per hut per annum, with a maximum of £2. Where quitrent is payable, the tax is abated by the amount of the quitrent paid. Thus, a monogamist paying ten shillings quitrent will pay no local tax. A man with two wives paying £1 quitrent will pay no local tax. The local tax is supposed to be earmarked for expenditure in the area where it is raised. Where there is a council system, it is spent by the Council. Of the poll tax or general tax, two-thirds is paid into the Native Development Account, and the remaining one-third into general revenue. Grants of money from general revenue exceeding the remaining one-third are, however, made to this same fund.

It must be realised that just as expenditure takes place for the benefit of the Bantu, e.g. on public health, apart from the Development Fund, so much taxation is paid by the Bantu apart from the special Native taxes. The fact that a man is of Bantu race exempts him only from certain Provincial taxes. All other taxes apply equally to him, in spite of his having a special tax of his own. Though the number of Bantu whose income is big enough to be subject to income tax is very small, yet any who have such an income tax, and the poll tax as well.

Probably the most important tax that the Bantu pay is one of which the majority is ignorant, namely customs and excise duties. Customs duties, it may be explained, are taxes on goods imported into the country, while excise duties are taxes levied upon goods manufactured inside the country. Customs duties are leviable on almost everything: excise duties, on the other hand, are mainly levied on a small number of "luxury articles" such as wines, spirits, beer, tobacco, cigarettes and sugar. These taxes form what is known by economists as "indirect taxation, they mean that the charge is not really borne by the person who first pays it, but is passed on to others. If you are a smoker, you will notice that your packets of cigarettes have special stamps affixed to them to cover the excise duties. These stamps are bought by the cigarette manufacturers, but the cost is passed on to the merchants and by them to the individual smoker. Remember that every puff of smoke means a small fraction of a penny going into the Government's revenue.

Take one more illustration. A man buys a suit from an Indian tailor. The tailor arrives at the price by calculating the cost of the cloth as he bought it from the whole-sale merchant, plus his labour and profit. The basic figure is the cost of the cloth, but this figure includes the customs duties which the wholesale merchant or his agent at the port has paid. It is probable that at least £2,000,000 is paid by the Bantu population of the Union in taxes in this painless way. If the Government raises the customs duty, the ordinary man has no grievance against the Government he simply blames the merchant for profiteering.

But though the burden of customs and excise duties in actual figures is much heavier than that of the poll tax, it is not felt nearly so much. There is no resentment about it. This helps us to remember that the method of collection of a tax often matters at least as much as the nature and amount of the tax. For many years the poll tax has been very unpopular, not so much because of the amount, although that is very heavy for certain types of worker, but also because of police raids, and imprisonment. Nowadays the Government is doing its best to reduce police raids, and try every other method of collecting the tax before sending the defaulter to gaol. The number of people going to gaol each year has fallen from about 30,000 in the latter part of 1939 to 7000 in the latter part of 1940.

There are those who argue that the Bantu should not pay any special tax at all. They say that it is contrary ho sound policy for the poorest section of the population to pay taxes. Others argue that a community which pays no direct taxation suffers a loss of prestige, and is deprived of any chance of exercising political influence. It has been the writer's experience to find tribal Bantu earnestly opposing the abolition of the poll tax on these grounds. Perhaps wiser methods of collection, and an adequate and flexible system of exemption for those who really cannot afford to pay may make the tax a bearable one. Until the theory has been discarded that special services to the Bantu must be met out of special taxes paid by the Bantu, it would be a mistake to abolish the tax, which finances the greater part of our education and our agricultural services.

It is, of course, the theory that is wrong. No class of the community should find expenditure on it limited by the amount of taxes which it pays. It must be considered whether the interest of the State calls for expenditure, and, if so, the expenditure must be made, irrespective of whether revenue is coming in or not. We do this, for example, with regard to our farming community and to the Poor White group. Nobody suggests that the expenditure on them should be limited by the amount of direct taxes which they pay. When this doctrine of "fiscal segregation" is applied to the Bantu, it is a particularly flagrant example of the abuse of the idea of segregation.

NATIVES' SENSE OF RESPONSIBLILITY

A European correspondent, commenting on the discussion as to the merits of either "Native" "Bantu" or "African," as an appellation distinguishing the Black race from their European brothers, asks why educated Africans do not raise the sense of responsibility of their less fortunate fellowmen instead of discussing academic matters.

Continuing, this correspondent says:

The urban Natives of both sexes imitate the white in the matter of apparel, albeit of louder taste in colour and ensemble, but do not imitate them in deportment or responsibility. Can one imagine a white person walking into your property to talk to the maid or manservant without so much as by your leave; or shouting to another white person across the street? Or stopping any girl who takes his fancy?

The behaviour of the Native when engaged in crime is brutal in the extreme; he thinks nothing of striking a middle-aged lady in the process of handbag-snatching. He will shoot almost anyone at sight when house-breaking. When pursued or arrested he resists by force of arms, throws a bicycle at his captors or assaults them with the handcuffs, and in fact goes to any extreme to prevent retribution overtaking him. I am quoting from memory of very many cases that have appeared in the Press, and I may add the case of one who was found guilty of one or two murders yet tried to persuade the judge that he should not be hanged as he had a family to keep.

Policing in Johannesburg is almost non-existent. But there are people who write to the Press when police seem to be over-zealous when making a capture or in the use of arms. One indeed seems to hear much more when a Native is shot accidentally or in the process of arrest or pursuit than one does when a whole family is butchered (Linden) or a caretaker is brutally stabbed over and over again (Durban).

What does the Native "intelligentsia" contribute towards the solution of the problem? Just a blather about paying a "living wage" whereas the streets are full of proud Natives wearing clothes of such splendour as are beyond my own means.

JAN 18 1941

NATIVE FIRST AID TRAINING
30,000 MINE NATIVES PROFICIENT IN IT

You have been reading in these articles how good a thing it is to understand and have a thorough knowledge of First Aid. Natives working on the Mines are encouraged to learn it, and they like to learn it. That is the spirit in which progress is made.

Every year competitions in First Aid are held on the Mines under the auspices of the South African Red Cross Society working in close co-operation with the Prevention of Accidents Committee of the Rand Mutual Assurance Company Limited, and of course together with the Transvaal Chamber of Mines.

When the annual competitions in First Aid Training are going to be held the news spreads along the Mines and the Natives take the keenest interest, the more so as there have already been the preliminary competitions. It means that the teams competing in the finals have proved themselves very good at First Aid. They are indeed the crack teams of First Aid on the Witwatersrand Mines.

The annual Competitions for the year 1940 took place last October at the Witwatersrand Native Labour Association Compound, Johannesburg, and many were the people who came to watch the tests, which were carried out with the usual strictness. The importance attached to these competitions, which are for the Native Mine Ambulance Championships of the Transvaal, can be realised when it is stated that on the occasion of the last finals a Cabinet Minister, the Hon. H. G. Lawrence, K.C., M.P., Minister of the Interior and Public Health, came to present the trophies and medals and other prizes to the captains of the winning teams and also the cash prizes to all other teams competing. Amongst the notabilities also present on the memorable day were the Acting Director of Native Labour (Mr. A. E. Lowe) and Mr H. Wellbeloved, Native Labour Adviser to the Transvaal Chamber of Mines. Mine Natives who were taking part brought their "brothers" and Europeans came also. Everybody was interested.

More than 3,000 Mine Natives had taken part in the preliminary competitions, that is before the finals were held, and you may be surprised to learn that there are now nearly 30,000 Mine Natives who have made themselves proficient in First Aid. Ten years ago there were only 2,000 to 3,000 Mine Natives who had qualified in First Aid, so you can tell the great progress the Natives have recorded in this most useful and beneficial knowledge.

The competitions naturally take a long time to complete each year. There is an underground competition and also a surface competition, and here again Organisation—the doing of things in an orderly manner—is evident.

The trophies that the Mine Natives in the finals represent the blue riband of the whole of the Transvaal for Mine Ambulance competitions, and the winners are very proud of these tropies, also the medals and prizes; indeed they display their medals at public functions.

It is interesting to note from experience that employees trained in First Aid are safer workers because in their training they realise the consequence of accident and are therefore more careful.

The Bantu In South African Life

8--Nutrition And Health

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

JAN 18

In the course of the last few articles we have been dealing with matters directly or indirectly connected with the wage question. But we have felt it important to point out, for example with regard to housing, that while wages are a very important factor, there are other aspects of housing to be considered. So it is with nutrition, by which phrase we mean simply the proper feeding of the community. The connection of poor wages with malnutrition is very clear, and must constantly be emphasised, but we must not think that we have dealt with the problem of nutrition simply by saying that people should get higher wages. This attitude is very often the result of suspicion. People feel that the suggestion of any remedy other than the raising of wages simply means an attempt to evade paying higher wages. We should put this suspicion out of our mind and decide both to work for higher wages and to consider nutrition and general health on their merits.

Food and nourishhent are very different things. Food is what we eat: nourishment is what we get out of it. It is possible for a man to eat a good deal, and yet be undernourished. Take for example the pure white "refined" mealie meal, which is sold in bags in our towns. It has been publicly pointed out by the Chief Medical Officer of Health for the Union that nearly all the real nutrition has been removed from this meadie meal. Those who eat it might almost as well be filling themselves up with sawdust. When we consider that the staple food of many families in towns consists of this type of mealie meal white bread and tea, often without milk, it is easy to see that many families may feel fairly well fed without getting anything like the real nourishment that they need. Just as it is possible to spend as much money on an ugly house as on a pretty one, so it is possible to spend as much money on poor food as on good food. Here is one side of the nutrition question which he independent of wages, and where good work can be done. Any householder can buy brown bsead for the same price as white, and get far better value for money from it.

There is another aspect, however, of nutrition. Some of the foods which our people most need, partilularly fruit, green vegetables and milk are difficult to get in the towns. We must face the fact that the conservatism of the people sometimes prevents them from using such opporunities as they have, for example of buying green vegetables cheaply, and the knowledge that so few people will buy them sometimes tends to discourage storekeepers from stocking them. None the less, there is a real obligation on the part of our Municipalities and other public authorities to see that foods of this kind are easily available.

In these matters there is much wrong thinking on the part of the Government and of sections of public opinion. Recent developments in our agriculture, such as the control of the sale of mealies and of dairy products, are based mostly on the interests of the producer, i.e. the farmer, and the needs of the consumer are not recognised early enough. Some people think that the farmer ought not to get any special protection. This appears to be a short-sighted view. Under modern conditions it is not wrong to regulate the sale of farm products, and so help to keep the farmer on the land. This is a good, and not a bad thing. What is wrong is the concentration on encouraging the farmer export, instead of taking responsibility for the sale of what are called the "protective foods," for example eggs, milk, fruit, at prices which are fair both to the farmer and to the buyer in town. This could be done if we would make up our minds to do it, and it needs to be done.

In the country districts, it is possible to get more milk and vegetables, but even there people need a good deal of education with regard to the type of food food that they eat. It is particularly important to try to bring the mothers of the community to the point where they give their children at school a good meal before day's school work is started. In many country districts all over the Union children are sent off to school with either no breakfast at all or just a little cold porridge. There are many areas where children get their first real meal of the day at about four o'clock. And this is not because the parents are starving, but because of failure to adapt themselves to morden conditions, including school hours. Much of the poor work in our schools is due to uder-feeding.

Everywhere we have to face grave questions of health, which indeed would merit a whole series of articles to themselves. Only a few points can be mentioned here.

There are things which the pepople can do for themselves, particularly with regard to the two great scourges of tuberculosis and venereal disease. Quite elementary care, such as spitting into a special covered utensil, would prevent the passing on of tuberculosis to hundreds of people who get it every year at the present time. Stricter morality, and also the use of the clinics that are already available, could reduce our venereal disease figures by several thousands every year. On the other hand, there is much to be done from the Government side. Districts surgeons vary very much as regards their active interest in the Bantu population of their area. Some are very keenly interested. Others do just the bare minimum which their official duties require. There are very large areas of the Union even today where the Bantu get virtually no medical attention at all. In recent years the Government has done a good deal to meet these needs, first by beginning to train Medical Aids, secondly by subsidising nurses; thirdly, by building more hospitals; fourthly, by subsidising clinics, and fifthly, by starting two big experiments in preventive medisine, one in the Transkei and one in Natal. All this work only touches the fringe of the problem, and we have to press for more and omre facilities.

One last word. Bantu communities can help themselves in one important sphere. If they are prepared to find a small portion of the salary of a nurse, the Public Health Department will her salary. Very often the Native Affairs Department will assist with grants for building a dispensary and purchasing medicines I do not think that there is any NativeCommissioner in the Union who would refuse to help the people oGf his district if they are willing to subscribe, say, £2 a month among themselves to help to maitain a nurse.

QUESTIONS:

(1) Summarise in two columns the points on which more Government action is needed, and those on which self-help is possible with regard to nutrition and health in urban areas.

(2) Repeat the question for a rural area.

(3) Sketch out what you think a good working programme for combatting tuberculosis among the Bantu.

Muslim Population Of The World

DEC 28 1940

An Up-to-Date Estimate

(By Hatim A. Alavi, Ex-Mayor Karachi)

There have been many attempts to estimate the number of Muslims throughout the world resulting in considerable discrepancies between the various estimates.

Louis Matsignon in his "Annuaire du Monde Musulman" probably made a first attempt as lately as 1929.

Since then considerable progress has been made in this direction mainly due to the Islamic countries having linked up with modern cizilization and adopted up-to-date methods of having a census in their own countries. The League of Nations Secretariat having vast facilities, have also been greatly helpful in drawing up these statistic. The world distribution of Muslims shows that the majority are found in Asia and that the largest single unit of Muslims inhabiting any single country is India which has, according to the 1931 Census, a Muslim population of over 82 millions.

Operations for the decennial census of 1941 have already been taken in hand and having regard to the recent birth and death ratios of areas preponderingly Muslim, it is reckoned that the Muslim population of the Indian Peninsula proper will easily exceed hundred millions.

In Africa the followers of Islam outnumber by many times those of other religions and constitute over half of the total population.

In Europe, Muslims are found mainly in the Balkan States and in South Russia, numbering in all several millions. It is interesting to note that out of a total population of two lacs of Muslims in France, slightly more than half that number reside in Paris.

On the two Americas and in Australasia and the Phillipine Islands, there are two and a half million Muslims.

BLACK MAN IS "AFRICAN" SAYS CAPETOWN READER

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. JOSEPH NKATLO, 73 Francis Street, Capetown writes: Sir,—The arguments raised by Mr. Jacob Mohlamme against the Africans being called Africans is flimsy.

"May it be noted that we are all Africans in Africa, but we are not all Natives in Africa as is the case now."

The absurdity of that statement makes it obvious that Mr. Mohlamme is not clear in his terminology.

The best English dictionaries define the "Native" as follows: "Native—Inborn or Natural."

Once a man is called an African we understand him to be Native in Africa. In other words the African means any member of the aboriginal tribes of Africa.

The Blackman of this land is an African and all other names are misnomers.

Gleanings From Life

(By Jo The Cow)

At It Again

(NON-EUROPEAN UNITED FRONT)

APR 5 - 1941

We had thought that footnotes would have satisfied our heated correspondents who feel that by asking one or two questions from and about the Non-European United Front we immediately make our self, the Bozo Club and everything we stand for, a "collection of hypocrites, paid traitors, turncoats, narrow racialists, detractors of the people etc., etc."

Of course we know very well that all young, prospective and budding leaders of the race are masters of invective. Otherwise how can they attract the eye of the public?

As we do not lead anybody, and as we constantly have impressed it upon our readers that the Bozo has no aspirations in matters political, we are able to give our readers a good hearing. More than that, it must be clearly understood that we have no prejudice whatsoever against the Non-European Front. We always have an open mind and are prepared to see the other man'spoint of view even when we do not agree with it.

We put a question to Non-European United Fronters and asked them to tell us what they say about the contempt in which the African is held by the other two non-European sections of the community. To quote one instance, an African dare not go to a non-European bioscope as freely as an Indian or Coloured would. A local bioscope manager recently told Africans that Indians had protested strongly to him against being made to sit on the same seats with "Natives" and as a consequence "Natives" had to be either segregated or refused admission altogether. Where are common interests there? We see conflicting interests.

We Asked...

We asked what the Non-European United Front had to say about Asiatics who penetrate into Bantu Reserves and there refuse the African to do business among his own Africans where there are no Asiatics.

We asked what common interests were in this attitude.

We asked on what basis was the United Front founded other than the fact that our Asiatic leadership wants to use African numbers as its front line in a frontal attack on Europeans.

It appears to us that the only point where "common" interests become identical is when a common struggle of non-Whites versus Whites is contemplated. This, and only this, can be the basis of such a Front and it is an unsafe basis for the poor and illiterate African. Otherwise instead of common insterests, about which we hear so much, we find conflicting interests.

Africans want protection against exploitation in which Asiatics have not shown less unscrupulousness than those Whites whom they so frantically condemn. Asiatics want more fields for their commercial expansion. This expansion may be at the expense of the African or Coloured. Asiatics are only too ready to oust the African, if only they can get what they want. The Coloured is unwilling to lose his vote, old age pensions, free education, merely to fight the African's battles. On the other hand Indians are impatiently waiting for the day when slow India will regain her independence, when they shall occupy their rightful Aryan place in South Africa. These are fundamental and vital issues which not even Marxian clear-headedness can deny or sidetrack. These fundamental issues have nothing in common. They are basically at variance. Any hasty effort to reconcile them and parade them, to appear identical in a United Front, is only another of those futile attempts which are a direct invitation to disaster. Unhappily the chief sufferer in this instance will be the poor African who will allow himself to be fooled and used as a tool.

Dancing Partners

We asked what guarantee the African could have that the other non-European groups have recast their former attitude which had not shown much regard or consideration for the African. In reply we were heatedly told by a knowing correspondent who chose to write in Zulu what nice dancing partners Asiatics and Coloureds make, in the Transvaal (of course)! As we are not keen on dancing we thought our serious correspondent meant to poke fun at the United Front, and he did it magnificently.

There is no need to be rabid and furious about these things. We want sincerity, without our declaring that some people are hypocrites and paid traitors. How can the African be called upon to join hands with people whose interests are anything but similar to his? And those people have not hesitated to show him that they do not care for him except when he has money to spend.

It would appear that common interests come in only when the African is to be the giver. When he does not have to give he is a "Native," to associate with whom is anathema! We have Sastri College in Durban and no "Native," no matter how keen he is as a United Fronter, has been known to us to have been admitted as a boarder. At Fort Hare we have Asiatics and Coloureds of every faith.

Really...?

We support hundreds of Asiatic merchants and small storekeepers in Natal and the only jobs they give to us are those of disinfecting their sewerage sytems and loading or offloading, loads, bags etc. They have never been known to give us better jobs than these. We would be very happy to know of only a dozen who have given Africans better jobs than these in any part of Natal. Instead we find them opposing African Bus owners when they want to ply in those areas which are exclusively in habited by Africans. Where are common interests there? On all those conflicts are we to believe that a really United Non-European Front can and will be built which will guarantee equal sharing of gains for the African too and that he is not again being made a cat's paw because of his ignorance and numbers? Sober Africans will think twice before they involve themselves in such dangers.

At the same time we always extend a welcoming hand to all who genuinely work for the African. As 'working for a people' is such an elastic expression, we always want to be convinced that such workers do not have ulterior motives in volunteering their services. The Non-European United Front must convince the people first that it has a practical solution to the problems we have just outlined.

A TIME OF GREAT REJOICING

THIS should be a time of great joy among all African peoples. On Sunday, British troops, including South Africans, in triumph entered Addis Ababa, the capital of Abyssinia.

Although it does not mean that all the Italians are driven out of the country, it certainly marks the finish of Italian power in the land. The cowardly Italians are fleeing northward where it is certain that they will be captured by other British forces and the Abyssinians who are fighting for their own country.

Even a year ago, who would have thought that freedom would be restored to the enslaved peoples of that country in so short a time. It is not only a time of joy for those who were forced to live under the rule of that boaster Mussolini, but also for all those who have taken part in their liberation, either directly by fighting the Italians, or have helped to provide food and weapons for the fighting men.

Men from all over the world helped to win back Abyssinia to its rightful ruler. South Africans, Australians, men from New Zealand, Indian troops, soldiers and airmen from England, Africans from Kenya and the Gold Coast, as well as the people of Abyssinia, all fought together. Now they have reaped their reward. The Emperor of Abyssinia, returned to his country from exile as soon as the war started and with the help of British officers organised the Abyssinian forces.

Once the Italians are finally driven from the country, the Emperor will be restored to his own throne and the rule of the Lion of Judah will prevail once more. It will indeed be a great day.

The conquest of Abyssinia is a wonderful thing because it shows that the Allies have shown once again that all nations are entitled to their freedom and that where it has been taken from them by force, it must be given back to the people.

There is still, however, a greater fight ahead.

The great fight is to destroy Hitler and his ideas forever. We should draw the lesson from Abyssinia that wickedness cannot prevail, and set ourselves to do all we can by work and prayer to make sure that the influence of these evil men shall disappear from the world for ever and.

FEB 8 1941

A very valuable typewritten pamphlet has just been received by us. It carries with it a very good idea worthy of being eagerly taken up by the Africans wherever circumstances will allow. The idea has been suggested and brought into action by one of our greatest friends and sympathisers, Dr. Lewis E. Hertslet. This idea is the introduction of weekly markets in areas occupied by Africans in their locations and reserves. The present condition of our people justifies such a move. Our people are just in a state when their economic position demands that they open their eyes more than they have been doing heretofore and to make efforts for the improving of their status in monetary affairs.

We can see no way to attain this end other than our people making themselves grow as a group as the result of their own efforts. Hitherto the majority of our people have relied only on getting money by going out of their areas to seek work in the towns and labour areas. The idea of self-support has been conspicuous by its absence. That has been one of the reasons why theirs has been the lowest paid labour in the country. This stagnation has been the cause of their proverbial poverty so that their men are called "boys" in this country. This idea will instil into their minds a money sense which must fill them with ideas of improving their lot.

The author of this pamphlet is one of our staunch friends whose interest in us is not that of merely seeing that he gets as much as he can from us. We are glad to note that this group of true sympathisers and friends is steadily increasing. It encourages us the more to see the name of Mr. D.L. Smit, the Secretary for Native Affairs which proves once more that he is solicitous for our real good and does his best to help us ascend the ladder of progress by self help.

We also note with pleasure that Dr. Brookes has also a message in the pamphlets for his constituents.

We must express our thanks to the Natal University College, Durban, and its Department of Economics for having financed the publication and who are ready to supply gratis the pamphlet to all who desire to secure a copy.

It now remains with us to faithfully play our part and justify this worthy attempt for our improvement, by seeing to it that these markets be established wherever circumstances warrant and secondly to see to it that they are not suffered to lack commodities for sale as well as buyers. We are now no longer in a stage in our development when we should be satisfied with having everything started, maintained and financed by others while we only follow. A virile people like us should now exhibit its own ability to start and support our own beneficial projects and once started, to see to it that they are not left to stagnate.

The project deserves the acceptance and support of all classes of our people as even the unlettered have now a working knowledge of money matters. This will lead to the enhancement of the worthy idea of also bringing into existence such home industries as a paying concern for the majority of our people and also prevent the spread of the idea that money is obtainable only in the towns and on European farms. Self-help should be introduced as a worthy idea among our people in order to progressively "develop along our lines."

Non-European United Front

This organisation has received much opprobrium of recent days in your columns, Mr. Editor, as well as in those of your contemporaies.

Allow me Sir, to throw my stone too. No organisation among the Non-European population of this country has had a great prospect no; organization has had greater "potential" power not only to bring harmony among the Non-Europeans all, but also to wrest all sections of the population a place in the African sun. Yet this "Open Sesame" like several others of its kind was ill fated from the start. We said so in 1939 and we were a voice in the wilderness. The trouble with the "Front" was that, while it purported to be an organization of National Status, the leaders of the Front were blinded by their enthusiasm to the extent of disregarding the then existing National organizations. What we wanted then was a federation of the national organisations, instead of a few individuals ran around the country collected a few coppers from some unfortunate, credulous or zealous folks and that is about all we heard until—enters Dr. Dadoo; and here begins our tale.

You would think from the noise that is made in your columns and in the "Bantu World" that this "United Front" was a new idea saddenly sprung by Dr. Dadoo on the innocent unwilling African, Until Dr. Dadoo where was all this fatherly guardianship ? Do your correspondents mean to say they were not aware that the organisation was going on ? And is the "Front" an Indian affair ? I have known Bantu leaders who have associated themselves actively with the Front. Ikhona gentlemen, you have not told us the whole truth yet. Please direct us. What is wrong with the "Front"? The leaders of the "Front" tell us they are fighting against discrimination pass laws, colour bars, etc. Why should we not follow them ?

Do you tell us we should not join them up because some rich Indians have Bioscopes and Vegetarian Tea Rooms ? Some of us have tea rooms and we do not allow Indians.

As for maligning Dr. Dadoo for convening a meeting to protest against Pass Laws on the grounds that he is an Indian etc., gentlemen, these are days of stress and not much good is served by such irresponsible statements. And to hit the man so hard when he is on the ground—surely you can at least "give the devil his due." Does it mean nothing to you that the man has had the courage of his convictions ? We differ with the "Front" on the reasons stated, but we admire Dr. Dadoo's sincerity.

Your humble Servant,

OPEN CONSPIRACY.

"AFRICANS" OR "NATIVES"

The Editor "Umteteli."

"ANTI - DETRIBALISATION writes: Sir,—It was not my purpose to begin a controversy with Mr. Mohlamme but merely to point out to this gentleman, as many others have tried to show him, how pathetically off the rails he is I can almost safely say that, generally speaking, he pays more attention to how he is going to express himself than to what he wishes to say.

I myself do not think we should worry our heads about people who wrongly term themselves "Africans" or "Afrikaners." It is those people who should avoid duplicity and not the African who is a Native of Africa. White men in this continent have no more a right to call themselves Africans than a Black man has of calling himself a European, even though he may have been born and brought up in Europe. Before anyone can claim the application "European" his or her descent must not bear any known element of origin foreign to Europe especially on the paternal side. It stands to reason therefore that anyone claiming the name "African" must pass a similar test.

Mr. Mohlamme's kindergarten questions offend my taste and outrage my views of propriety and therefore rightly deserve to be ignored. The phrase "African Consolidated Theatres," "African Board of Executors" and what-not, in my humble opinion, are self-explanatory and I fail to perceive the cause for a hitch.

I think the Advisory Board Conference, Mr. Mohlamme, had in mind a binding name for all the Black races of African origin when they decided on the name "African," for we are already agreed on the term "Bantu" for all Africans this side of the Equator, as suggested in the rather common ending in the vernacular name for "person" among the different races.

Further I fail to understand Mr. Mohlamme's point when he talks of "new-comer inhabitants who are rightly referred to as Africans." Does he mean Europeans or Swahilis? Another statement is "But we cannot all be 'Natives' as is the case now."

In conclusion I feel honoured by Mr. Mohlamme's reply but my dull mind fails to comprehend his confused "designations."

Nigerian Student Qualifies As An Ophthalmic Optician

LONDON, Oct. 31.—According to the Assistant Director of the Examination Committee of the British Optical Association (65, Brook Street, W.1), Mr Rowland O. Okagbue, of Onitsha, Nigeria, British West Africa, was among the successful candidates at the final examinations of the B. O. A. which were held at the University of London.

Mr Okagbue is now qualified, has been licensed to practise as Ophthalmic Optician and is entitled to the degree of Fellow of the British Optical Association (F.B.O.A.)

His name has been gazetted in "The Dioptric Review" as a registered Ophthalmic Optician.

Mr Okagbue arrived in this country two years ago, after a brilliant academic and athletic career at King's College, Lagos.

His work in Physics was so impressive that one of his Masters at the College suggested to him to consider qualifying abroad in order to become an Ophthalmic Optician, after he was successful at the Cambridge School Certificate examination, with exemption from London Matriculation.

At King's College, whither young Okagbue entered, after attending the C.M.S. Central School, Onitsha, and the Dennis Memorial Grammar School, Onitsha, he so distinguished himself in sports that during his career there, he was, at one time or the other, captain of the football, cricket, and hockey athletic teams.

Mr Okagbue proceeded to the United Kingdom, at the outbreak of hostilities, and the vessel taking him to England had to detour to Boston, Massachusetts, U. S. A., before finally reaching a British port.

On arrival in England, he entered Northampton Polytechnic Institute where he began his professional studies in earnest.

Last year, he was elected Secretary of the West African Students' Union.

He is now planning to return to West Africa.

It is reported that Mr Rowland O. Okagbue is being considered for higher appointment by an important British firm of opticians for service in West Africa.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr R. O. Okagbue is the son of Mr David Okagbue, of Onitsha, a retired pensioner of the Customs Department.

He is one of the few qualified Native African (if not the first) Ophthalmic Opticians in the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria.

The decision of Mr Okagbue to send his son to England in order to qualify in this virgin field is commendable and is an indication that West Africans are beginning to appreciate the role and importance of vocational aptitude, guidance, and opportunities in the education of their children.

Hospitalisation Of The Native

For some time passed there has been alarming evidence of the inadequacy of hospital accomodation and medical staff for Natives throughout the country, and the Cape Administrator's observations in his civic luncheon speech in Port Elizabeth last Saturday, published elsewhere in this page, present a glaring and challenging situation to those who profess to be trustees of the Bantu people. Indeed, His Honour minces no words in showing the seriousness and urgency of the whole matter of Native health.

It is to be hoped that his words coming as they do from a very responsible man will not fall on deaf ears and that Native hospitalisation will be one of the chief objectives of the new social order promised by the Government.

Already there are manifestations of the Government's live interest in this problem. Last Saturday the Minister of Health, Mr. H. G. Lawrence announced that a Committee to consider a scheme for the training of African medical aids and the training of Africans in medicine has been appointed. It is important and gratifying to note that Mr. Lawrence also mentioned the Government's intention to examine a State medical scheme which has often been advocated by many competent men.

Again it goes to the credit of the Government that an institution like the Macvicar Tuberculosis Hospital at Lovedale has been established to deal with the wide-spread disease of tuberculosis in the Ciskei, and that steps are already afoot for the expansion of medical and health services in Native areas as explained in the Annual Report of the Secretary for Public Health and Chief Health Officer for the Union.

Nevertheless, however plausible these efforts of the Government might be they still fall far short of the requirements of the people, and nothing less than sweeping measures will save and relieve the situation. Let us hope that such humanitarian and badly needed steps will not be long de-

National Union Of African Youth [Nuay]

Sir,

Allow me, Sir, once more through the medium of your valued paper to issue this official statement for the information of the public in general and young Natal in particular.

Since our first appearance in your columns, now eleven months ago, much has taken place, that has culminated in the birth of the above movement which was formally constituted on the 13th of July 1941.

Eleven months ago, when we sounded the call, the faint hearted and defeatist dared to challenge the feasibility of organising the young people at this panicky period, but the wonderful response we have had, left us in no doubt about the sense of responsibility of the youth of swarthy Africa, testifying that eleven months ago, we read the inarticulate aspirations of the people aright: for we postulated then, that the youth of Africa were not behind any in national consciousness and in the willingness to offer their whole selves in National Service.

May I repeat then, a few thoughts, the substance of which was foreshadowed in the "Ilanga" of the 7th May, 1941 to indicate what we stand for.

(a) While we realise that there are hardships and difficulties under which the nation labours; while we realise the ability and the duty of the Government to solve these problems for the people, we realise much more the fact that reforms which are external to the people themselves, e.g. Political Rights alone, are at best part only of the nation's need to day. Hence we address our energies first and foremost to making African youth better men and women, enlightened, efficient, and devoted to the National ideal.

This does not in any way minimise our respect for organisations engaged in the political aspect of the struggle—this should serve merely to clarify our

(b) We believe that national liberation is a worthy ideal, which must be bought at high price, hence we prepare our youth for self sacrifice—through sacrifice and not charity or eternal petitions to the powers that be.

(c) We are aware of the major difficulties facing the nation to-day, Poverty, Disease, Ignorance, Lack of opportunity etc. We are resolved to fight these directly and indirectly with all our might, placing premium on comprehensive general national advancement, nor are we unmindful of the magnitude of the task, nor the fact that these problems cannot be solved by some "wave of the magical wand," some formula, some particular form of economic club alone.

In short we stand for a new and better Africa, in which the African shall be able to measure up to the highest obligations and attainments expected of a civilized, free people.

Let me also say that being a national organisation, we are non-competitive. We are pledged to a policy of respect for the ventures of others who in various ways endeavour to better the lot of the African. And while we bear allegiance to no existing organisation, we bear hostility to none, and in practice shall have occasion to co operate with existing organisations.

Though this letter is official, at best it is a Press statement. We have an official constitution.

The following are the men who have been entrusted with the management and direction of the affairs of the Nuay:— M. T. Moerane, Director of Services; Chief A. J. Luthuli, Secretary for Finance; G.N.C. Buthelezi Secretary for Field Services; M. J. Gumede, Secretary for Organisation; J.K. Ngubane, Secretary for Information.

Inquiries should be sent to any of the above, at Box 2227, Durban, or to M.T. Moerane, Umphumulo Institute P.O. Maphumulo, or to J.K. Ngubane 128 Umgeni Road, Durban.

Proposal To Train Native Doctors

A Committee to consider a scheme for the training of Native medical aids and also the training of Natives for degrees in medicine has been appointed. This was announced by the Minister of Health, Mr. H. G. Lawrence, when he opened the new wards and the new nurses' home at Donald Fraser Hospital at Sibasa, Hospital at Sibasa, Northern Northern Transvaal last week.

The committee consists of the Secretary for Native Affairs (chairman), the Secretary for Public Health, the Secretary for Education, Professor R. A. Dart (representing the University of the Witwatersrand), and Dr. C. J. Albertyn (representing the S. A. Medical Association); with Dr. G. W. Gale, Assistant Health Officer of the Department of Public Health, as secretary. The committee will pursue its inquiries in December at Fort Hare, Durban and Pretoria.

Mr. Lawrence also mentioned the Government's intention to examine a State medical scheme.

Mr. Lawrence referred to the establishment of the hospital and its growth. Within the first five years, the number of admissions to the hospital rose from 94 to 230, and the number of out-patients increased from 3, 380 to 16,020. In 1940 the patients numbered more than 500, with a daily average of

The hospital, in common with other mission hospitals, owed much to the Native Affairs Department, which had helped to ease the burden for the Church of Scotland.

Recently the Department had embarked on another experiment —the institution of Native health service units. One had so far been established, at an annual estimated cost of £4,000 at Bulwer, in Natal; and preparations were being made for the establishment of a second unit in the Nothern Transvaal, in the Bushbuckridge area, complete with doctor and assistants to work in the interest of the Natives.

The medical post had already been advertised and the unit should be established soon. The doctor would be assisted by one of the recently-trained Native medical aids and five Native health specialists.

Mr. Lawrence praised the war effort of the Native population of the Sibasa Reserve. In the past 12 months, the Sibasa area had sent about 2,000 recruits to the Native Military Guard.

Hospitals For 700 Out Of 1,500,000 Natives

The Administrator of the Cape Province, Captain F. A. Joubert, at a civic luncheon in his honour at Port Elizabeth last Saturday, said that the provision of hospitals was the most serious problem facing the country, and he expressed the view that the Government should assume responsibility for the care and welfare of Natives, especially in the Native areas.

"In urban areas the Provincial Administration is willing to accept responsibility," said Captain Joubert.

"I have been through the Native areas, and have found 1,500 000 Natives, with hospital services for only 700.

"If we are a civilised community then we have to look after the source of our labour supply. Where the Government has taken over the trusteeship of Native land, it cannot say that the provision of hospitals is a matter for the provinces.

"We have to cultivate a lively public opinion on this question, if we want to preserve the Native source of supply of labour, it is up to us to look after it and see that the central Government looks to its responsibilities."

The Administrator said that they could not jog along on pre-war ideas.

West African Civil Service

SINCE it is too obvious that, in the past, it was not possible to formulate any definite criteria for the appointment and promotion of African Natives in the Civil Service of the various West African Colonies (and by appointment and promotion we mean advancement to the highest posts in the clerical and technical branches of the Civil Service), the scale of salary and conditions of service of Africans have been anything but satisfactory.

We have observed the difficulty of the Nigerian Government in clarifying the criteria of qualification and suitability for higher appointments in the Civil Service, in so far as these relate to the African. We now wish to offer a solution which has been found practicable elsewhere in the Colonial Empire.

We suggest the establishment of a West African Civil Service, organised and operated as the Indian Civil Service. Admission to the West African Civil Service should be based on the passing of examination by all candidates, irrespective of race or creed or colour. Vacancies should be filled strictly on merit. Members of the West African Civil Service should be transferred to West Arican Colonies and Protectorates according to the exigencies of the Service. There should be higher and lower divisions in such service.

If a West African Civil Service, as is envisaged above is organised, then only the best brains will occupy responsible positions in the executive, legislative and judicial establishments of West Africa. Money spent on best brains occupying posts which are accessible to ALL, not through a bottle-necked bureaucracy but through an open sesame of democracy is a worthy investment, compared with our present blind-alley methods of squandermania.

TREATY CALLS FOR SUPREME RULE BY BRITISH ADVISORS

DEC 13 1941 DEC 13 1941

By GEORGE PADMORE
(London Correspondent)

LONDON (Censored) Dec. 11—During the past month there has been alarming news concerning diplomatic moves on the part of South African's to double-cross Haile Selassie and get possession of Abyssinia as a sort of puppet native kingdom.

All these political maneuvers, however, have been exposed by the Emperor's representatives in London.

Prof. Berriedale Keith of Edinburgh University and one of the greatest authorities on international law, in a statement to Foreign Minister Anthony Eden, criticized the British Government's attitude towards Haile Selassie.

"The fact that Ethiopia was not represented at the meeting of Allied Representatives in London on June 12th and September 24th is due to the failure of the British Government to establish diplomatic relations with the Emperor and to recognize his sovereignty de jure over Ethiopia," asserted Professor Keith.

URGES FULL INDEPENDENCE

Sir Berriedale concludes his letter to Mr. Eden by saying: "The only course compatible with our reputation and our interests is to restore full independence to the Emperor, and to provide him with British advisers, who will be his servants, not his masters, for the purpose of reorganizing his administration, while his relations with Britain will assume the shape of a formal alliance, under which on all matters of common interest, the countries will be kept in contact by their Ministers at Addis Ababa and London. Otherwise American isolationists may well ask if Americans should shed their blood to add Ethiopia to the British Empire and may justly declare that the Declaration (the Atlantic Charter) is already a scrap of paper."

I am now able to throw new light on the situation. In order to appease the Abyssinians who are resisting all attempts by the South Africans now in Addis Ababa to disarm the Patriots, the British Foreign Office has set up a committee to study the question Sir John Anderson, Lord Presiden of the Council, has been given the job by Mr. Eden. Britain's futur relationship with Haile Selassi has also been discussed by th War Cabinet on the basis of a re port by Oliver Lyttelton, Ministe of State in the Near and Middl East, whose headquarters in Cair is in contact with the British and South Africans in Addis Ababa.

I understand that a formal treat will ultimately be prepared for th Emperor to sign. It will be simila to the one Iraq signed after th last war, whereby that country was allowed to select its own king while British military and political advisers governed the country. British troops will reserve the right to intervene should any Power attempt to carry on Fifth Column activities detrimental to Britain's imperial interests in Africa and the Near East.

LADY BARTON MAKES APPEAL; WILL ACCEPT DONATIONS TO CAUSE

DEC 13 1941

LONDON, Dec. 11—(ANP)—The Daughters of Sheba, an organization of Abyssinian women under the presidency of Empress Menen, the wife of Emperor Haile Selassie, has issued an appeal to the women of the world, especially those of color, through Lady Barton, wife of the former British minister in Ethiopia.

Broadcasting before leaving for Ethiopia, the Princess Tsahai, daughter of Emperor Selassie, told of the need for women of the west to help their sisters in Africa in the work of reorganizing the home life of the Abyssinian people.

The Daughters of Sheba was formed in Addis Ababa in 1935 to provide medical supplies and comforts for the troops. This was the first organization by women of this kind in the country. It was founded by 12 women with the empress who became the president and the young Princess Tashai as chairman of the executive committee. Each of these women contributed $100 apiece. Soon the organization grew into thousands.

During the years of exile in England, the young princess studied nursing and has now returned to Abyssinia where she intends organizing a modern hospital under the auspices of the Daughters of Sheba.

Members of the association can never go back to their old life. They will carry on the immediate task of setting up the hospital but an immense amount of work will have to be done in the new liberated Abyssinia. They, therefore, need the help and advice of women in the advanced countries who may send donations to Lady Barton, 19 Neville street, London, S. W., 7. England. 50 ITALIANS ELUDE BRITISH IN ETHIOPIA

'Lost Patrol,' All That Remains of African Empire, Believed Living in Mountain Caves

NOV 30 1941

GAYDA IS NOT DISMAYED

Editor Sees Territory's Return —Nairobi Reports Other Rome Units Still Active

ROME, Nov. 29 (U.P.)—A "lost patrol" of fifty Italian soldiers, fighting in the mountains of Ethiopia, was all that remained today to defend Italy's East African empire.

The surrender of Gondar—last Italian center of resistance in Ethiopia—brought the fighting to an end and except for this "lost patrol" the Italian flag flies nowhere in East Africa.

In addition to Ethiopia, with 350,000 square miles and a population of 10,000,000, Italy has also given up Italian Somaliland, with 194,000 square miles and a population of 1,300,000, and Eritrea, with 15,754 square miles and a population of 600,000.

The Italian patrol set out from Assab before the British captured it. They carried provisions for two years and a radio transmitter with which to report to Rome. These men live in caves near some wells, according to reports reaching Rome.

Gondar, which surrendered after a siege of 193 days, carried with it the strongholds of Chelga and Chercher, which were dependent on Gondar and were part of its outer defenses.

Gondar—ordered given up to prevent further loss of life—was the last of a series of resolute though hopeless stands made by Italian garrisons in Ethiopia. During its last days, when ammunition was running low, Gondar troops resorted to bayonets and knives to stem the tide of attackers, Italian reports said.

Rome newspapers, fired by Gondar's stubborn defense, insist that somehow, sometime, the East African empire will return to Italy.

Virginio Gayda, writing in the Giornale d'Italia, declared typical that "Gondar shines as a symbol empire, of Italian right to em-

Wage Increases for Native Workers.

Innumerable references have recently been made to the need for improving the wages of African workers. Cabinet Ministers, and others in high places such as Members of Parliament, are to-day joining with ex-judges, leading churchmen and economists in emphasising this great necessity. Welcome news is also coming in from the field of action. Mrs. Ballinger, M.P., has given publicity to a letter from the Railway Department announcing certain increases in rates of pay and cost of living allowances for Non-European workers. These are as follows: Togt labourers at Durban. Rate of pay increased by 6d. per diem and weekday overtime and Sunday time rates increased by 1d. per hour, with effect from August 19, 1941. All Non-European railway staff other than togt labourers and those governed by the Staff Regulations: Basic rates of pay increased by 1/- per diem with effect from August 26, 1941. All Non-European railway staff in receipt of not more than £100 per annum: Cost of living allowance increased by 50% with effect from August 26, 1941.

* * * *

This news will be welcomed by the 50,000 to 60,000 Non-European railway workers, comments Mrs. Ballinger. At long last, rates of pay for Non-Europeans are beginning to get back to the level that obtained before Mr. Pirow's cuts in 1932 and an old grievance is on the way to being removed. But this, we hope, is only the beginning of improvement for these workers. By this time, their rates of pay should have risen considerably above the 1932 level, and even the revised cost of living allowance is not sufficient to balance the loss of all these years. But there is reason to believe that the present Minister appreciates these facts and intends to make progressive improvements in the position of the Non-European workers in his Department, which he himself last session defined as "deplorable."

Problems of Ethiopia

Britain Must Steer a Middle Course

TWO LONG ARTICLES ON ETHIOPIA appeared in The Times last week from Miss Margery Perham, who emphasised that the immediate problem facing the Emperor and his advisers is that of dealing with a high-spirited nationalism and an extreme administrative decentralisation.

"Finance is indeed the key to Ethiopia's problem of government," wrote Miss Perham. "Her kings never built up a steady, central revenue because they never had sufficient administrative grip upon the provinces, which preserved the medieval self-containment of their economy and finance. Up to the eve of the Italian invasion there was nothing that could be called a system of taxation. The ruling and professional classes, the governors and all their subordinates, the soldiers and the clergy lived directly upon the labour, the grain, honey and firewood of the gabar or tribute-paying peasant.

"It is not a system to be abolished by signing a decree; it is woven into the fabric of Ethiopian life, into its social ranks, its land tenure and agricultural methods. The first step will be to break into the system in its upper layers by paying the governor and his staff, and by taking over or disbanding their provincial armies. But this will require revenue of a total far above that of 1935."

"Before the Italian invasion most of the Emperor's officials were paid wholly or in part by grants of land with the dues from its gabars, and it is estimated that the Emperor received in cash, partly from Customs and railway dividends, between £200,000 and £300,000 annually, which was insufficient to carry out his reforms, equip a small army with modern weapons, pay foreign advisers and missions, build roads, subsidise schools and hospitals, etc. He had, however, begun to reform some of the Galla districts near Addis Ababa by appointing governors, charged to introduce regular taxation and salaries, and had sent a progressive governor to the blackest spot in Maji, with Colonel Sandford as adviser.

"However much money and hope we may invest in Ethiopian reform we should not expect quick returns. We have to reckon with the human factor in a country which for centuries lay in isolation comparable with that of Afghanistan or Tibet.

"Money will be needed until Ethiopian finances can be organised and Ethiopian personnel trained . . . . Perhaps it will cost £2,000,000 to £3,000,000 for the next few years. Revenue in Ethiopia might amount to £500,000, and annual payments might be obtained from the Egyptian and Sudan Governments in return for the very justifiable concessions they might ask round the headwaters of the Blue Nile. Great Britain would in any event have to find the bulk of the money.

"It is clear that in Ethiopia we have to keep an extremely difficult middle way between too much and too little intervention in her affairs, and this, under close scrutiny from the world in general, and in particular from all African peoples sophisticated enough to have identified Ethiopia's cause with the self-respect of their race. To start by erring upon the side of doing too little might result in disorders which would demand intervention upon a very undesirable scale. To err upon the other side by pressing rapid reforms for which Ethiopians are as yet almost wholly unprepared might provoke resentment or even rebellion.

"In this task almost everything will depend upon the men who are chosen to carry it out as advisers to the Emperor. Seconded officials to whom service in Ethiopia may seem as a temporary interruption in their careers will not perhaps be the most suitable agents. Yet it may not be easy at present to find outside our Services men with the necessary qualities, among which sympathy and imagination will be as important as intelligence. It may be that the Union, which has played an important part in the Imperial campaign of liberation, might contribute from its scientific personnel an expert in African veterinary or forestry work.

"The difficulties of the Ethiopian situation have been emphasised. There is, however, a challenging and constructive side to the position. We are asked to do something new, to adapt our accumulated Imperial experience to a non-imperialistic purpose. The advisers may work out, in partnership with an Emperor who has served an apprenticeship in reform, a new technique for stimulating the energies of a free, if backward, people in their own self-development. Whatever arrangements may be made at any peace conference, we have an opportunity now to offer the world something which it very greatly needs at this moment—a new and enheartening standard in the sphere of international and inter-racial relations."

COLORED AGAINST COLORED

No one will contend seriously that the natives of Africa and India will be granted self-government and the right to rule and develop their countries in their own way if the British Empire wins this war.

Nor will anybody outside an insane asylum assert seriously that the slavish status of these Africans and Indians will be ameliorated if the Nazi-Fascists defeat and oust the old exploiters.

Thus, one of the great tragedies of the second World War is that colored is being pitted against colored.

The majority of the Italian soldiers in Somaliland, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Libya are colored soldiers, while the majority of the British and "Free French" soldiers in Somaliland, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Libya are also colored soldiers.

The cream of African youth perished on the fields of Flanders and Normandy protecting their white French masters and enabling the British Army to escape from Dunkirk.

Last week the "Free French" forces (officials in the pay of the British) speeded units of Senegalese halfway across Africa in trucks to die for the English investors in the wilderness of East Africa.

When they arrived they found 10,000 Hausas from Nigeria, standing on the rocks and hot sands barefooted while white South Africans and Australians wore the best boots.

From almost every British African colony, contingents of natives who are not good enough to rule themselves but are quite satisfactory for the purpose of dying for British plutocracy are being pitted against the Nazi-Fascist aggressors. Thousands of Indians are fighting beside them.

When the war is finally over these Africans and Indians will return to their villages, if they're not killed in the conflict, and find themselves as much enslaved as formerly no matter which side wins.

This is the real tragedy of the war.

Africa, Inscrutable, Impossible

DEC 6 - 1941

Every once in a while something creeps into print regarding Africa which convinces us the African is not the dumbest human being in the world. People in modern times are victims of propaganda, and the fact that Africa is a backward country is usually dismissed with a shrug of the shoulders and the suggestion that black people are of a low mental order.

Seemingly no one stops to remember that Africa is the land with the highest mountains, the greatest rivers, the densest forests, the fiercest and hugest animal life, the most poisonous reptiles and insects, and the hottest climate. The world forgets all of the impossibilities and insuperableness extant in the hinterlands of the Dark Continent, and checks the backwardness of Africa to ignorance of black people.

Elmer T. Peterson, Monday morning in the Daily Oklahoman, under the caption, "Nazis Must Count Africa Itself a Foe," makes one of the admissions we have in mind. Mr. Peterson says that for centuries white nations have futilely attempted to develop Africa.

Listen to Mr. Peterson:

"For a hundred centuries or more the enterprising rulers of the European peninsula and the near east have covetously tried to tame this empire. The Assyrians, Babylonians, Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans, Byzantines, Moors and the legions of Napoleon surged against the mysterious land of deserts and jungles with their remote and primitive races of vast antiquity. But the jungle has defied them. Cynically it creeps back. Cynically the desert sifts its drifting sands over the tombs of Tut-Ankh-Amen and the Pharaohs. The wind passes over them, and they are no more. For a brief season the colonists have gathered diamonds, gold, coffee and palm oil. The coastal margins sprout school houses and five-story buildings. Repetitious modernistic houses that look like the Egyptian villas of 4,000 years ago, with electric irrigating plants, sparsely fringe the Libyan desert. But the wind passes over them, and they are no more. Tut-Ankh-Amen was young and fair, and he was surrounded at death by marble and gold filigree and faience, and by the beautiful handicraft of slave artisans, and they thought he would be immortal in his tight stone cell. But he is old and gone, too. The jungles stealthily creep back and conquer. If the jungles do not get us, the deserts will."

Mr. Peterson admits that the power and might of the white man's exact sciences cannot overcome the extremes of nature found in the land where once civilization was cradled by black men. If the white man cannot conquer the deserts, the rivers and the jungles of the Dark Continent, why would it not be logical to study Africa from an angle not having to do with condemnation of its native inhabitants.

Geologists agree that during the tertiary period geographic changes were widespread. The Alps, the Caucasus, Himalayas were upheavals that occurred and great deserts we find today were at one time vast lakes or extensions of oceans. It is barely possible that when civilization flourished in Northern Africa, the Sahara, just as perhaps the great American desert, was an inland sea. Perhaps the climate, because of the change in ocean currents was different, making Northern Africa possible of development as is most of Europe. At any rate, a sensible approach should be made to the fact that at one time Negroes developed a great civilization in Northern Africa during the period when Homer said the Ethiopians are a "blameless, most just folk whom the gods themselves visit and partake of their feasts."

Whenever today we organize an expedition having for its purpose exploring the civilization of the past we leap as the crow flies on a straight line for Africa. No one argues that the people who developed a great culture in the days of antiquity were white, when the Queen of Sheba talked with Solomon, and there is some definite reason why there was a throw-back in human development in a section of the earth where many historians believe the Garden of Eden was located.

The presence of black people in the Philippines and in distant islands off the coast of Africa all indicate that there is today a missing continent, and that when volcanic eruptions caused mountain ranges to rise, the same earth disturbances caused vast changes in the sea. The great cities of Northern Africa, in the days of antiquity, were perhaps beehives of industry bordering on inland seas like Chicago and Detroit. Perhaps Lake Tsana, in Northern Abyssinia is an abbreviated end of that chain of lakes that once made the land bordering on what is now the Sahara a land of milk and honey.

At any rate people should be rational when they remember that Moses married the daughter of an Ethiopian; that the Ark of the Covenant, revered by the religious world, rests in the ancient city of Askum and that Solomon exclaimed at one time, "I am black but comely."

During this same period, Heroditus paid his tribute to the blacks as the "tallest, the most beautiful and long-lived of the human race." The man who delivered this eulogy belonged to a conquering nation, and it is safe to say that black people then were no more handsome than they are now. The difference in the description of black folk then and now rests in the distinctions that are made today between the powerful and the lowly. If Negroes ever become vested with the power and control the men who submit to their might will find cause to worship not only their physical guidance but their physical comeliness.

But we are running far afield from our subject. We started out to show that after 300 years of back-breaking endeavor which the white man has forced upon the native African; after 300 years of attack upon the Dark Continent with his mechanical tools, Africa still defies human ingenuity, and all that the white man has done is to mann his ships and steal her treasures. Her mighty rivers, uncontrolled, roll on, the desert sands will not be penetrated, the hot, torrid winds stifle efforts of puny fingers despite varying pigmentation. Africa is the Sphinx.

Supposed Expectant Mother Is Alleged To Steal Young Baby

SAPELE (BM).—A sensational incident occurred here recently when a young girl named Nuwe Agwa, about 20 years of age, who went to the Sapele Township Market on a market day was alleged to have stolen a child of about three months old from the child's grand mother.

Titi, the young mother of the child, went into the market to purchase foodstuff at the time.

The story of the incident was that Irierie, the grand mother of the child, was with the child in a shed when Nuwe, a supposed expectant mother, was alleged to have drawn near Irierie and began to praise the child for her beauty.

At the same time, Nuwe went and sat near the old woman and she was reported to have taken the child from the old woman and started to play with her.

After sometime, Nuwe was alleged to have expressed her wish to greet somebody she had seen, pointing to a short distance, telling the old woman that she would soon return with

Irierie, the old woman, did not suspect Nuwe Agwa of any mischief, especially as she was generally known to be an expectant mother.

The old woman waited for a long time until Titi, the young mother of the child returned from the market, but Nuwe did not return with the child.

Both of them waited for a considerable length of time until they lost all hope and patience and raised alarm in the market about the lost child.

Policemen in plain clothes and others in uniform rushed into every corner of the town as soon as the complaint was made in the Police Station.

At about 3 p.m., a young boy named Didi, about 10 years of age, was reported to be seen standing in one of the market stalls with the child on his back.

Didi was alleged to have confessed immediately that it was his half-sister, Nuwe, who sent him with the child to look for a canoe going urgently to Koko or Benin River.

Didi was then asked by the Police to point out the person who gave him the child.

OCT 5 1941

The boy directed the Police and a gigantic crowd of people to where he resided with Nuwe at Palmer Road and there was alleged to have pointed out Nuwe as the one who gave him the child.

OCT 5

Nuwe was led to the Police Station where she denied every knowledge of the child.

She covered herself with a wrapper up to the neck and when asked by the Police to remove the wrapper she staunchly refused.

However, it was discovered that Nuwe was not an expectant mother as she claimed.

The matter has since been taken up by the Police.

LONDON (BM).—Deliverance from the yoke of Fascist tyranny has come to at least one group of the vast number of Jews who have known only persecution and suffering under the Nazi and Fascist regimes.

This is the community of black Jews or Falashas, who, through the expulsion of the Italians from Abyssinia, have been freed from their Fascist task masters.

A delegation of Falashas, headed by their Rabbis, went to Addis Ababa to bring gifts and offerings to Emperor Haile Selassie, as a token of gratitude, on his return to Africa.

One authority describes them as "that remnant of Israel."

They live a life apart from the rest of Abyssinians and still practise the Jewish religion.

The Falashas are very industrious and, for the next part, trade only among themselves.

They are shoemakers, tailors, jewellers, tinsmiths, blacksmiths, with a sprinkling of merchants and shopkeepers.

Negro Pugilist Experiences Colour Antagonism In London

West African Pilot

LONDON (BM)—The colour-bar has now invaded the field of sports.

The appeal of Tommy Martin, coloured Deptford heavyweight boxer, for the abolition of the bar which prevents him from fighting for the British championship like Joe Louis in America, has been turned down by the British Boxing Board of Control.

When interviewed, officials of the Board frankly stated that they did not intend to remove the colour-bar and added that the matter had been given the fullest consideration by the Board.

Martin, who was born in England of West Indian and British parentage, has lived nearly all his life at Deptford, where he is very popular among the white people.

He recently returned from America at his own expense to join the Royal Air Force and felt that the discrimination against British-born coloured subjects is unfair, especially in sports.

He and his manager, Mr H. Levene, have brought the matter before Mr W. H. Greene, M.P. for Deptford and Lieutenant-Colonel Blanchard, Mayor of Deptford, who intend to take the matter up with higher authorities and get it raised in the House of Commons.

A further appeal to the Control Board is to be made and Martin has engaged a lawyer to represent him.

Discrimination based on colour and race is strongly resented by all sections of colonials in the British capital.

Since the war, many distinguished visitors from the Colonies have been refused accommodation in hotels and other public places, in so much so that a strong protest was recently made in the House of Commons when a leading Indian statesman was turned away from a hotel where he was seeking shelter for himself and family during an air raid.

Mr Edmund Harvey, the Quaker M.P., has also drawn the attention of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the fact that Native troops from Gold Coast, Nigeria and other West African Colonies now fighting in East Africa have been refused admission into cinemas in Nairobi, Kenya.

Mr Hall, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, explained that this was due to the Film Censor Board which prohibits certain films for exhibition to African races, in accordance with the Cinematograph Film Censorship Rules of 1930.

In England, however, coloured people serving with the Defence Services are allowed to attend cinemas.

The rule applies only to East Africa, where the colour-bar is as strong as in the Union of South Africa, where non-Europeans are not allowed to attend cinemas patronised by whites.

"This is a matter which the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Lord Moyne, and I are very concerned about," declared the Under Secretary of State, Mr Hall . . . .

According to Reuters, the question of coloured boxers fighting for British championships, raised when Tommy Martin, who is fighting Jack London in an eliminating contest for the Empire Heavyweight title, protested that he was not allowed to fight for the British title, has had an echo in Parliament.

The British Home Secretary, Mr Herbert Morrison, in a written reply to a question, said:

"While I am in entire sympathy with the view that there should be no discrimination against British subjects on colour grounds, I understand that there are differences of opinion on the question whether spectacular fights between opponents of different colours ought to be encouraged.

"It is for this reason and not from any prejudice against coloured boxers that there is a rule of the British Boxing Board of Control applying, not to all boxing competitions, but to contestants for the championship of Great Britain."

General Smuts On African Wages And Pass Laws

IN THE SENATE THIS WEEK THE PRIME MINISTER, GENERAL SMUTS, MADE AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT WHICH HAS, NO DOUBT, SENT A THRILL OF HOPE THROUGHOUT BANTUDOM. HE TOLD THE SENATE THAT THE TIME HAD COME WHEN WAGES FOR AFRICAN WORKERS SHOULD BE INCREASED.

HE APPEALED TO WHITE SOUTH AFRICA NOT TO REGARD "THE QUESTION OF NATIVE HEALTH AS MERELY A QUESTION FOR NEGROPHILISTS BUT AS A MATTER OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

SPEAKING ON THE PASS LAWS, GENERAL SMUTS, SAID THERE WAS A DEFINITE NEED FOR THEIR REVISION AND SIMPLIFICATION. IN VIEW OF PUBLIC OPINION HOWEVER, HE DID NOT KNOW WHETHER IT WOULD BE POSSIBLE TO ABOLISH THE PASS LAWS AT PRESENT.

There ought to be an increase in Native wages, which had been stationary for many years, whereas European wages had risen, said the Prime Minister, General J. C. Smuts, in the Senate during the debate on the Native Affairs vote.

The Prime Minister said that Native health was a national matter. The present state of Native health was largely attributable to maize, which had, over a number of years, become the standard food of Natives.

Maize was not a very good article of food.

In some towns Natives were being supplied with milk and in their own areas Natives were being encouraged to improve the breed of cattle.

"We must continue to educate public opinion and make the people realise that the question of Native health is not merely a question for negrophilists, but a matter of national importance."

The Prime Minister said that hospital conditions for Natives in some areas were very bad. The Minister of Health intended to investigate the whole matter and to try and put hospitalisation for both Europeans and Natives on a more rational basis. A start had already been made in medical aid for Natives. The fate of Natives rested largely on themselves and on those of them who could work among their own people.

In the payments of wages the Government tried more or less to conform to private practice, and, with a little stimulation of public opinion, there could be further improvement.

ARMY PAY

He did not think Natives in the Army were being overpaid, as was alleged in the House of Assembly. The Government tried to set a decent standard, and the pay of Natives in the Army was not high compared with Native wages on the mines.

The Prime Minister said that there was a definite need for revision and simplification of the pass laws, and the matter was receiving attention.

In view of public opinion, however, he did not know whether it would be possible to abolish the pass laws at present.

Native Appeals And Their Courts

The decision of the Appellate Division Bloemfontein on the 29th. April that a litigant in a Native Commissioner's court desiring to appeal to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court must proceed through the Native Appeal courts will be hailed with general satisfaction by Africans.

This important matter of procedure formed the subject of a special case stated by the Minister of Native Affairs in order to obtain the court's ruling. The special case raised the question whether under the Native Administration Act 38 of 1927 a litigant intending to appeal from the judgment of the Native Commissioner's Court could submit an application for leave to appeal under section 18 of the Act directly to the Appellate Division or only after an appeal to a Native appeal court.

Native appeal courts had given conflicting decisions on the question.

In the case of Lutuli v. Myokana, decided in 1934, one Native appeal court had held that the Appellate Division constituted the forum of appeal from Native appeal courts, while in the case of Lethoba v. Ndhlovu, heard in 1940, another Native appeal court by a majority held that there was no provision for appeals from its judgments to the Appellate Division, and that a litigant desiring to appeal to the Appellate Division must proceed directly from a Native Commissioner's Court to that division instead of appealing to a Native appeal court.

In its judgment the Appeal Court ruled that the former decision was the correct one.

The Native Administration Act of 1927 was designed to deal with Bantu court cases in the perspective of Native law and custom. This involved a special study of the rudiments of complicated aboriginal customs usages, appertaining to varying tribes, a study which did not commend itself to many students of Roman-Dutch law. The result was that there are none too many experts of Native law in the legal profession or in the service of the Government. That being so, it would appear essential that the knowledge and experience of the few experts appointed to the special benches of Native Appeal courts, including that of assessors chosen from the ranks of experienced Native Commissioners, should be utilised to the fullest extent.

From the Native Commissioners' courts below, it will be observed that Native cases are handled primarily by attorneys preferably engaged by litigants for their having specialised in the study of Native law. These attorneys are a batch by themselves, who, by continuous practice and appearance in the Native Commissioners' courts, have acquired valuable knowledge which enhances the standard of the courts. It is usually the same set of attorneys who are engaged to pilot cases through the Native Appeal courts. Here they make a powerful combination with the President of the Native Appeal Court—a judicial officer chosen specially for ripe knowledge in Native law. The President is assistde by two experienced Native Commissioners. It may also be mentioned that in the items in the Bill. I think my colleagues have spoken on that question sufficiently, and anything we have to say further, we will bring forward in the Committee stage.

TO NATIVES

But I should like to find out the exact attitude of the Hon. the Minister in regard to the Natives. I have often listened in another place to the speeches made by the Hon. the Minister when he was in Opposition, and the first time I came in contact with him as a Minister was when he made his maiden speech here in the Senate about a year ago. I must say when I listened to the Minister I thought that the man had really arrived a man of righteousness, the protector of the underdog, and that we who represent the underdogs of this country would be able to expect assistance from him in every possible way.

I should just like to refer Mr. President to the remarks that the Hon. the Minister made. I will not read them all. I refer to his speech in the Senate on 14th May, 1940. He said:

The solution of slumdom lies in better wages, and I am making efforts and will continue to make efforts in the direction of the material uplift in wages which, after all, provides the way and means of all those amenities of life, including good housing and presenting them with more opportunities of insisting upon raising the fundamental level of wages for unskilled labour,upon which everything is built in this country. The whole of our property, the whole of our commercial life, the whole outlook of our primary producer depends upon the distribution of wages to the working man, the mass of working men and women—I must include those to mean the unkilled labour of the country—be they Black or White, and I draw no distinction there.

I must say, Mr. President, that when I listened to the Hon. the Miniter I had visions of prosperity in this country, and I really thought that we would have him as one of our chief workers in the uplift of the Native people. My colleagues have made reference to the question that we were not consulted with regard to this Bill. I know I have been trying to get a draft of the Bill, and I was refused. We were always told that the Bill has not been used; it was not printed. The Hon. the Minister and his advisers evidently have forgotten that we, the Native representatives, represent 75 per cent of the working people of this country, and that we should have been consulted.

I should like to ask the Minister if he can explain one of his actions as far as the Native are concerned, so that I can really be assured with regard to his attitude towards the Native people of this country.

POLL TAX CAUSE OF SUFFERING

This House knows our attitude with regard to the Poll Tax. We look upon the Poll Tax as the cause of the suffering and the poverty of the Native people, but there are a good many of the Natives who are perfectly willing to pay the Poll Tax, because they realise that the Poll Tax is going towards the development of their people.

Now the Minister of Native Affairs a few years ago made some money available for erecting Native school buildings, and I approached the Minister of Labour and asked him if he would exempt two of the locations from the Wage Act. He had the power to do so. I informed him that this money that was going to be spent on the erection of the buildings came entirely out of Native taxes from the Native people, and that we wanted the opportunity or the right for these Native people to go and erect those buildings themselves. The Hon. the Minister refused, and I got from him a letter stating that experience had proved that building built by skilled labour at standard wages were cheaper.

AFRIKANE AND NATIVE

I just want to make a few remarks on what the Hon. Senator Fourie has said. I have heard one single remark made by any representative of the Natives against the Afrikaner nation. The Natives in the Cape remember with pleasure the old friendship that they received from that very great combination of Merriman and Sauer. Sauer was an Afrikaner

The Police And The Africans

In the Senate the other day, Senator W. T. Welsh asked the Minister of Justice "whether his attention ha been drawn to a report that in a case in the Johannesburg Magistrate's Court in which three policemen were acquitted on a charge of culpable homicide, arising from a Native's death, the prosecutor had said that he was "sick and tired" of hearing cases in which Natives alleged assaults by the police who arrested them." The Minister replied that "the prosecutor was called upon for an explanation and has admitted that his remarks were unfortunate and indiscreet."

From the Minister's answer it would seem that because the majority of policemen who had been charged for assaulting Africans are often acquitted, the allegations of assaults, therefore, are only made where there is no defence on the merits." We would like to point out to the Minister that the majority of our people, who come into daily contact with the Police in their search for liquor and in their administration of the pass laws and other restrictive regulations, are ignorant and are, therefore incapable of formulating and presenting evidence in a manner that will secure conviction. It does not seem to us that the failure of the complainants to establish the guilt of the 54 policemen who were alleged to have assaulted them in 1940, really means that assaults by Policemen on Africans do not take place. This failure in the majority of cases is due, as we have already said, to ignorance.

Let us be clearly understood. We do not for a moment suggest that the whole of the police force consists of men who believe in taking the law in their own hands when dealing with Africans. The police in this country are placed in a position which make it difficult for them to humanise their relations with Africans. They are required to put into operation harsh and repressive laws, and they cannot do this without becoming harsh and intolerant and without causing resentment among the African people.

In their search for liquor, the police enter the homes of the Africans in the early hours of the morning and after upsetting everything in these homes, they start demanding passes and poll tax receipts in an atmosphere charged with resentment and antagonism. This naturally leads to a great deal of misunderstanding which invariably results in the police enforcing their authority. So long as there are restrictive laws enforced against Africans there can be no change in the arrogant attitude of the police towards the Africans and the insolent behaviour of the Africans towards the police. When men are treated like beasts they cannot but behave like beasts. This is a fact which cannot be ignored.

Then there is a certain type of policeman who think that his duty is to uphold the prestige of the white race by assaulting Africans. Recently a well known African medical practitioner was assaulted by a constable who told him to always remember that he was black. Another case is that of a policeman who assaulted a blackman because the latter reported a white man with whom he had a dispute over a pound. Both these constables were convicted and fined £5 and £3 respectively.

Because the police have not got laws which send them after the Coloured and Indian communities their relations with these sections of the population are much better and the result is that we hardly hear of assaults on members of these racial groups. And it is our firm belief that if there were no harsh and restrictive laws operating against Africans, there would be hardly any antagonism between the police and our people. There is no getting away from the fact that Africans rightly or wrongly regard the police not as guardians of law and order but as the disturbers of their peace.

The African Business League.

At an emergency meeting over 500 Africans engaged in the carpentry, tailoring, shoemaking and other trades held recently it was unanimously decided to submit the following resolutions for publication-

This meeting affirms its unwaving loyalty to the Government and thanks the Minister of Native Affairs for his Christmas Message.

It respectfully requests the Prime Minister, Ministers of Native Affairs, Justice, Education and Commerce to suspend the operation of the Native Laws Amendment Act, which debars natives from carrying on trades in Urban Areas, for the duration of the war, because it is convinced that such tradesmen are an asset to the White Community, the Government and the Natives.

It decides to circularise every Member of Parliament, Provincial Council and Johannesburg City Council, Institute of Race Relations, Joint Council, Friends of Africa, Chamber of Commerce, National Council of Women, Native Parliamentary Representatives, Advisory Boards and all bodies which are interested in the questions affecting different races in this country, to point out the iniquity of this measure.

It resolves to educate public opinion on this question of Native traders who help the Government by diminishing unemployment among Natives, assist White Traders and wholesalers, because they get all their requirements from those and also help their own people. To debar them from their occupation is contrary to the spirit of the statement recently issued by the Native Affairs Depatment and also the Minister of Native Affairs Christmas message. It is a slap on the face of the thousands of Native parents who educate their children to follow trades and also discouraging to the thousands of students who hope to be able to follow their callings after leaving school. It is a measure calculated to stir up hostility between Whites and Blacks.

Finally it records its standpoint that at this juncture when many African chiefs and organisations are vieing with each other to show their loyalty the execution of such a measure is impolitic at this juncture. On those grounds it appeals to the sense of fair play and justice of the public for their assistance and hope that if South Africa is fighting for a New Order based on justice, tolerance and fair play, it looks Gilbertine to have the means of livelihood of an articulate majority stopped and loyal people being persecuted for no other crime than following their occupations.

Haile Selassie Orders Arrest Of Chiefs Who Aided Italians

By GODFREY H. P. ANDERSON
An English Journalist

CAIRO, EGYPT, June 20.—The restored Emperor Haile Selassie has ordered the arrest of his own son-in-law and two other powerful Ethiopian tribal chieftains for treachery in trafficking with the Italians in their conquest and 5-year occupation of Selassie's kingdom.

Reliable information received from Addis Ababa said the three were Ras Haile Selassie Gugsa, who married the emperor's daughter, Zenab Wark, Ras Seyoum and Ras Hailu.

Reports filtering out of the Ethiopian capital indicated the Lion of Judah had only Ras Hailu in custody. It was considered likely the other two were hiding out in the back country.

Of the three only Ras Seyoum, hereditary ruler of Tigre Province and father-in-law of Ethiopia's crown prince, has escaped the imperial wrath in the past.

Ras Gugsa's family has been on the outs with the ruling clan for more than half a century.

He is a great-grandson of Johannes, who though nominally emperor for 20 years, had to share his power with King Menelek who controlled the rich central provinces.

Her Excellency Commends Work For African Girls

Opening Of Mtuluzele

"We have a special responsibility to our Natives, and especially to those Native women whom we bring into our towns and industrial centres for our service, or who come there under stress of economic conditions," said Her Excellency, Lady Duncan, when she officially opened Mtuluzele, the new home of the non-European Moral Welfare Society at Orlando.

"What is South Africa doing, we ask ourselves, to help those whose instincts would prompt them to lead a self-respecting life; what is she doing to stretch out a helping hand to them in time of trouble?

"This Home is shouldering a little of the responsibility," continued Lady Duncan, "and for this help South Africans can show their gratitude by seeing that its splendid activities are not curtailed in anyway for want of financial support.

"The habits and instincts of generations, in fact of all time, must surely tell. Let us do what we can to recapture for these people the hold they had on a decent life. Let us look on this work of reclamation as our own special responsibility.

"The mission of a Home like this is not merely to help the people who come to it, but to be a kind of beacon light to point public opinion to the existence of conditions which are a danger to the whole community."

Mrs. Wilfrid Parker, president of the board of mangement, was present and the Rev. Father Raynes, C.R. Chairman of the board, thanked Miss E. Elliot, organising secretary and superintendent of the Home, for the great and spirited work she had done for the Home since its small beginning in Sophiatown.

Miss Elliot gave a brief survey of the work of the Home, and spoke of many girls who had come to the Home and who were now leading useful lives.

Mr. Vilakazi, M.A., thanked Her Excellency on behalf of the Natives.

A guard of honour of Wayfarers and Pathfinders lined the steps to the new Home when HerExcellency, who was attended by Miss Helen Adson, and the Mayoress of Johannesburg, Mrs Hector Gray, arrived at Orlando.

NEED FOR LABOUR EXCHANGES

A suggestion of far-reaching importance for Africans was made last week by Senator J. D. Rheinallt Jones. At a conference of the various Reef Municipalities, he proposed that the present system of registration of contracts, otherwise known as the "Pass System," should be abolished and a series of labour exchanges be established throughout the country.

It has been obvious for some years now that the Pass system is obsolete. The Native Affairs Commission has condemned it roundly and pointed out how it has failed. One of the major reasons for this is that its machinery has tended to become a penal system to take action against those who have not paid taxes and also as a means of pushing the unemployed, who possibly might become a charge on the local authorities, on to some other town, who in turn adopt the same policy. It cannot be said that it has served its purpose as a means of controlling labour supplies in the wider sense of the term. Any controlling authority should have as its main purpose the adjustment of the supply and the demand for labour.

Under the existing system, a vicious circle has developed. An unemployed African is not anxious to get in touch with the Pass Office in the hope of finding work. If he is in arrears with his tax payments, action will be taken against him. Should he go there, his payments being in order he receives a pass permitting him to look for work. After the specified time, however, if he has not found a job, he has to leave the area, even though he and his family have established a home.

As a result of this, potential employers tend to look upon the Pass Office as the last resort for finding workers. The result is that they do not ask the office for workers and the latter, knowing this, are not enthusiastic about looking for work through this channel.

Senator Rheinallt Jones has suggested instead that labour exchanges, completely divorced from the taxation side should be established in the towns and townships. Once these were established, it could be made compulsory that all contracts should be registered and at the same time it would be possible to know how many people are seeking work.

At the present time it is impossible to discover with any accuracy, what the labour position is from week to week. Workers cannot find out where there is employment, and at the same time employers do not know where to look for employees. This is particularly noticeable in domestic service, where so many Africans have to depend on walking from door to door for finding work. The housewife who is seeking a servant in most cases has to depend on the chance that one may come to the door. It is clear that such a state of affairs is a grievious waste of time for both parties.

Labour exchanges would do away with all this as their only function would be to deal with employment. Their need was recognised as far back as 1937, when the Urban Areas Act provided for their establishment. But no action was ever taken. It is realised, by employer and worker alike, that the only satisfactory method of both deriving the greatest benefit from employment is some means of bringing their needs together. The International Labour Office at Geneva has laid down that the only adequate means of making the greatest use of workers is through state-controlled labour exchanges and it is to be hoped that either the Government or Municipal authorities will see their way to introduce such a system in this country.

THE PROBLEM OF URBANISED AFRICANS

Last week an important conference of the representatives of the Johannesburg and the Reef municipalities was held in Johannesburg to consider the question of the housing of Africans in the urban areas of the Witwatersrand and that of the influx of Africans from the country districts into the towns. The conference agreed in principle to the establishment of Native Villages, in which Natives might purchase land freehold and build their own houses, subject to all necessary control being exercised by the local authorities concerned under the provisions of the Native Urban Areas Act.

This decision of the conference will be hailed by all interested in the creation of better relations between the races as a step in the right direction. Security of land tenure is one of the pillars of human freedom and progress. If Africans are expected to rise in the scale of civilisation, they must be allowed to secure those things without which progress is impossible. One of these things is the right to purchase land and to own a home. Where there is no security of land tenure there can be no security of family life.

Mr. A. Immink, the chairman of the conference, struck the right note when he said: "Through our missionaries and our Legislature we have indicated to the Native that at some time and in some way he will be allowed to rise in the scale of civilisation and this must be borne in mind." The urbanised African has outgrown tribal conditions and has acquired new ideas of life. Indeed he has been started on the road to civilisation and he cannot and will not be pushed back into the conditions of the past. There are people, no doubt, who view this change in the African life as a menace to European security. They are unable, because of race and colour prejudice, to realise that the advancement of the African is not a menace but an insurance against the forces of barbarism.

The establishment of township where Africans can own properties under freehold title will stimulate progress, will give the people a feeling of security without which no people on earth can aspire for the higher things of life; and will facilitate the development of a sense of responsibility. We are glad to note that the conference recognised the existence of a permanent African population in urban areas and that it did not think that the solution of the problem of urban Africans lies in the repartriation of the people to the reserves but in making them respectable citizens by allowing them to purchase plots where to erect their own homes. The recommendation of the Conference may or may not meet with the approval of the authorities; but that it will be highly appreciated by men and women, be they white or black, who realise the futility of the policy of segregation as embodied in General Hertzog's Acts, goes without saying.

With regard to the influx of Africans into urban areas, the conference did not, in our opinion, pay attention to the factors that are responsible for this drift to towns. It dealt only with the question of control and asked the Government to transfer the administration of the Pass laws to local authorities. We doubt very much if the administration of the pass laws by municipalities would in anyway improve matters. These laws have completely failed to control the movements of the African people. It is not likely that the municipalities will succeed where the Department of Native Affairs is apparently failing. In our opinion, the solution of the migration of Africans to urban areas lies first in the provision of more land in the reserves, the improvement of the economic condition of the reserves and secondly in the employment in urban areas of the urbanised Africans in preference to those of the reserves.

So long as employers of labour are not prepared to use the labour of the urbanised Africans, because they demand higher wages so long will the rural African continue to come to towns. We have hundreds of urbanised Africans who are today without employment because employers of labour prefer that of the rural Africans, whose standard of living is low and who, therefore, are willing to work for low wages. This policy is not only detrimental to the Africans' standard of living but also to the interests of European townspeople. It is responsible for unemployment among civilised Africans and for the influx of men who understand very little of the difficulties and dangers of town life with the result that they become a real menace to the community as a whole.

Promising Outlook

It has always looked, at least from the Bantu point of view, that the disciples of better race relations in this country are fighting a losing battle. Of late, however, it is evident both on the public platform and in the press that councils of wisdom are beginning to assert themselves and a promising outlook is gradually being cleared out of a pitch black night of prejudice.

A recent instance, which no doubt will be acclaimed by most Bantu intellectuals, is that of the Witwatersrand University test vote on invitation to Fort Hare to become a member of the N.U.S.A.S. as reported in the Star of June 13, 1941. By 163 votes to 54 students of the University of the Witwatersrand adopted a motion at a general meeting last Wednesday "that the University recommend that the National Union of South African Students invite the Fort Hare Native College to join the N.U.S.A.S."

This matter is down for discussion at a meeting of the council of the N.U.S.A.S. to be held next month and it was with a view to testing the feelings of local students on the subject that the meeting was called.

The proposer of the motion, Mr D. Etheredge, referred to the non-racial character of the N.U.A.S. and said that it was futile to attempt to study the racial problems of the Union if the point of view of the Native was not adequately represented.

The passing of the motion, he said, would merely imply the recognition of the academic equality of the educated Native. It would not involve the "infiltration" of Natives into social functions, such as dinners and dances. It meant that in discussing the most urgent problem in South Africa European students should hear at first hand what the Natives themselves were thinking.

One of the opponents of the motion suggested that the invitation would not be welcomed by students at Fort Hare.

One of the graduates of Fort Hare who are now studying medicine at the University of the Witwatersrand, supported the motion, saying that he felt that all students at Fort Hare would do likewise. It was hypocrisy, he said, to pretend that the vast Native problem could be seen in its true perspective without first hand information such as educated Natives would be able and willing to give.

The motion was attacked by a number of students, including members of the Afrikaanse Nasionale Studentebond.

A suggestion that the Native College at Fort Hare should be invited to join the Nusas was first made by a student of the Pretoria University in an article in the official organ of the Nusas about 10 years ago: but this is the first time the subject has been seriously discussed by the Nusas.

Mr Rex S. Welsh, president of the Students' Representative Council of the University of the Witwatersrand, said in an interview that the meeting had been described in Die Transvaler as a "fierce struggle between the Afrikaans-speaking students and the negrophilists" and that he had "consistently refused to allow the Afrikaans-speaking students to explain their point of view."

"Many Afrikaans-speaking students voted for the motion," he said. "At least half the speeches were in Afrikaans. Members of the Afrikaanse Nasionale student's bond, who have been described as the storm troopers of the New Order, deliberately attempted to obstruct the orderly progress of the debate.

"The charge of negrophilism is too fatuous to refute. I need only refer to the fine example set by the Government in granting bursaries to Native students for the study of medicine at the University of the Witwatersrand. The action taken by the student body is merely in accordance with that lead and in accordance with the best traditions of the university."

Villages For Urban Africans?

The recommendation that the municipalities of the Witwatersrand should form a co-ordinating Native Affairs Advisory Committee, on which the municipalities of Johannesburg and the Reef would be represented for the purpose of considering co-ordinated Native housing and administration, was passed by resolution at a conference of representatives of Johannesburg and the Reef municipalities in Johannesburg.

The conference met to consider the position regarding Native townships in and adjacent to towns in the Witwatersrand area, the question of the influx of Natives into European areas and the control of this influx.

Representatives of the Union Natives Affairs Department, the Union Department of Public Health, and other bodies concerned with Native administration and Native welfare were present.

The conference also agreed in principle to the establishment of Native "villages," in which Natives might purchase land free hold and build their own houses, subject to all necessary control being exercised by the local authorities concerned under the provisions of the Native Urban Areas' Act.

It was decided to recommend to the Reef municipalities the enforsement of the resolution concerning the establishment of these "villages," and to ask the Government department concerned to give the matter early and favourable consideration.

The conference agreed in principle to representations again being made to the union Department of Native Affairs that the full administration of the Native pass laws be vested in the local authorities, "especially as this conference is convinced that the control of the pass laws should not be divorced from the provision of Native housing, the responsibility for which already fails on local authorities."

Mr. A. Immink, chairman of the Non-European and Native Affairs Committee of the Johannesburg City Council, was elected chairman of the conference, which was opened by the Mayor of Johannesburg, T. P. Gray.

The chairman said the conference was concerned with the influx from farms to towns of Natives without the means of earning a livelihood. There had arisen a class of Native in the towns who had thrown aside Native ideas and taken to Europeans ones.

"Through our missionaries and our Legislature we have indicated to the Native that in some time and in some way he will be allowed to rise in the scale of civilisation, and this must be borne in mind."

Many Natives in the Johannesburg municipality were prepared to buy their own houses. The case frequently arose of Natives who were growing too old to work. They had paid rent for their dwelling places for many years and had nothing to show for that money. They contented that if they had homes of their own their children could live with them and support them, but otherwise they had nobody to live with and nobody to look after them, and they became pauperised.

The plea of such Natives to be allowed to buy homes could not be thrown aside. It was for this reason that the Johannesburg City Council had suggested the purchase of a site for a location where Natives would be able to own plots of land. The proposed site consisted of 6 000 acres; and if the Government's permission could be obtained for the establishment of a Native "village" it would be a boon to the Natives of Johannesburg.

Native Question :

By the Hon. Dewdney W. Drew, M.A.

Whites expect obeisance and service from all the Natives

Natives suffer various restrictions on their liberty

Natives are by no means lacking in respect to White womanhood

A European lady travelling in Basutoland without escort would probably be safer there than in England under the like conditions.

For the benefit of our readers we reproduce an extract from a pamphlet, on the Native question written by the Hon. Dewdney W. Drew, M.A., who was a member of the Legislative Council, under the Crown Colony Government in the Orange River Colony. Mr. Drew is one of the leading South African journalists and his observations on the subject are very interesting. This problem is by far the greatest South Africa has to solve, and the questions advanced below are on broad lines on which the matter should be reviewed. The extract reads as follows :—" Most Europeans adopt towards the Natives the privilege of an aristocrat—not always with the manners of an aristocrat. Many whites expect as a matter of course obeisance and service from all the Natives, and think it perfectly natural to cuff and correct them when they make mistakes. A resentment is apt to draw down severe punishment. In the law courts the Natives do not get the same justice as the whites. A Native convicted of an offence gets, in the first place, the punishment which a whiteman would get and something extra for the colour of his skin—often lashes. The bias of white juries in trying Natives charged with offences against whites is such as to have brought the jury system into disrepute, and become the chief argument among lawyers for its entire abolition. The Natives suffer various restrictions on their liberty; they may not use the side-walks, nor visit a friend's house after a certain hour at night, nor move abroad, or even exist anywhere in this " white man's country without a pass " All the police, if not all the Europeans, have the right to arrest and search them, and the exercise of this right is made sometimes a means of shamefully molesting their women. In one Colony the Natives are not allowed to own land, and in another they can only do so under virtually prohibitive conditions. If the tenant families residing from a farm grow beyond a certain limited number—three or five—the surplus are liable to be driven off by the police. As a rule only the worse paid forms of work are permitted to the Natives, and even this are grudged them. A legislator rises in one Colony to move that all the Native messengers and other Native servants in the Government offices be immediately discharged and be replaced by poor whites. In another paper the public and the public chorus with joy hear that the C.S.A.R. has been able to reduce its Native staff, and hopes ultimately to get rid of them all. There are municipalities in which Natives, if they drive a cab, have to pay a higher licence than a white man, and in which they are not permitted to make bricks unless they do so for a white employer. In these municipalities they are not allowed to educate their children above the age of sixteen, nor may keep their daughters at home under their own protection after that age, except the girls find positions in service, in which case they may sleep under the roof of their parents if the distance is not to great. And, of course Natives pay relatively a higher taxation than the whites. Articles which they use, but are little bought by whites, are marked for special custom duties. For instance the white farmers' machinery is duty free, but in several Colonies the Native hoes pay an ad valorem tax of 25 per cent. So of the shawls; the customs officer is content to take 12½ per cent on the kind used by Europeans, but when he comes to the Native shawl, the duty is again 25 per cent. In addition to these stiff indirect taxes the Native pays direct taxes amounting to one-sixth part of their average annual wage. Not only they, but even the most respectable coloured people, are in some places not allowed to ride trams or walk in the parks, or attend public sports or evening concerts, or even follow a deceased white, though he should be their own fatner, to his last resting place in the European cemetry. As to laws, they realise, in all the Colonies but one, Wellington's great ideals for the people, by having nothing to do with them except obey them. In addition to this treatment, varying from pin pricks to oppression, they are mostly referred to in the Press, in public speeches, and private conversation, with words of opprobrium and contempt as "niggers" and "black brutes." The occasional outbreaks of a few, usually maddened with the drink which Europeans have sold to them, are put to the credit of the whole race. Those who, when they hear of a case of rape, talk about the black peril, forget apparently that it is largely the result of bad environment. In their own country the Natives are by no means lacking in respect to white womanhood. A European lady travelling in Basutoland without escort would probably be safer there than in England under the like conditions. The Hon. H. Burton, Attorney General of the Cape Colony, reports after visiting the Transkei, that in that great reserve, where ten thousand Europeans are surrounded by a million Natives, the molestation of white women is a thing unheard of ..... Obviously the treatment which the Native gets is not on the whole such as he can be expected to like, and the drift of things appears to be towards severer pass laws and the stricker denial of property rights. In one of our Parliaments a Commission has just reported in favour of breaking up the reserves and bringing the Natives under a system resembling slavery."

Rly. Seating Accommodation

THOSE who travel on the Lagos to Kano and Port Harcourt to Kano trains, generally, spend two to three nights on the trains before alighting at their destinations and those who travel from one terminus to the other, bear the brunt of the ordeal. Apart from a few individuals who travel in the Second and First Class coaches, the bulk of the passengers travel Third Class, so that the greater part of the Railway revenue comes from this source. MAR 3 - 1941

And, while these Third Class coaches are in themselves not suitable, from the point of view of the number of nights that some passengers have to spend in them, the material used in building the seats do not give comfort to those who undertake the journey to long distances. MAR 3 - 1941

Sometimes, passengers are compelled to undertake the journey for days on end, sitting on the floor of the carriage. The following example will explain our point of contention: A man travelling from, say, Lagos to Port Harcourt, would board the train earlier than the man who might be travelling from Ibadan to Enugu, and, naturally, the former chooses the best part of the carriage and deposits his luggage and other things there. East Nigeria Guardian

In this way, he assumes control of the seat on which he sits. He would sometimes leave his boxes, portmanteau and other things not under the seats or on the racks provided, but where his fellow passengers should sit, thus causing some inconvenience to others. We concede to people the right to keep by their side receptacles that contain food for consumption on the journey, but there can be no doubt that going beyond this point is most unjustifiable Port Harcourt

This sort of inconvenience is heightened when, on night fall, people throw themselves across the seats, and sleep, to the utter disregard of those who board the trains later in the night, a fact which has often led to altercations and free fighting. Nigeria MAR 3 - 1941

It is our opinion that the question of improving the conditions of travelling in the Third Class Coaches is necessary, and we are therefore inviting the attention of the Railway Authorities to the problem, accordingly.

The Pass Laws

The condemnation of the pass law system in the House of Assembly by Mr. H. A. Fagan, Ex-Minister of Native Affairs, has again brought this burning question to the fore. All right-thinking Europeans will agree with Mr. Fagan when he says: "Apart from the fact that the pass law system does not achieve its purpose of facilitating the tracing of Natives, it is regarded by Natives as unfair discrimination and is frequently the cause of their appearance in court." It is no exaggeration to say that the majority of the African people first become acquainted with prison life through their contravention of pass regulations. It is the pass law that drives many of our people to crime; it fills our prisons with men and boys and even women who, if this iniquitous law had not been in existence, would not perhaps APR 1 2 1941 even been near the doors of prison.

The pass law, instead of making our people law-abiding, hard-working and submissive servants of the White race, has brutalised them and turned them into thieves and burglars, robbers and murderers. It has made them think that prisons were not built for the elimination of crime but only for the imprisonment of black people, that courts were not established for the maintanance of justice but for the purpose of persecuting Africans and that the Police were employed solely to put fear into the minds of black folks. Many people perhaps will not believe that what we say is exactly what the majority of our people think. They will think that we are making a mountain out of a mole. But those who are intimately connected with Native Affairs, not as officials, but as social workers and preachers of the gospel, know that what we say is actually what is taking place as the result of the operation of the pass laws.

Can any one deny that it is in the Transvaal, and on the Witwatersrand, where crime among Africans has become a disturbing feature of our social life? Can any one deny that it is here, where the pass laws are rigorously enforced, that hooliganism has become rampant and that the relations between Africans and the Police are anything but friendly and peaceful? In the Cape and Natal where the pass laws do not operate, Africans have not got out of hand and are not hostile to the Police as they are in this Province. The reason for this is not far to seek. In the Cape and Natal, Africans do not unnecessarily come into contact with the police; they are not rounded up in the streets of the towns and in urban locations for passes; they move freely from one place to another without fear of having to be locked up in a pick-van for no other reason than that they were found without passes.

But in this Province, the Police, whether they like it or not, are required by law to round up Africans in the streets and in urban locations and search for passes. The effect of this constant coming into contact with Africans upon the minds of the police can have no other results than that of hostility. The Police have come to regard every African as a potential criminal, while the Africans look upon every policeman as a potential enemy of their race. The Pass Laws, as Mr. Fagan has pointed out, have failed to achieve the purpose for which they were enacted. Instead they have set aflame the embers of racial hatred, which this country cannot afford to perpetuate without creating a situation fraught with disastrous consequences.

We are glad to find a man, who recently was a Minister of Native Affairs, urging the Government to tackle the problem of the pass laws without delay. These laws have been condemned by nearly every responsible European in the country, including officials of the departments of Native Affairs and Justice. As far back as 1919, a Committee consisting of officials of the above-mentioned departments was appointed to investigate into the working of the pass laws, and it recommended their abolition and their substitution by "a life-long document" which could only be demanded by a responsible member of the Police Force for the purpose of identification in the event of a crime having been committed.

Unfortunately these recommendations have not been put into operation, and in the meantime laws have been made containing pass regulations which, in our opinion, have made the position worse than it was in 1919.

Mr. Fagan's appeal has stirred our hearts, and we hope that the Minister of Native Affairs, who also condemned the pass laws recently and who also agree with Mr. Fagan "that the present pass law system, especially in the Transvaal, causes a great deal of inconvenience and dissatisfaction" will take advantage of this appeal and remove from the life of our race this badge of degradation which constantly reminds us of the days of slavery.

Selassie Orders Son-in-Law Held

CAIRO, Egypt, June 20.—The restored Emperor Haile Selassie has ordered the arrest of his own son-in-law and two other powerful Ethiopian tribal chieftains for treachery in trafficking with the Italians in their conquest and five-year occupation of Selassie's kingdom. JUN 21 1941

Reliable information received from Addis Ababa said the three were Ras Haile Selassie Gugsa, who married the Emperor's daughter, Zenab Wark, Ras Seyoum and Ras Hailu.

Reports filtering out of the Ethiopian capital indicated the Lion of Judah had only Ras Hailu in custody. It was considered likely the other two were hiding out in the back country.

Of the three only Ras Seyoum, hereditary ruler of Tigre province and father-in-law JUN 21 1941 Ethiopia's crown prince, has escaped the imperial wrath in the past.

Ras Gugsa's family has been on the outs with the ruling clan for more than half a century.

Parliament Accepts Feetham Resolutions

Benefits For African Workers

BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.

WITH the Easter recess in the offing, and the end of the session in view, Parliament has been clearing a good deal of work out of the way.

But although the grind of making and listening to speeches has been going on for nearly two and a half months without intermission, and members might have been expected to be tired and inclined to let things slip through, nothing has, in fact, been allowed to pass without careful and searching scrutiny. For the best part of two days, Mr. Hofmeyr had to listen to pointed criticism of the Bill which covers his new taxation proposals for this coming year and only after making some concessions and a good many explanations did he succeed in getting his proposal to go into Committee and the Bill accepted.

Feetham Resolutions Adopted

THE most important gain of the week, and indeed one of the few important gains of the Session so far as the interests of Non-Europeans are concerned, was the adoption of the Feetham resolutions. These resolutions make provision for the occupation and ownership of land by Asiatics within the area in which the Gold Law operates, that is, roughly, on the Witwatersrand. In that area, in the past, there have been limitations on such occupation and ownership which did not apply outside that area. In 1938, Mr. Stuttaford, attempted to put these resolutions through the House but suddenly took fright at the opposition of a very new member of his own party, Mr. Ben Schoeman of Fordsburg, and dropped the attempt at once, to the great consternation of all those who, interested in the Non-European cause, were under the impression that the Government was pledged to put these resolutions through. Since then, the Asiatics on the Witwatersrand have been kept in a state of suspense, their position having been regularised in 1939 for two years only. This year, the Act on which that regularisation depended was due to lapse, and something had to be done in the matter. The Government, consequently, wisely decided to carry through the original plan of endorsing the Feetham resolutions, and either Mr. Schoeman is not so dangerous in Opposition as in the Government party, or Mr. Lawrence is less easily scared than Mr. Stuttaford; at any rate, the resolutions were carried by 61 votes to 40.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BILL REACHES ASSEMBLY

The week has also been notable for the introduction of the long promised and anxiously awaited Workmen's Compensation Bill.

This is a very contentious measure so far as the country is concerned. The private insurance companies are very much opposed to the central principle of the Bill which provides for the taking over of the actual work of insuring from those companies by the Government itself. Within the House, however, there is evidently to be a good deal of agreement which may help the Bill through without the aid of the "guillotine." I expect Mr. Madeley is hoping devoutly that it will be so, for the use of the guillotine again in a labour measure will drop his reputation another degree, about which neither he nor his colleagues could be too happy.

The ground of agreement is to be the increased benefits injured workers are to receive as a result of the reduced cost of administering a state fund. Profits now made by private companies are to be used for this purpose of increasing benefits.

African workers who sustain injury in the course of their work will also benefit under this Bill, the present awards to them being doubled. Actually this concession does not satisfy us since there is still no provision for pensions for permanently disabled Africans as there is for permanently disabled Europeans. We shall make attempts to get the Government to amend the Bill in this regard at the committee stage, but as there is a general feeling in the Department of Labour that the Bill makes a great advance for African workers, the prospects of our success are not very good.

Miners Phthisis Bill

On Easter eve, Colonel Stallard proposed the second reading of his Miners Phthisis Amendment Bill As I have already noted this Bill also provides certain improvements in respects of benefits for African miners who contract phthisis. Here again, however, we should like to see the pension principle established as in the case of Europeans for those who develop the secondary stage of this dread disease and shall press for the recognition of that principle.

Gleanings From Life

(By Jo The Cow)

Non-European United Front

We notice that Africans on the Rand are going crazy about the non-European United Front and we have it on good authority that at some of the meetings they become so impressed with the bombastic rhetorical flourishes of their Asiatic "leaders" that they take their Asiatic "leaders" shoulder high and in great frenzy march through streets singing "Nkosi Sikelela."

The Bozo Club has been watching developments in this direction with concentrated attention. Bozo members know very well that they have quite a varied selection of "friends" — "friends" who come to them with a variety of motives. There are some "friends" who come to "civilise" the Bozo, there are others who come to make themselves experts on Bozo affairs and thereby hope to gain quick prominence in the eyes of the public. There are other "friends" who will boast of the great work they are doing for members of the Bozo but will not budge an inch when we say they must give Bozo members an opportunity to show the world that they too have the ability to do things. And then of course there are "friends" who only come to the African to fleece him. Some come for the purpose of using him to pull chestnuts out of the fire for them. All these are our "friends," respectable members of the Bozo Club, and as long as we are ignorant we shall continue to admit and entertain these "friends" among us.

A newly-found "friend" is this non-European United Front. We have not as yet classified it. We had grown accustomed to the idea that Asiatics and Coloureds regarded themselves as superior to the African — at least politically, socially and economically. We had also grown accustomed to the idea that these groups feel that they would not contaminate themselves by mixing with "Natives" and evidence of this abounded even in picture houses etc., for non-Europeans where there were especial seats for "Natives" alone. In those picture houses no "Native" — he may be a Master of Arts from Yale— dare seat himself in seats for Coloureds and Asiatics. If he has the temerity to sit on those "sacred" seats he is pulled by the tails of his coat and drawn to where "Natives" belong. In some picture houses he actually dare not even poke his nose at the door — he may be a Doctor, versed in the Laws and Learning from Cambridge for that matter! He will be frankly told that "Natives are not admitted." We ask: Where and how does the non-European Front come in here? Are all these things meant to convince us that the sponsors of the Front mean good for us too?

Even in commercial and other business dealings you find the same impudent contempt for the African. His other Non European compatriots own large business establishments and some of them do business solely among Africans and behind the counter you will not find a single African. The only job good enough for a "Native," they will tell you, is to disinfect and keep clean the sewerage system. What sayeth the non-European United Front to this?

We are segregated to "Native" areas and we willingly agree to live there and not to penetrate into other people's economic spheres or residential areas. We buy the land, pay our rates, establish our own business concerns, and our "friends" will be the first to protest that it is not good for the "Native" to be allowed to do business among his own fellowmen! Tell us, you people who have attained proficiency in arguing along lines laid down by Marxian Dialecticalism, where is UNITY in that attitude toward us? Where is the UNITY of the Non-European UNITED Front? Where are common interests which are often referred to with so much heat and bombast by our Asiatic self-constituted "leaders"?

We agree Natal at one time was invaded with the absurd propaganda of those who wish to take advantage of the African's numbers to haul hot chestnuts out of the fire for them.

The African will be wise to remember that his numbers always provide a good shield for the political opportunist who does not want to be in the actual fight himself because he is either too week, or too much afraid to fight single-handed. The African is quite, quite enough to fight his battles alone. His weakness today is due to no other cause than that because of his ignorance he is as yet unable to co-ordinate his resources and organise himself as a useful and intelligent citizen should in a Democracy.

The Non-European United Front will only lead the African to greater disaster where he will find himself left in the lurch, his so called friends having abandoned him. If Coloureds and Asiatics fight against discrimination by the European why do they allow those dicriminations to exist among themselves and also against the African?

And of course Africans will flock even to those picture-houses where they are daily insulted — with their Learning!

Medical Training for Africans.

What is Basutoland Doing?

The recent announcement of the grand decision of the University of the Witwatersrand to grant facilities for a full medical course to a limited number of non-Europeans commencing this year led to further announcement of the prompt decision of the Native Trust Fund to grant five scholarships to those students who have passed their first year Bachelor of Science course at Fort Hare and another announcement of ten one year bursaries to deserving students who have satisfied the conditions required for admission to the Pre Medical course at Fort Hare. The granting of facilities for a full medical course for Africans at the University of Witwatersrand goes a long way in solving the problem of health in the reserves and territories inhabited mostly by Natives where the inadequacy of medical practitioners is responsible for high mortality among the Africans and cause difficulties in the way of attempts to stamp out superstition and witchcraft which are inherently found amongst the backward Africans. The fees for tuition and other expenses incidental to cover the whole course of six years are beyond the means of the average African and unless the students are assisted by such scholarships as are granted by the Native Trust Fund and the Bunga very few, if any, will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity.

We have further been informed of a number of students who have graduated at Fort Hare as Bachelors of Science who have taken advantage of the Native Trust Fund scholarships and have gone to the University of the Witwatersrand for the medical course, who, we are confident, will help make the experiment a success and lead to increased facilities in this connexion. Basutoland so far enjoys the credit of being a pioneer Territory in which the Administration tackled the problem of the health of the Native inhabitants much earlier than other states by establishing Government hospitals in which Africans received treatment either free of charge or at least at a nominal fee of 6d which was later increased to 1/- for admission as in-patients. The benefits received from the existing hospitals were so obvious that applications for the erection of hospitals or clinics for medical treatment in the out-lying parts of the Territory and in the mountain areas were made by the chiefs. At one time, about ten years ago pressure was brought to bear upon the Administration by the chiefs and the Basuto through the Basutoland Council that deserving students be given scholarships for medical training overseas and the then Resident Commissioner actually promised that should there be any such students deserving to go across for medical training after passing through The S.A.N. College at Fort Hare the Administration might consider granting such scholarships. Owing to the heavy expense involved in the project, however, it appears that none has, so far attempted to take advantage of this offer.

Now that facilities have been granted in the Union where the Native Trust Fund and the Bunga, by way of encouraging African Students to be trained as Medical Practitioners, and to bring about the solution of the acute problem of health among the Africans have taken the lead it had been expected that the Basutoland Administration would take the initiative and follow this example by granting three or four such scholarships each year for the training of Basuto young men. The need of fully trained Basuto Medical practitioners cannot be over emphasized. The recent difficulty experienced as a result of the loss by death of the late Dr. Motebang at the outpost of Mokhotlong, to fill up the vacancy should have been sufficient to make the Administration the wiser and to take advantage of the offered facilities. That the demand for African Medical men is great in this territory can be seen from the fact that the cry from the chiefs and members is voiced almost every year in the Basutoland Council for Medical officers or the establishment of hospitals in the mountain area. One has only to take up a copy of the hansard of the recent sessions of the Council and look through its pages to be convinced whether what we have stated here is true or otherwise. It might be asked whether the finances of the Territory would make it possible for such scholarships to be contemplated and in reply we have the boldness to say the recent years surpluses together with the improved system of tax collection introduced by the late Paramount Chief Seeiso are enough to drive away any fears in this connection.

Let us hope therefore that if the Administration have not taken the matter into their consideration they will at least do so in the interests of the Territory, or if they are too slow to move let one chief or an enthusiastic member of the Council bring up the subject as a motion for discussion in the next session of the Council.

Training Of Natives I

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will then take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of overseas, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students for those courses are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P. O. Alice, C. P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared hereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the Matriculation Examination, and after that to take up and pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for funds for the award of five scholarships on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum tenable for one year, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

(2) Natal.
(3) Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West.
(4) Transkei.
(5) Transvaal.

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

elsewhere. Usually this involves employment at neighbouring European farms against their will and under conditions anything but modern and civilised, as in England put it.

Our chief complaint with the Natives refused permission to rent lots on Trust farms is that they are robbed of domiciliary privileges they have virtually inherited by being born on the farms concerned. They know of no other place where they can claim to be received. It was indiscretion on the part of the former White farmers to allow large accumulations of Native families on their properties, but we would submit that the Trust appropriated these farms with the buildings, improvements and Natives thereon, irrespective of whether some of the latter were not actual servants. The responsibility of finding a home for all is with the present owner—the Trust. It is hard to understand how refusal to register any of them can be justified, except for the purpose, though inconceivable, of forcing farm labour.

NARROW AND LIBERAL NOTIONS OF SEGREGATION

IN the current issue of "The Race Relations News" there is some interesting criticism of some comment in "De Oude Emigrant" (Dec. 13—16, 1938)which the Afrikaanse Nasionale Studentebond published as a special daily paper in connection with the Voortrekker Centenary celebrations at the Voortrekker monument outside Pretoria. Professor T. J. Hugo of Pretoria University, published certain articles dealing with future Native policy in the Boerestaat. He expounded the nationalist policy of segregation. There he emphasised certain points as follows:

(a) The sharp disparity between the cultures of the European and the Black races with the latter's non-Christian character;

(b) The impossibility of fusing the two cultures. "Neither wants to fuse with the other, either by interbreeding or acculturation. To attempt either sort of fusion is to do a grievous wrong to both races and cultures." Professor Hugo further maintains that, To "Europeanise" an African is to alienate him from his own people, from the traditions of his people, from their "soul." Even Christianity, if adopted by the Bantu, must become what their minds make of it, according to their understanding of it.

He concludes that it is unfair and impracticable to try to put both races "in the same kraal," and that segregation is the only way out.

In the professor's statements we see many weaknesses. Where the black and white sexes are associated in conditions of work that make their association undesirable, we believe that both races would rightly desire a form of segregation. But we do not think that segregation should go much farther. We believe that the inspiring and enlightening influences of education and Christianity should be equally open to both races, and that any race differences of outlook should not be allowed to debar the African from full participation in the benefits of those enlightening influences.

We think also that while the African should have his own townships, his own family life, and get all the benefits of municipal services and control, his conduct should be regulated by those magistrates and judges who know the special qualities of his character. Mr. J. Lewin at the council meeting of the Institute last January spoke of the special penal reform needs of Africans. He said

"We should aim at keeping as many people out of prison as we possibly can. It is a popular fallacy to suppose that simply by putting men in prison we can reduce the amount of crime. No fewer than 157,716 people were sent to prison in 1939. Of these, 12,686 (or over 1,000 a month) were Non-Europeans under the age of 21. One of the major reasons is that there are not enough reformatories and far too few probation officers to cope with the situation. Yet the success of the Diepkloof Reformatory on the Rand is evidence of what can be accomplished by more modern methods, to which Natives will respond as readily as others.

"The Prison Visitors' Boards are the main link between prisoners and public opinion. The present Boards might well be increased in numbers and their functions expanded. Stronger Boards could do much to present the problems that face the Prison Administration to the general public and to secure from it, and from organised social welfare agencies, the constructive assistance that is so necessary in the task of rehabilitation."

Our own view of segregation is simple. We believe that every opportunity for advancement that is open to the European should be open to the African; but we do not deem it desirable that the African and European should mix the races and thus encourage a hybridism which must be repugnant to European and African alike.

African Nursing Staff

MAR 13 1941 GUARDIAN PORT HARCOURT

In a memorandum dated November 29, 1939, it was stated that "it might be possible to insert provision for such a post in the 1939-40 estimates." Now then, no such action has since been taken, and it may be right to state, therefore, that Government has yet to redeem its promise to the Nursing Staff. That being so it is indeed a matter for much concern to note that no provision for the creation of such a post is contemplated. Are we now to take it that Government does not, after all, think it advisable to create a post of Chief Nurse, or that it is going to break its solemn promise to those engaged in the Nursing profession?

GUARDIAN

We submit that such a step will be discouraging; we submit that whatever might have been responsible for the present change of attitude by Government, the necessity for the creation of such a post cannot be easily overlooked. Nurses, like Clerks, who have "Chiefs," as well as other people engaged in the various branch of Government service, have a difficult task to perform, and there is no reason, therefore, why, even in wartime, they should not be encouraged. We therefore appeal to the responsible Authorities to be so good as to review the position.

So. African Gets Fine For Bathing On 'White' Beach

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—(ANP)—While Great Britain is ostensibly fighting a war in behalf of democracy, discrimination and segregation are still the order of the day in her South African colonies. Recently Dan Kareise, a young native, was fined five shillings, or five days' imprisonment, for bathing on a part of the ocean front that had been reserved for Europeans.

The judge, in passing sentence, said, that he was acting in accordance with the laws as approved by both houses of parliament which "must have given due consideration to the regulations, and it is not the function of the court to say that they had acted in an unreasonable way."

The African And His Education

Sir,

Allow me a space in your honourable paper to express my mind to the pulic.

There is a night school opened in one of the far Eastern locations where the Non-Europeans are allowed to pursue Junior and Senior Certificate courses for a period of two and three years accordingly. There were approximately twenty five students enrolled at the beginning of the year and more after the first quarter. This was comparatively encouraging indeed.

My second visit to the school was at the beginning of this month. A coloured gentleman, who is one of the staff members, told me that the roll had increased to sixty, including only three ladies, but most astonishingly this month, the roll has decreased to fifteen without a single lady included. Just imagine the fall in four months only. That is incredibly low. We expected these Africans to progress, but they did so for a little while, and afterwards retrogressed.

Rome was not built in one day. We cannot expect a convulsive rise in education, as we cannot also expect it, when we admire our neighbours, who seem to do well without it. Their examples are deceptive. If we look at education in terms of money, we will never attain it. Pleasure comes after sorrows. Do not let the supposed good in your illiterate pal, hinder you from progress. I say so because that is more like admiring a golden ring in a pig's nose.

I finally give advice to everyone of us, Africans, to make his or her ends meet, with some kind of education in him or her. Whoever is wise, will conceive that "education al ties are the strongest of all ties."

Native Music

FOR some time past, Yoruba musicians have been conducting researches and investigating the possibilities of using Native music in religious ceremonies and Church songs. As a result, they composed songs, hymns and anthems that are good and interprete African feelings better than European music. Although some of these research workers are dead, others still living are carrying on the work with vigour and determination. Among the research workers may be mentioned the late A. K. Ajisafe, His Lordship the Rt. Rev. A. B. Akinyele, Mr T. K. E. Phillips, Mr E. Ogunmefun, etc.

The music composed by these men has been used by some Churches, but we do not believe that it has met with the response which it deserves. Some Churches either totally ignore it or use it only sparingly, with the result that Native music, like almost everything Native, has been given a cold reception. Now that the Rt. Rev. L. G. Vining, head of the Anglican Church in the Diocese of Lagos, has pleaded for more use of African music for Church services, we hope that the appeal will not be ignored.

So far as we can judge, the congregations in many Churches prefer African music, but they are only waiting for the encouragement of those at the head, Bishops, Priests and Catechists, before they can make full use of them. In some parts of the Niger Diocese, for instance, the inclination to use Native music, which no doubt spreads from the Western Provinces, has gained such a strong root that many Churches have taken to it with gusto.

When the Synod of the Niger Diocese meets, and when again the meeting of the Church Council of Nigeria takes place, we expect those in charge to lift the ban, if any there is, which forbids Churches from using African music in worshipping God. We also expect that in the near future the Roman Catholics too will fall in line.

African Judges

ALTHOUGH the Nigerian Government has shown a disposition in recent years to appoint brilliant African Barristers to the post of Magistrates, there appears to be some reluctance at the idea of appointing Africans to the Judgeship. At the moment, there is not a single African Judge in the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria, which is indeed a sad disappointment, seeing that there are capable Barristers and/or Magistrates who can be appointed to this post. Elsewhere in West Africa, the position is different, for there are African Magistrates in addition to a Judge.

These Magistrates and/or Judges are discharging their obligations with satisfaction and unless it can be proved that they possess such qualities as are rare in this country (which we very much doubt), there can be no justification for this seemingly indifference to the claims of Nigerian Barristers, as far as appointment to the Judgeship is concerned. The question of integrity is out of the point in this case, for if, as Magistrates, Nigerian Barristers could work conscientiously, then there is no doubting the fact that they could give the same margin of satisfaction as Judges.

Information reaching us shows that in many districts and provinces, for that matter, cases are accumulated in such large numbers that presiding Judges find it extremely difficult to deal with them at a single sitting. Adjournment, as a consequence, is thus often resorted to, and great inconvenience is invariably caused to those who may have cases pending in the Courts for trial. Not only this. There is the question of the uneasiness of mind to consider which is often caused to most people who have a case to answer either to the Crown or to their opponents.

To our mind, the appointment of more Judges as well as Magistrates is the only feasible solution to this problem, and we call upon His Honour the Chief Justice of Nigeria to seriously consider the advisability of recommending to His Excellency the Governor the urgent need for more African Magistrates as also the appointment of, at least, two African Judges. After all, Nigeria is a much more bigger Colony than the Gold Coast, and if an African Judge in that Colony could even act as a Chief Justice, then there can be no justification for the reverse to be the case in Nigeria.

Mr F. Roosevelt Says No Race Is Superior To The Others

LONDON (BM).—President F. D. Roosevelt's historic declaration has met with wide approval among leaders of [illegible] movements in India and the Colonies.

Particularly, the President's preference for the Nazi theory of racial supremacy, which is interpreted among Indians and West Indians, here, as also an attack upon the doctrine of the "White Man's Burden," which has been used as a mask for imperialistic aggression in Asia and Africa by European Powers.

"We believe that the rallying cry of the dictators, their boasting about 'the Master Race,' will prove to be all stuff and nonsense," declared Mr Roosevelt.

"There never has been, is not now, and never will be, any race of people fit to serve as masters over their fellow men.

"The world has no use for any nation which, because of its size and its military might, asserts the right to goose-step to world power over the bodies of other nations and other races.

"We believe that any nationality, no matter how small, has the inherent right to its nationhood.

"We believe that the men and women of such nations, of no matter what size, can, through the process of peace, serve themselves and serve the world by protecting the common man's security, can improve the standards of healthful living and provide markets for manufacture and for agriculture.

"Through that kind of peaceful service, every nation can increase its own happiness, banish the terrors of war, and abandon man's inhumanity to man."

Declaring that freedom was the ultimate stake, the President said:

"A few weeks ago, I spoke of Freedom — Freedom of speech and expression, Freedom of every man to worship God in his own way, Freedom from wrong, Freedom from fear — they are the ultimate stake.

"They may not be immediately attainable throughout the world, but humanity does move towards these glorious ideals through democratic justice.

"If we fail, if Democracy is superseded by slavery, then those four freedoms, or even the mention of them, will become forbidden things.

"Centuries will pass before they can be revived.

"By winning now, we strengthen the meaning of these freedoms.

"We increase the structure of mankind.

"We strengthen the dignity of human life."

Commenting on these noble sentiments of the President, a spokesman of the Indian National Congress says that Britain cannot endorse these principles enunciated by the leader of American Democracy and still refuse India's claim for Democracy and Self-Government.

The time has come when England must choose between the doctrine of racial domination — the British over the coloured races, or the principle of self determination for the Colonial peoples, he concluded.

The African National Anthem

REVERENT AND CORRECT RENDERING

Sir,

At its recent conference held at Bloemfontein, the Federation of African Teachers' Association discussed the question of the various editions of the African National Anthem: "Nkosi Sikelel' i-Afrika", on the market, and resolved that the edition of the anthem obtainable from the Lovedale Bookstore at 6d. a copy be the recognized one. The Federation desires to call the attention of Church [illegible] Departments, Schools, African organisations as well as Africans in general to this resolution which has been actuated by no other motive than that of preserving and maintaining the correct rendering of this national piece of music.

The Education Departments are specially requesetd to bring the above resolution to the notice of all their African Schools and even, as far as possible, to supply each of them with a copy of the above-mentioned edition to teach to the children. Translations into languages other than Xhosa have been made. To this the Federation raises no objection as long as the recognised harmony is faithfully adhered to by all Africans in the different parts of the country.

The Federation also desires to bring to the notice of all concerned the importance of never forgetting the fact that Nkosi Sikelel' i-Afrika (God bless Africa) is our national prayer for divine benediction upon Africa, and as such ought to be sung with due reverence. Ministers, Teachers, Leaders and all who are in positions of authority are earnestly requested to use their influence in the direction of having this an hem rendered reverently at all gatherings at which it is deemed appropriate to sing it.

The following are the officers of the Federation of African Teachers'

Association: Messrs. Z. K. Matthews, M.A., LL.B., President (Fort Hare); A. E. Mpapele, Vice-President (Lemana); D. G. S. Mtimkulu, M.A. Treasurer (Adams) and J. M. Nhlapo, B.A. Secretary (Wilberforce).

AFRICANS OR NATIVES

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. CECIL G. MAGCWEBEBA, Cape Town, writes: Sir, I read in the "Umteteli" of May 10 a letter by Mr. J. Z Sehloho, of Swaziland. He writes about our being called Natives, Bantu and Kaffirs, and seems in my opinion to be very ready to be called Native or Bantu. Let me point out to all Africans, who may still be willing to be called Natives or Bantu, that these two names given to us are really out of order.

In the whole world as it stands are people, and these are races, all called after their countries. And we here are not called by our racial name but are called by landless names. Who in Africa would point out Native, Bantu or Kaffir land on any map of Africa?

This is our Fatherland we do not have to choose a racial name for us. It is there that God put us in Africa and He called the land Africa, and the inhabitants Africans. Why not accept this position now? Are we leaving it over to the Netherlands or Dutch people to claim? To day they call themselves Africans but they are wrong; we are Africans and we should not be called anything better than Africans.

Mr Editor,

I was very much interested in your leader of the 19th April last on the above subject. I am one of those who, after seeing the announcements in the papers about the matter, thought the Witwatersrand University was to day supplying a long felt want and admired their fine gesture of giving the African full medical training at a comparatively low fee.

The Native Affairs Department of the Union and the Bunga of the Transkei promptly took advantage of the offer and dished out scholarships in order to train as many Africans as they can afford. Although the Africans in the Union have always complained that the Union Government was slow to take action where the interests of the Natives were concerned yet in the matter under discussion I have no doubt they have earned the admiration and gratitude of the Africans. If, Mr Editor, what you have stated in your leader is true, and I have certainly no reason to doubt your statement, that Basutoland so far enjoys the credit of being a pioneer Territory in which the Administration tackled the problem of the health of the Native inhabitants much earlier than other states by establishing Government hospitals in which natives received treatment, one has reason to expect that such an administration should maintain its place in the fore front by its promptness in taking advantage of the offer of the Witwatersrand University. There are reasons galore for such a step to be taken by a considerate administration such as ours is, especially where they know that they would be meeting the wishes of the people as is the case here. The earnestness of the Basuto to give their sons full Medical Training can be seen from the fact as long ago as the beginning of the present century the first Mosuto Medical practitioner, in the name of the late Dr. Mongoli Sebeta, who was succeeded by the late Dr. Motebang, both of whom have their graves at the out-post of Mokhotlong in the mountains, was sent over seas for training.

It may be pointed out, Mr Editor that one of the reasons why the Administration undertook the training of Basuto girls as nurses was that they might be useful in advising their people on the hygienic ways of living in order to minimise mortality amongst them. The need of blending the project with the training of the youngmen as medical practitioners does not require a highly eloquent and persuasive writer to convince the administration. Even a man in the street may see that this should follow as a matter of course. It is simply unavoidable.

Those of you, Mr Editor who are residing in camps or within easy reach of them and can obtain medical advice and treatment as speedily as it may be required may not be aware of the danger to which we who reside in the outlying parts of the country are exposed. Beside the danger of the lack of these facilities there is the consequent menace of a rising crop of suedo medical men who roam the country under the cloak of herbalists or Basuto medicine men while they are equiped with stethoscopes and actually examine patients and diagnose diseases. You can imagine what fictitious stories are fabricated in order to rob people of their meagre savings. Quack remedies are purchased from the stores and chemists from which mixtures are made and given to these simple minded people. There are cases in which lives that could have been easily saved, had been quickly despatched to the grave by these gentry. Shall we not be saved from this menace by giving us the genuine product?

The need of Basuto Medical practitioners in this counry, Mr Editor, cannot be over-emphasized. I am hoping that the Administration will listen to your words and grant scholarships to deserving students.

Let us hope that some of the educated chiefs and members of Basutoland Council who are aware of the offered facilities, if the Administration delays, will bring up a motion for the granting of these scholarships for discussion in the next session of the Council.

I wish, in conclusion, Mr Editor —to hear some of our celebrated writers in the press express their views on this important subject to the progress and advancement of the Basuto people.

Yours sincerely
PESSIMIST

The Centenary Of David Livingtone's Arrival In Africa

David Livingstone arrived at Simon's Bay from England on March 11, 1841, and went straight Cape Town as the guest of Dr. John Phillip and his wife, in their hospitable home. He then took the same route to Port Elizabeth where he had to wait for waggons and oxen, and eventually reached Kuruman on July 31, 1841.

For several years he lived and worked amongst the Batlhaping, Bakgatla and Bakwena and on one of his early journeys with his friend Oswell discovered Lake Ngami (1849).

He was a restless soul and could not easily be confined within the limited bounds of a settled mission. He was ever looking out for new worlds to conquer for Christ, and the London Missionary Society to which he belonged gave him its blessing in this task.

In January 1853 he left his station at Kolobeng amongst the Bakwena for the last time, and proceeded to Linyanti on the Zambesi, to find a suitable place in which to carry on mission work amongst Sekeletu's people the Makololo.

Before very long he found everywhere the traces of the devasting slave trade and ventured forth on his great journey to the west coast to see for himself just what was going on. He reached Loanda after incredible hardships on May 31, 1854 with his faithful Makololo followers. This journey was not primarily a geographical feat, certainly not so in Livingstone's mind. He had two quite definite objects in view—

(1) He was first and foremost a missionary, and it was with this aim that he set out, namely to find suitable centres for missionary work, with an opening to the west coast that would render unnecessary the long sea journey to the Cape. To him the end of the geographical feat was simply the beginning of the missionary enterprise. "I would not consent" he said" to go simply as a geographer, but as a missionary, and do geography by the way." His chief concern was MEN, so that in this great journey to the west, and after that to the east and then amongst the great lakes of Africa, his greatest discovery was not this and that river, but the hearts of Africa's sons into which, by his sympathy and patience and love, he opened the way for Christ to enter.

(2) He believed also that slavery could be driven out by legitimate trade. "I feel sure he wrote to the Foreign Secretary of the London Missionary Society "that if our merchants could establish a legitimate commerce on the Zambezi, they would soon drive the slave dealer from the market and be besides great gainers in the end."

We may have some doubt now whether trade and modern industry bring the blessings Livingstone hoped they would, but in his day he did certainly believe that British trade was bedded deep in Christian civilisation: it meant uplift for the African.

For many years at a time he had to leave his wife and children behind, and it was this separation that caused him keen sorrow. He made this great sacrifice and risked his own life amongst the fever-ridden swamps of Central Africa because of his conviction that it was a duty to Him who did much more for us than that."

In 1873 Livingstone died worn out at Ilala in Central Africa, and all the world knows the Epic story of how faithful Africans, having buried his heart under a tree in Chitambo's village, bore his body to the coast. That was the last and greatest honour Africa did to him who had given every ounce of his marvellous strength of body mind and spirit to the alleviation of her misery and the salvation of her soul.

BY FACE FACTS

AFRICAN WOMEN MISSION TEACHERS

Whether it is because of their minority in the group of teachers as a whole, or because of the apparently meaningless superiority complex on the part of the male section of this profession, one fails to understand why there is always a tendency for people to overlook Women Teachers, especially those of the mission service.

Often, Africans have sought their rights and privileges

They have formed Associations, et cetera, to safeguard their interests and defend their rights, and they have always been watchful to see their requests duly granted.

At close examination, it will be seen that, more often than not, any move towards the betterment of the status of teachers is first of all for the male ones.

Everybody is aware of the several Associations or Unions of Teachers where they are, and knows that in some of these Associations no lady teachers are to be found as members.

It may be due to lack of interest on the part of the ladies themselves, but even if that were so, it is the place of the male teachers to rouse them and be as watchful of their interests as those of the men.

As far as I know, one of the general orders of Mission is that when a teacher is employed, the transport of that teacher is paid by the Mission from that teacher's home to the school.

It has been alleged that certain Lady Principals or Headmistresses of Girls' Schools are not observing this

Again, in some Missions if not College at the end of a year, he or she is regarded as employed from the first day in January of the ensuing year and, whether a male teacher works in January for an hour only, or not, he is due for all his January salary.

It has been heard that in some Missions the women are not treated equally.

Instead the Lady Principal calculates how long a teacher has worked in the month and pays her the commensurate wages.

If such a thing is really happening, as it sounds incredible, it is about time the Authorities of any such schools are called to order

Not only that, but it also sounds incredible that certain Principals dare to pay African Women Normal Assistants or fully qualified teachers below the Education Code minimum.

If such is the state of affairs, it is really a sad one.

When inconsistencies of this sort are going on, it is unfair to the women for the Nigeria Union of Teachers to fail to investigate.

These ladies may or may not be registered members, but if the Nigeria Union of Teachers is worth its salt, it should be all embracing in its mission.

Certain of these employers think that since they or their missions paid for the College course of some of the ladies the ladies can be treated anyhow

Well, this is a mistake to be deplored

When some one has risen to respect, she has to be respected no matter under whose auspices

As far as it has been known, the Government has given a grant specially in order that Mission teachers' salaries may be increased

There are certain Missions who, before the grant, had proposed cutting down teachers' salaries, and had given notice that all such cuts were to be paid public in advance for the whole year by the end of the first quarter of this year.

In fact, some teachers had started paying, while others had not

Now that the grant has come, the whole affair in certain circuits has still been left in suspense while at others, the teachers continue paying the cuts.

This is particularly so on the part of women teachers—irrespective of the Government grant.

Something has got to be done here, surely, and this article is an appeal to the Educational Authorities, to the Nigeria Union of Teachers, to the Associations and to the Managers or Principals, to look into the case of African women teachers in the Mission service, and see that they are treated equally and fairly.

OUR NATIVE COURTS

In this esteemed Journal, I desire to rebutt the rejoinder by 'A Patriot' as published in the issue of his Newspaper of April 5 re my article on 'Our Native Courts'.

It beats my imagination to discern what could have prompted 'A Patriot' to presume that my appeal for a general reform of the Native Courts was inspired by malice, because, I failed to obtain from the Nyenweles the judgment I had expected.

To refute this, I refer him to my article under the caption 'Injustice in Our Native Courts Must Go!' published in the issue of a contemporary of December 21st 1940 prior to my litigation in the Akoh Native Court.

It is true that 'A Patriot' as a senior political servant to whom the Nyenweles and the entire personnel of the Native Courts make due obeisance it is his duty to shelter his herd from the searchlight that aims to expose them to the full view of the public, but I regret that he has deviced a cheap camouflage for this attempt which must crash.

While I do not intend to waste any space in the 'Guardian' in a personal squabble with 'A Patriot,' I must seek to eradicate what ill-impression his rejoinder might erroneously make in the minds of readers.

In conformity with the precepts of the judicial reform of the Native Court, the Warrant Chiefs were substituted by Village Heads known as Nyenwele, usually a juju priest who offers the village sacrifice.

Membership in the Native Courts was also extended to the most elderly men in a family who are members of the Village Council known as Elohas.

In a third or fourth class Native Administration of this nature, these petty Chiefs, better described as Headmen, are paid a compensation or wages not exceeding [illegible] shillings and six pence per month, during the period they preside in the Native Court.

If the term, petty Village Headman was the alleged insult that provoked the ironical verbosity of 'A Patriot,' I wish to enunciate that my expression was not insulting in its tendency and therefore refer him to 'The Principles Of Native Administration And Their Application' by Sir Donald Cameron, page 20, paragraph 35—a reliable treatise on Native Administration.

If 'A Patriot' intends in his rejoinder to impress on his office colleagues or the public that these petty priests, majority of whom emanate from the poorest class in the village, maintain an admirable intellectual moral and financial dignity and prestige comparable to eminent civilised Native Rulers of other parts of Nigeria I am afraid his patriotism is only skin deep and does not impress.

While I heartily congratulate Mr H H. Marshall, District Officer, Ahoada. in his vigorous effort to abate judicial corruption in the Native Courts I still ardently appeal to the Authorities to eliminate the more inconsiderate class of Nyenweles from the personnel of the Native Courts in the interest of the suffering peasants, though it may not please 'A Patriot' at whose feet the Nyenweles bow.

As 'A Patriot' knows fully well that he is immuned from the scythe of these Nyenweles, I would advise him to mind his office desk while I sacrifice my pen in the interest of the poor peasants.

tribe is not severed by the death of the husband. The wife continued to be the "property" of the family of the deceased husband!

The communique issued by the Commissioner of the Colony on his view of the proposed Native Court instituted in Lagos has been worded most cautiously and we would ask that the people who deliberate on this question take the above comments, which we offer, into consideration. If it is obtained and then no longer desired, it will be difficult to abolish it. Therefore, the desire for it must be real and justifiable.

Native Court in Lagos

THE Native Courts of Nigeria, though instituted with perfectly good intention, have become rather doubtful places of justice. Many things have been introduced into them which make administration of justice difficult and uncertain. It has been a good effort on the part of the Government to preserve as much as possible those traditions which have been honoured by time and observed in our customs beyond living memory.

At the same time, we should be careful to see that in the maintenance of those things a distinction is made between those which have served their usefulness and should only be remembered in history and those things which should be preserved so that Africans might retain their identity and the character of their race.

It will not be fair to say that our Native Courts are thoroughly condemned by the practices which prevail in them, because in some respects divested of their evil they have proved to be an invaluable instrument of justice where the subject on trial would have been utterly misunderstood by a foreign judge. An English man sitting as a judge in Nigeria was shocked when he was told by the lawyer that the marriage tie of a particular

Is West African Thought Changing?

Africa is so vast and has so many communities at such varying stages of development that it might be rash to say that African thought and its expression have changed greatly during the past few years, but, at least of British West Africa, it seems possible to say this, most of all the Gold Coast, usually first off the mark, most vocal, most original. One indication of this new tendency is a wider outlook. The legislature of the Gold Coast it was, of course, which voted £2,000 for the Greek war funds, but a public and newspaper outcry forewent the action and was kept up till Government, nothing loth, proposed the vote. For years, the Gold Coast Press raged at bland and evasive Downing Street to make ready with African forces to expel MUSSOLINI from Ethiopia. Often there was in these writings as there is in much of the current comment, a mordant note which, under a generation ago, would have been to seek.

Withal, there is in all quarters a quenchless faith in the Allies' cause together with an unqualified loathing for Nazism or anybody showing a leaning towards compromise with it. Thus, when discussing the ineffable LINDBERGH, that classic instance of the head turned permanently through public appreciation of one technical achievement, a Gold Coast paper remarked that that German some years ago "got the wrong member of the LINDBERGH family", hardly, but felt by thousands of people everywhere. One of the contemporaries of that philosopher reflected that HITLER has a face, therefore presumably must be classed with human kind.

It was likewise a Gold Coast writer who not long ago in discussing present certain needs and probable future needs of West Africa permitted himself the not too enthusiastic reflection: "But Africa, as we all know, is not of the world of the politicians." (But now, is it the world of the recruiters, the trainers and the munitioners?).

But from a Nigerian pen came the arresting remark:—"Why is it the Europeans don't suffer from malnutrition? Can it be because they get better wages?"

Rep. Council Resolution

privileges we give them. "Africans" or "Native" Senator Le Roux van Niekerk spoke very strongly with regard to Native representatives here referring to Natives as "Africans" and he says that the expession "native" was evidently not good enough for the Native. I cannot follow him at all. He says they are called in Afrikaans "Naturel." I should like him to give me an expression we can use. I heard the expression "nigger" but we cannot use that. The Hon. Senator is a native of this country and so am I. Is the Hon. Senator going to call himself a "white native"?

COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Another thing the Hon. Senator refers to is compulsory education. I think it is perfectly feasible of the African or native people to ask for compulsory education. I am in favour of compulsory education myself.

The African people say to me: "We were barbarians and you Europeans came to our country and you civilised us; you forced us to wear your clothing." Now they are perfectly right when they say that civilisation and barbarism do not go together. The two are bound to clash and how are we going to make the African people here a civilised race unless you give them education?

Senator Le Roux van Niekerk: Is it necesary to be compulsory?

Senator Malcomess: Naturally How are you going to get the children into the schools? It was necessary to have compulsory education with the white children. Youhave to have compulsory education. Another thing is that I look upon compulsory education as self-protection of the white man's interests in this country. It is an absolute necessity.

The whole of my experience of the African wherever I go and when we have educated Natives is that we have moderation and we have law-abiding people.

Another question is that the Hon. Senator objects to Native higher education. The African people are suffering and they have not sufficient doctors or nurses. They must have doctors and nurses or what is going to become of us? Our secondary industries in this country depend upon African labour. The mines which are supplying the funds to pay for the subsidies to the farmers are worked by African people.

Africans as Capable as Europeans

Below we publish an article by Pessimist entitled "Medical Training for Africans" The writer comments on our leader of the 19th April. We have looked through it and decided not to follow his footsteps (as what he has said is sufficient) but stick to the above subject—"Africans as capable as Europeans."

It is always heard among the superior races, Basutoland in particular, that Africans have not yet reached a stage at which to acquire the same Standard of education as Europeans; that their minds are still too young to study the same subjects as Europeans. European children born in Basutoland grow and play together with African children of the same age, and they understand one another and their doings. Now when the time comes for these children to go to school, we find that each child goes to a different school and learns different subjects. They say, because the African child has too little to think and learn In our opinion, we say, the African child could take the same standard of education as a European child if he were started on the same syllabus as the European.

A steadily growing number of graduates at the South African Native College at Fort Hare is one instance to prove our assertion. There are some few Europeans in Basutoland who oppose the African progress in education and development, there are some among them who think and trust that Africans could acquire European education if they were taught.

Our point on this subject does not apply only to African boys, but to African girls as well who are the mothers of to morrow.

We are of the opinion that Basutoland longs for this chance to dawn upon them. In conclusion we also join hands with Pessimist, we also wish to hear some of our celebrated writers in the press their views on these two important subjects to the progress and advancement of the Basuto people.

AFRICAN EDUCATION

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. J. J. PEMBER, Block 57, New Brighton, Port Elizabeth, writes: Sir,—By writing this article in the "Umteteli" I wish to enlighten some of my African brothers about the different opinions of illiterate and so-called educated Africans. In my opinion we must disregard the idea of thinking that we "educated" Africans are superior to our illiterate brothers. Some supposed to be educated Africans have the silly idea of boasting and showing off their so-called education to the supposed-to-be illiterate Africans. You must understand, Africans, it is not the education that counts in this world but the succes of our ambitions. Remember that education is the revival of knowledge; and good education can be developed only from a good, original brain. Men are born clever and can never be made clever. After all said and done what have we done with all the education heaped on our laps? To prove that education is of no consequence, that it is the self-thought out ideas that make a man, take the case of Bishop Limba, of Port Elizabeth. We see no degree connected to his name. And then there are such intances as Napoleon Bonaparte, Joan of Arc, Abraham Sinclair, and many others. It was not their education that made them famous, it was the natural, original ideas that made them known the world over. So Africans, half-educated and educated and illiterate, give each other a chance to know each other. We blame the Europeans and Coloureds when they call us "Kaffirs," yet we suffer from the same fault when we address our own illiterate brothers. What a strange thing human nature is!

"Weakness Of Our Womenfolk"

Editress,

Mr. Nzima's article about the "Weakness of Our Womenfolk" has brought me to the full realisation that we are being criticised. When I had read all he had to say about girls I really felt sorry for him. "Arme man." Girls! we ought to sympathise. Probably, this man has been jilted by some girl and now he is bitter against the rest of us. It is through men that some of us fall in love with the men we meet in some of the the towns we visit.

These men make love to us but if we tell them that we are in love with someone back home and may not accept them, they tell us that it makes no difference; that it is just to pass the time away pleasantly. Some of them failing to win our love tackle us by charms. But there! a gentleman like Mr. Nzima could despise girls like that! By so saying, Editress I don't mean that girls are pure but if I were a man of to-day I would not dare and come near that point because men are the source of all this. So, gentlemen do not rouse hatred amongst us

A PUGNACIOUS SUGGESTION

Sir,

FEB 22 1941

It is quite impossible to tell the much ostracized Bantu to join hands with Indians and Coloureds whereas they do not show signs of social capitulation. From this fact, a Non-Europan Front of these three mentioned peoples is an exceedingly pugnacious suggestion.

If Indians and Coloureds really knew how much some of us detest their co-operation and leadership, they would leave us alone. Certain things, privileges given to these people, their attitude towards us in their recreation and social places has made us undergo complete metamorphosis, and if they knew this, they would be dumb-founded and amazed. True enough, human nature is the same the world over, but environment and tradition create degrees of difference. One thing the world should always bear in mind, we are thinking of our freedom and liberty but we're going to work towards this end solely by ourselves and lead by Africans.

Bantu labour under great handicaps suffers from discrimination, and how then can they have the doggedly audacity to urge us join a Non-European Front? The future of India and Indians all over the world will be decided by the Indian Congress in India. The day India receives her full independent status, all Indians will be freed, but not the Bantu. They will remain where they are.

clash in myth and superstition and status. And whenever South Africa discusses the Non-European problems, it separates Indians from Coloureds and the Bantu vice versa. It is for this reason that there is an Orlando, Coronation Townships and Malay Camp.

Dr. Dadoo sees the misery of the Bantu and at his sight they have an overflowing gratitude and see him as God-sent leader. In them he sees a forlorn, leaderless children. It will be remembered the first time he appeared in court, after the adjournment he was carried shoulder high down Main Street by some Bantu singing beautifully our sacred national anthem. At this sight I was filled with shame and pity and sorrow at my people's easy going about things. This is what is rightly called the "black mind of a black man." Many Bantu leaders have done much for the welfare, development and progress of our people, but they have not been carried in the air. Many of our people have sacrificed for the upliftment of Africa but we have not sung "Nkosi Sikelel' iAfrika."

I should not be mistaken as a racialist or pripped by the Malanite nationalist spirit. The only thing is that I love my country and detest the ignorance and foolishness of my people. I would that we cherish the broader spirit of fraternity, but many a time there's been unpleasant feelings between Indians, Coloureds and Bantu. Also, we must not stand on the giving end only but also the receiving end.

No alien person can lead us from bondage to freedom. He who believes that he can lead us is not a leader but an opportunist taking advantage of the adverse conditions of the blackman. The mass will follow him to end in nothing better than where they began.

No Bantu man, or woman, worthy his or her salt can join such a movement. There's no honour in joint partnership. "The African," says Mr. H. Dhlomo in one of his plays on the above subject, "must battle, bleed alone to victory and glory." The Bantu who follow this path will live

It goes without saying that we forever, whereas those who join the Front in the battle for freedom have chosen the course of sensationalism, sterility and will end nowhere.

If the Bantu can't lead us to LIBERTY we invite no other alien friend to do so. And before a leader can shepherd a people, he must remove their ignorance rather than encourage absurd offensive sentimentalism expressing itself in wrong political notions. Because most leaders do this, we don't want a United Front.

Training Of Natives In Medicine And Dentistry

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financail support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P.O. Alice, C.P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for funds for the award of five scholarships, on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum, tenable for one year, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

(1) Ciskei, FEB 22 1941
(2) Natal,
(3) Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West,
(4) Transkei.
(5) Transvaal.

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

Port Elizabeth Bantu Education Deficiencies

MAR 29 1941

(BY MAN-ON-THE-SPOT)

AT a meeting of the Port Elizabeth School Board held on March 18, a special report was tabled by the Education Committee on Native education in the city. The report referred to a case at one of the Native Mission Schools where, one post becoming redundant, a teacher who had served on the staff for a number of years had been advised that his services would no longer be required, instead of the last-appointed teacher on the staff being retrenched, in accordance with the usual procedure of the Department's regulations.

Mr. Louw, circuit inspector, reminded the members of the promise made to the teachers at Mission Schools in the Port Elizabeth area when the first Native school was opened, that all things being equal, teachers from Mission Schools in the Port Elizabeth area applying for posts on the staffs of the Government Schools would be given preference, and that he and the Board were pledged to fulfil this promise.

Overcrowding of Native Schools

The Inspector also spoke of the overcrowding of Native schools at present, which, he said, was a matter of concern. When the new schools were complete the Board would have three schools, each with 15 classrooms—in all—which meant 45 teachers, according to the staffing regulations. Of this 45, twelve were there already, and these twelve would be taken over and placed in one of the new schools, leaving 33 more appointments to be made. These would be drawn from the Korsten and New Brighton schools, all things being equal. In amplification of his statement, Mr. Louw quoted the present enrolments and staffs of the Mission schools.

It was noted that the enrolment at the present Native Primary School at New Brighton had risen to 723, and that the School Committee applied for additional teachers. In view of the figures quoted, it was noted that they were entitled to six more teachers, and directions were given for application to be made to the Department immediately for the appointments. Further, the Municipality had been asked to allow the Board the use of more temporary accommodation for this school to relieve the pressure, pending the erection of permanent buildings, which were due to be ready for occupation in six months' time So far no reply had come, but the Board had every reason to believe that the Council would grant their request.

In connection with New Brighton Native Primary Schools, the Building Committee noted that the Department had now sent authority for the Board to accept the tender of Messrs J. J. Ruddy & Sons (Pty) Ltd., for the erection of the three lower primary schools at New Brighton.

Chief Headman of New Brighton Passes

With profound regret the untimely death is recorded of Mr. Isaac Pope Msimka, chief headman of New Brighton Village, which took place at the Provincial Hospital on March 11 after a week's illness at the age of 61. Over 900 people testified to the respect in which he was held at the funeral ceremony, which took place on March 12. Mr. H. Relton represented the city council at the funeral and spoke in glowing terms of the services of the late Mr. Msimka, who commenced service at the New Brighton Admininistration offices as clerk in 1923. Mr. Msimka was a popular sportsman and founder of several sporting bodies in the city among the Bantu. He leaves two sons and a daughter to mourn his loss. At the Advisory Board meeting held on March 20 the location superintendent, Mr. J. P. McNamee, who presided, said that the late Mr. Msimka, who was secretary of the Advisory Board, was on the staff from 1923 and his services were most valuable, and the public would realise the benefit of his work. The meeting rose in silence for a few seconds as a tribute to the memory of Mr. Msimka, after which the Rev. G. B. Molefe, M.A. moved an unopposed motion that, on behalf of the Advisory Board, a message of condolence be communicated to his relations and dependants.

Port Elizabeth Personal

Mr. V. V. Mbobo, B.A., headmaster of the Pretoria Bantu High School, formerly of Grahamstown Secondary School, informed the representative of "Umteteli" at Port Elizabeth that he returned to Grahamstown on March 16 from the Pretoria Bantu High School, where he has been appointed headmaster. In the interests of the budding secondary school at Grahamstown, which, besides him, had also lost the services of Mr. de Wet Maqanda, B.Sc, all in one week, the Cape Education Department pleaded with the Transvaal Department to release him to come to the rescue of the Grahamstown Secondary School till the end of the current quarter Commenting on the Pretoria High School, Mr. Mbobo stated that the roll of that school is 111, with a staff of four, of whom two are graduates. The new tuition block, he said, will be officially opened upon his return to Pretoria on April 15 next. Mr. Mbobo said that the new building was a mansion of £5,000, with ten classrooms, besides a staff-room and the headmaster's office, which has a telephone and a radiogram. In conclusion, Mr. Mbobo said "This promises to be the best equipped Bantu school in the North."

Pretoria regrets his unavoidable return to the Cape and looks forward to his return.

Eastern Province Bantu Nurses' Association

The monthly meeting of this Association was held in the new Walmer Clinic, Port Elizabeth, on March 9 in the afternoon, when among those present were Matron Marwick, Sister D. Nginza, who presided, Nurse A. J. Siyo, secretary, Nurses Nxaxo, Ndlazi, Tsotsobe, Mgole and Mgabi. Apologies for absence were received from Sister Anderson and Nurses Scharnick and Ntloko. Among the many visitors were Rev. Mr. Jenkins, who was invited to address the meeting, and Mrs. McNaughton.

After the business of the meeting had been completed, the President called upon Rev. Mr Jenkins to address the meeting. His address was based on freedom and democracy. All present at the meeting listened with great interest. The speaker was accorded a vote of thanks, and the meeting came to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

"AFRICANS" OR "NATIVES"

MAR 29 1941

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. JACOB R. MOHLAMME, Eastern Native Township, Johannesburg, writes: Sir,—When I first wrote to point out the misapprehension about the word 'Africans" in the Bantu designation I did so, not because I deny that we are Africans, but because of the new-comer inhabitants who are rightly referred to also as Africans. May it be well noted that we are all Africans in Africa, but we cannot all be "Natives" in Africa as is the case now

The writer over the pen-name "Anti-Detribalisation" in "Umteteli" of March 1 is not convincing. He hurled stones of words at me without a preliminary or subsequent explanation. He failed to tell the reasoning world why the word "Africans" should now be enforced above the word "Natives." With him, the Advisory Boards Conference is a super-gathering of unchallengeable decisions, after which "fools rush in where angels fear to tread." He again "dressed himself down" when he calls himself "Anti-detribalisation"—as if the words "Africans" and "Natives" have anything to do in tribalising or detribalising of the people.

Now I would like him and his supporters, if any, to put us clear as to how the Bantu children are to understand the following:—War news: "...two Africans killed in action and one wounded." Theatrical: "The African Consolidated Theatres." Commercial: "The African Board of Executors." Grammar: "Africanism."

Do these references mean the Bantu affairs? It is for such things as these that I say we should not adopt a word of Continental application for our designation. Those in Europe are Continentally and rightly called Europeans by us irrespective of their particular nationality; but in their government dealings in Europe they cannot call themselves Europeans still.

EUROPEANISATION OF AFRICAN PEOPLE

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. CORNELIUS MOILOA, Bultfontein, O.F.S., writes: Sir,—In reference to the letter of May 17, entitled "Europeanisation of African People," criticising the one entitled "Bad or Wrong Imitation," the writer explains it as a "metamorphosis of skin-tint, e.g., a change of colour from Black to White." At the same time he contradicts himself "the word Europeanise does not imply changing from Black to White." Does he understand his explanation or criticisms?

May I draw his attention to these points: Was the topic dealing with Europeanisation? No! The argument was wholly and entirely on "Bad or Wrong Imitations."

Was the same against good and beneficial imitations? No! The correspondent misconceived the topic.

The rev. gentleman's letter agrees with my argument, but it is said to be to the contrary.

In drawing my conclusion, it was said: "When one tries to change one's colour from Black to White." It is contrary to the principles of morals "Not principles of morals" mean change of colour.

Do you mean to tell me that a European leader can handle a Blackman as he would his own people?

The United Africa Company Answers Critics

PLANTATION AND LAND POLICY DEFENDED

FEB 2 2 1941

SOME remarks by Mr. R. M. Williams, the General Manager in Nigeria of The United Africa Company, are reproduced in another column. Made in an interview, they are crisp and clear and will certainly be read with attention by many on this side of the water who are interested in Nigeria—indeed in all the West African Colonies. It does not seem likely that anybody competent to comment through experience of what British West Africa went through during years following the end of the Great War will take exception to the account which Mr. Williams gives of the vicissitudes which led to the advent of The United Africa Company. Nor can anyone deny the historical accuracy of Mr. William's references to the circumstances in which the mineral royalties in Nigeria became payable to The Niger Company though some will differ from him in his belief that the British Government of the day took the most economical course. That however is not the concern of The Niger Company. If a lump sum had had to be paid freeing the country from the future burden the British Parliament would have had to be asked to vote that sum and that course was probably not strongly desired.

KNOWLEDGE OF FIRST AID IS OF GREAT VALUE

You will remember reading in last week's article about the importance of First Aid, which means knowing what to do in the event of an accident till the doctor comes.

On the Mines the Africans are encouraged to learn First Aid, and they take to it. They are interested in it, and because they are so interested in it their instructors find it the easier to teach them. Willing intelligent learners make teaching a pleasure.

Here is an instance of the importance of knowing First Aid. It happened some time ago on one of the Mines and it deserves to be recalled because of the wise and prompt behaviour of the African who had learnt First Aid. He saved a European's life.

The European had accidentally received an electric shock; his body had come into contact with an electric current from an electric wire, and he had even stopped breathing. He was holding on to the electric wire, or rather it was holding on to him, and as long as this was the case there was no chance for him. Most fortunately the African happened to be near and took in what had happened, and still more fortunately the African had qualities in First Aid (only a few day before the incident.) Seeing the European in distress, the first thing that the African did was to seize a piece of wood and, without himself touching the European (because that would have connected the African with the electric current,) he managed to remove the electric wire from the European.

The African at once followed up his good conduct. Having got the European completely free from the electric wire, he began to apply artificial respiration, having been taught this all-important feature when he was learning First Aid. JAN 4 - 1941

After half-an-hour the African saw, to his intense satisfaction, that the European was breathing again: life had come back, been "restored" as the term is.

The European recovered The African had saved his life, and the African's action was the subject of deep appreciation.

You see now for yourself what a knowledge of First Aid can mean.

Government's Statement on Policy

Mr. Anthony Eden, M.P., Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, made an important statement in House of Commons last week on the attitude of British Government to the future of Abyssinia. said:

FEB 1 3 1941

"His Majesty's Government would welcome the reappearance of an independent Ethiopian State, and recognise the claim of the Emperor Haile Selassie to the throne. The Emperor has intimated to His Majesty's Government that he will need outside assistance and guidance. His Majesty's Government agrees with this view, and consider that any such assistance and guidance in economic and political matters should be the subject of international arrangement at the conclusion of peace. They reaffirm that they have themselves no territorial ambitions in Abyssinia. In the meanwhile the conduct of military operations by Imperial forces in parts of Abyssinia will require temporary measures of military guidance and control. These will be carried out in consultation with the Emperor, and will be brought to an end as soon as the situation permits."

This Leper Problem

WHILE not intending to hold any brief as to the accuracy of reports reaching this office on the presence of Lepers in several parts of the country, and how they mingle freely, in some cases, with the healthy population, we propose to invite attention to an article which appeared in yesterday's issue of this Newspaper, from a Correspondent at Ndizuogu, wherein the intervention of the Medical Authorities was invited as a means of restricting the movements of such people. This article alleges, in brief, that the presence of lepers in Ndizuogu town was multiplying and that if not checked, most of the population would be affected.

We have already centred much attention on this problem in the past, and far from wishing to reiterate our submissions, we would simply ask that provided that upon investigation the authorities find that the situation as presented is well founded, they should be good enough to see that the lepers concerned are isolated. This request should not be taken to indicate a disparagement for people who have been so unfortunate as to be attacked by this contagious disease. As a matter of fact, we quite appreciate that they too are human beings and must be treated as such. But then, at the same time, it would be admitted that this is not sufficient reason enough why other healthy persons should be affected.

Experience has shown that one reason why people infested with this disease are fond of mixing among the masses, is to enable them to get food, water, and other necessities typical of every day life, and that being the case, we are of opinion that if they could be isolated and provided with the necessary articles, they would, in any case, have less cause of unintentionally constituting a menace to the healthy section among the population of a township We trust that since the authorities would not be involved in any financial undertaking of any magnitude, if at all, in this case, they would find it feasible to effect necessary adjustments in the interest of public safety.

MR. VAN DEN BERG ATTACKS WOMEN WAR WORKERS

WAGES OF AFRICAN S.A.R. WORKERS

BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.

MR. HOFMEYR will no introduce the Budget until March 12. In the meantime, with important legislation of the Session, the Workmen's Compensation Amendment Bill, the Factories Act Amendment Bill and the Miners' Phthisis Act Amendment Bill not ready for consideration, the House of Assembly has spent another week arguing about bottles and the powers of Municipalities to say who shall and who shall not own houses in their municipal areas. It has been a very dull week, indeed, enlivened only by the distinctly unpleasant prospect of a free fight over an incident which everybody deplored.

Women Who Have Joined The Army

THIS was a serious reflection made by the Nationalist member for Bethel on the character of the women who have joined the army to assist in the defence of their country. In making his allegations, Mr. van den Berg stirred the feelings of the Government party to such an extent that an open conflict in the lobby of the House, of an unprecedented nature in the history of the South African Parliament, was only narrowly averted.

The episode was unfortunate from every point of view, but not least from that of the party to which Mr. van den Berg belongs. South Africa is particularly sensitive about the character and reputation of its women and the Opposition party leaders knew that an attack in that direction would only damage them very seriously in the country. Undoubtedly Mr. van den Berg has given his party a very sore head by his hasty, ill-considered and altogether unpardonable allegations. "Die Burger" immediately did its best to make amends by a leader offering full apologies which will, no doubt, be endorsed in the House by the leader of the Opposition when the opportunity arises to do so.

Mr. Sturrock And Non-European Railway Workers

Mr. Sturrock has, at last, replied to the Railway Part-Appropriation Bill Debate which trailed over parts of the preceding two weeks. On the subject of the report of the Departmental Committee of Enquiry into the conditions of service of Non-European workers on the Railways, he refused to lay the report on the table. The reason he gave for this refusal was that members of such a committee should feel free to say what they wished to say without the danger of their statements being used for party political purposes. He assured the House, however, that he had implemented all the recommendations of the Committee in respect of wage increases and was in process of implementing the recommendations in respect of housing and other matters.

This reply was not very encouraging to those of us who know what the changes in wage rates that have taken place amount to. In most centres indeed they have meant just nothing at all. On the third reading of the Bill, therefore, Mr. Kentridge (U.P. Troyeville) suggested that the Minister should at least let the House know the recommendations of the Committee so that they might know what they do amount to. While refusing to accede to this request, the Minister himself declared that the position of the Non-Europeans in the Railway service is "deplorable" and that he has other benefits up his sleeve for these workers. So we are hopeful that the improvements which have so far been made are indeed only a first instalment, as we were originally led to suppose.

Proposed Employment Of Italian Prisoners Of War

The rumoured intention of the Government to employ Italian prisoners of war on the roads in the Union has caused a considerable amount of anxiety among Africans who find employment on the roads one of the few avenues open to them. Mr. Molteno consequently asked a question of the Prime Minister as Minister of Defence whether the Government had decided to employ Italian prisoners in this way, and if so, on what terms. General Smuts replied that the whole matter was still under consideration and that no decision had been reached in it.

Masters And Servants' Bill

"South Africa is the only country in the world in which the colour problem exists on such a large scale and what South Africa decides is going to be of paramount importance to the whole world, and, especially to other communities in Africa."

This striking statement was made by Mrs. V. M. L. Ballinger M.P. for the Cape Eastern Circle in a vigorous speech in the House of Assembly during the debate on Mr. C. H. Gedenhuys' motion asking leave to introduce the Cape Masters and Servants (Amendment) Bill.

The Bill, as far as we can judge from speeches made by Mrs. Ballinger, Mr. D. B. Molteno and Mr. L. Egeland, vitally affects the interests of African labourers in the Cape. It is a measure designed to enable farmers to prevent labourers from evading their contracts. It proposes that non-fullfilment of civil contracts should become a criminal offence and that farmers should be given the right to control the labour of African workers.

As the Bill affects the welfare of the Africans, and is of such controversial nature, it should, in our own opinion, have been submitted to the Representative Council before it is dealt with by Parliament. It is the policy of South Africa under the provisions of the Natives Representation Act that any legislation affecting the interests of the African people will not be brought before Parliament until it has been considered by the Representative Council. This policy was laid down by Parliament and it should be maintained and be put into operation. It is to hoped therefore, that Mr. Geldenhuys will not be allowed to introduce this inquitous Bill which, in our opinion, will not in any way help farmers to secure labour. If it became law it would have the effect of driving African labour from the farms; and we do not think that this is what the farmers want.

We are all agreed that the agricultural resources of this country should be developed and that the African should play his part in this development. But we cannot agree that the best means of doing this is to employ compulsory methods. The days when it was perhaps necessary to teach the African "the dignity of labour" are gone. The African has learned the lesson and he knows now that he cannot live in this world except by the sweat of his brow. Unfortunately there are farmers who have not learned this lesson and who, therefore, think that it is one of their previleges to live by the sweat of the brows of other human beings. The African knows today that as a human being he has the right to sell his labour to the highest bidder in the Labour Market. It is not his "laziness" that causes the shortage of labour on the farms; it is the unwillingness of the farmers to employ progressive methods in dealing with labourers.

The farming indutsry like any other industry cannot be developed by means of compulsory labour. Labour today is a commodity which must be purchased by those who need it. And the African is not willing to sell it to the lowest bidder. If the farming industry needs his labour it must pay the price which is paid by other industries. The farmers, like other employers of labour, must learn to put their hands into their pockets and pay their servants a living wage.

"Farm labourers are entitled to the ordinary basic rights for human beings" says Mrs. Ballinger, "namely facilities for the education of their children and proper housing. Despite all the regulations to control the movement of the Native population the Natives still drift to the towns because the towns people pay better wages than farmers." This fact should be appreciated by all farmers, including those who believe in the divine right of European farmers to exploit African labour.

It is not compulsory labour, we repeat, that will enable the farmers to develop their agricultural pursuits: it is the contentment of the labourers due to satifactory working and living conditions. In the towns, although wages and working conditions are not altogether what they shsould be, there is a better relationship between maseters and servants. The Europeans in towns have learned to respect the feelings of their servants, and they realise that it is only by securing the co-operation of the workers that their industries can be developed satisfactorily. This is a lesson which the farmers must learn and they will soon find their labour difficulties disappearing.

Health Of The Native

At a recent meeting of the European-Bantu Joint Council, King William's Town Mr. G. W. Mears, the Native Commisioner, (Cape) spoke on the subject of "Health of the Native."

Viewing the subject from an economic angle he showed that malnutrition was the root of the existing high death rate of Native children and of their susceptibility to disease.

A primitive Native man depending without restrictions on his fat cattle and crops had been well fed. To day the rural Native is confined to fixed areas. Through overstocking these areas the land has deteriorated. Middledrift was cited as an example. Where land is poor, cattle are undernourished and they in their turn yield milk of poor quality. Consequently where milk is the staple food, the Native is undernourished.

Bantu Opinion

Many finding the land can no longer support them flock to the towns where their earning cannot keep pace with their growing needs under civilising influences. The result is malnutrition.

The Native Affairs Department is now endeavouring to restore the country to the condition it was in before overstocking ruined it. Soil Erosion is being checked. At Fort Cox Training Schools where more agricultural bias is being given students will go forth well equipped with knowledge to improve the methods of agriculture in their homes and encourage the growing of diversified crops for the family use. Instruction is being given to parents and children on the growing of vegetables to improve that dietry.

South African Outlook

A more obvious effort to deal with Health is seen in improved medical services, rural clinics, training of Native Medical Aids, of Native nurses, allocation of Bursaries to enable Natives to qualify as doctors and dentists.

FACTORIES BILL

AFRICAN WORKERS WILL SHARE IN SHORTER HOURS OVER-TIME PAY AND ANNUAL LEAVE, BUT FEAR "COLOUR BAR."

There are important many improvements in working conditions laid down in the new Factories Act, such as the fixing of a maximum work period of 46 hours a week, over-time pay, and annual leave. But the parliamentary representatives have been disturbed because there are two clauses in the new law which give the Government power to compel employers to segregate workers and even to withhold some of the benefits of the new law on the "ground of race or colour." They did their best in both Houses of Parliament to have these clauses amended, but were unsuccessful.

"We gladly acknowledge that for most of the work this measure will confer very great benefits, which we very gladly acknowledge. For the Native workers particularly it will also be a great benefit so far as the measures as a whole are concerned. I do not know whether Hon. Senators are aware of the great social change that is taking place amongst the Native people as a result of the effects of industrial legislation in the last three or four years. Something like 80,000 Native workers have come under industrial agreements and wage board determinations in the last few years and they have very considerable increases in their wages, but what is more important is that now it is no longer possible to exploit them by demanding long hours without pay and no leave at all after a long period of service. This Bill will have the effect of giving others those improvements which are also being given through industrial agreements and wage board determinations, having the effect of making our labour supply more steady, more regular, more efficient, and I should like to thank the Minister for these benefits.

BABY WITH SQUINT

But I could not possibly sit down, and I do not suppose the Minister expects me to sit down without a word of reference to what is a blot upon this measure. I cannot help feeling that the Bill is like a lovely baby that has developed a squint. The original baby was all right. The Bill as originally drafted was innocent of a Colour bar, but unfortunately in the course of discussion in another place the Hon. Minister got things badly twisted and when he was challenged from one side or the other in the other place and was asked "Isn't this a Colour bar?" he said "Yes, it is," "Yes, it isn't," "Yes, it is," "Yes, it isn't." And by the time the debate was finished nobody knew whether it was or was not.

Some of us were profoundly perturbed as we saw the final Bill, as it came to this House, because what before was perhaps a matter of opinion has now taken a very hard and fast form. It has disturbed us greatly. The Hon. the Minister will realise that as the Bill now stands it must have a very disturbing effect upon thousands and thousands of workers, Native, Coloured, and Indian. This is not the time to cause a disturbance in the mind of workers. I think that our workers in South Africa are keen to do all they can to help the Government in its war efforts and help industry at the present time but the discussions which are taking place in certain trade union circles and also in another place have had a very profound effect upon them. My colleagues and I have had numerous letters and telegrams begging us to get this measure altered in this respect, and so I should like to support what the Hon. Senator Dr. Brookes said. I think he puts the case fairly and moderately, and I should like to support his plea that the Minister should withdraw the present clause 51 (3) and clause 54. We say to the Minister that we are prepared to co-operate with him in any situation in which he may find himself, but we know of hardly any cases that would justify a measure of this kind, which will have such an effect upon the minds of the Native workers. The Bill as it stands now is a challange to the minds of the Native workers. I venture to say if those workers had been members of proper trade unions the Minister would never have thought it right to go against their feelings in this matter. He would have gone all out to satisfy them and assure them that there would be no hardship. I urge upon him that it is not now too late to meet our difficulty and satisfy these workers who as workers should command our sympathy and the solicitude of the Hon. the Minister. Some of us know him for very nearly thirty years as the father of the worker. These people we represent are also workers and there are entitled as such to some consideration and we ask the Minister not to put in the Statute in such a clear form something that is a challenge on the racial issue.

COLOUR DISCRIMINATION

I should like to put as briefly as I can the reasons why we oppose this discrimination on grounds of Colour in such matters. I now speak for myself, and I have every reason to believe that I am supported by my colleagues here. In the first place they always operate harshly and unfairly against the non-European. We have recently had cases, and there are plenty of cases to illustrate my point, of what is a firm conviction in the minds of non-Europeans, that when we ask them to agree to discrimination they always have in their minds something that is going to operate to their disadvantage and therefore we find it impossible to approach them, because the first question they ask us is "How is it going to work" and we must admit then it may work unevenly and hardly. Secondly, whatever the original motive of such a measure which has this Colour discrimination, whatever the original motive may have been, however mild and however careful the Minister may have been in regard to a measure of this kind, it has happened in the past that such measures have come to be used as a means of pushing non-Europeans out of positions they have held. That is their conviction and that is our experience, and also as time goes on the spheres which they occupy and can occupy become more and more restricted."

Native Appeals And Their Courts

The decision of the Appellate Division, Bloemfontein on the 29th. April that a litigant in a Native Commissioner's court desiring to appeal to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court must proceed through the Native Appeal courts will be hailed with general satisfaction by Africans.

This important matter of procedure formed the subject of a special case stated by the Minister of Native Affairs in order to obtain the court's ruling. The special case raised the question whether under the Native Administration Act 38 of 1927 a litigant intending to appeal from the judgment of the Native Commissioner's Court could submit an application for leave to appeal under section 18 of the Act directly to the Appellate Division or only after an appeal to a Native appeal court.

Native appeal courts had given conflicting decisions on the question.

In the case of Lutuli v. Myokana, decided in 1934, one Native appeal court had held that the Appellate Division constituted the forum of appeal from Native appeal courts, while in the case of Letholov. Ndhlovu, heard in 1940, another Native appeal court by a majority held that there was no provision for appeals from its judgments to the Appellate Division, and that a litigant desiring to appeal to the Appellate Division must proceed directly from a Native Commissioner's Court to the division instead of appealing to a Native appeal court.

In its judgment the Appeal Court ruled that the former decision was the correct one.

The Native Administration Act of 1927 was designed to deal with Bantu court cases from the perspective of Native law and custom. This involved a special study of the rudiments of complicated aboriginal customs usages, appertaining to varying tribes a study which not commend itself to many students of Roman-Dutch law. The result was that there are none too many experts of Native law in the legal profession or in the service of the Government. That being so, it would appear essential that the knowledge and experience of the few experts appointed to the special benches of Native Appeal courts, including that of assessors chosen from the ranks of experienced Native Commissioners, should be utilised to the fullest extent.

From the Native Commissioners' courts below, it will be observed that Native cases are handled primarily by attorneys preferably engaged by litigants for their having specialised in the study of Native law. These attorneys are a batch by themselves, who, by continuous practice and appearance in the Native Commissioners' courts have amassed valuable knowledge which enhances the standard of the courts. It is usually the same set of attorneys who are engaged to pilot cases through the Native Appeal courts. Here they make a powerful combination with the President of the Native Appeal Court—a judicial officer chosen specially for ripe knowledge in Native law. The President is assistde by two experienced Native Commissioners. It may also be mentioned that in the lower courts, Natives known for their special knowledge of Native custom often advise the Commissioners in their task. Altogether the atmosphere of reliable authority in decisions is well established in the two courts discussed above.

It would have seemed unfortunate therefore, if the Appellate Division had decided otherwise than directing appeals to come through Native Appeal Courts. Satisfaction is felt at this decision, firstly because it enhances the prestige of the Native Appeal Court that the Appellate Division should decide appeals in the light of its views. Secondly, the large volume of work handled at Bloemfontein seldom includes consideration of intricate Native law. Decisions of the Native Appeal Courts should lighten the burden of the higher court while consolidating its judgments.

Policemen And Africans

NO LOVE LOST BETWEEN THEM

Sir,

Kindly allow me a space in your paper to say a few words on Policemen and their attitude towards Africans.

Europeans run to the Police for protection while Africans regard them as their worst enemies. The reason for this is not far to find. I maintain that this derives from the rough and sometimes cruel treatment the police mete out to them in carrying out their duties.

In towns and in farms Africans are being looked upon as mischief makers, hence the very strict measures and punishments applied to them at these places.

When he goes out of his house he is required to have with him his Poll Tax Receipt, Monthly Pass and Special Pass. If he is without one he is liable for arrest, he may be working or not working he is now regarded as a criminal.

When these documents are demanded, you may try to be a gentleman by respecting the Crown or Uniform, still you will be questioned very harshly and sometimes be kicked about although you have them all. You are told "you mus'nt think you are a whiteman."

In case you utter a word of explanation you may be kicked about again and again and then be thrown into the pick—up—van and be charged for resist. How dare you answer the "Police Baas."! Yours is to say "Jaa Baas' all the time even to the extent of committing yourself.

During last year a Tax Card System was introduced for tax collecting with the intention of making it easier for Africans to pay their tax. But that has not stopped the zealous police from demanding tax receipts in the streets. Small wonder Africans, respectful or otherwise, regard the police as enemies and disturbers of their peace.

As long as Africans are being harassed in this flagrant manner and hunted high and low in vans as game of prey notorious deeds shall prevail to the bitter end. I am not trying to defend criminality, which must be severely dealt with by the authorities, but I must deplore the whole attitude of the police and the white public opinion towards Africans as a whole. There are desperadoes among Africans just as there are among the Europeans, but that does mean they must be the criterion of the respect due to a nation. We have professional men and women amongst us and they deserve respect from the white people who taught us the value of these things.

Let us hope even against hope that our white neighbours especially the police will appreciate our complaint and make amends.

Africans and Religion

Expressing the hope that "the Colonial Office directions for the forming of citizens in Tropical Africa will be a forceful argument for fearless pronouncements from official sources on the importance of religion for the youth of this country," Cardinal Hinsley, Archbishop of Westminster, and previously Papal Delegate in East Africa, says in a letter to The Times:

"The Colonial Office attitude towards the training of citizens in Tropical Africa is a model for imitation. In the memorandum of 1925 the principle was laid down that religion is essential for the education of native populations; the late Lord Lloyd, shortly before his lamented death, declared that missionary co-operation was indispensable for the same purpose of forming true citizenship among backward races.

"There is no power to bind the multitude of fickle wills in common harmony save the fixed standard of God's law. The idolatry of mere physical and purely worldly culture will tend to that savage callousness of which we have too evident experience from abroad if not at home. The whole history of Christianity and its institutions shows that a man's natural faculties are not stunted but developed and perfected by co-ordinating them with the highest spiritual ideals. In the words of St. Augustine of Hippo: 'Religion unites citizen to citizen, nation to nation, yea, all men in a union not of companionship only but of brotherhood.'

"Can the myth of white superiority lead anyone to suppose that religion, useful for primitive races, is not needed by us? Were we in any doubt as to this, the present condition of the world would provide the answer. Pure secularism, for all its glittering promises, stands condemned by the ruin it has wrought."

Improved Native Agriculture

Speaking of soil conservation work in the Native reserve near Pemba, Northern Rhodesia, the Director of Agriculture recently told the Legislative Council that of about 130,000 acres under cultivation in that area, 60,000 acres required conservation. In one year, working from one centre, 12,000 acres had been protected, and it was hoped to double the rate of progress. Approximately 100 gardens are now being cultivated under improved methods. In 1938-39 the average maize yield of these gardens under the old methods was 2.2 bags per acre; improved methods gave 5.9 bags.

Health Of The Native

At a recent meeting of the European-Bantu Joint Council, King William's Town Mr. G. W. Mears, the Native Commisioner, (Cape) spoke on the subject of "Health of the Native."

Viewing the subject from an economic angle he showed that malnutrition was the root of the existing high death rate of Native children and of their susceptibility to disease.

A primitive Native man depending without restrictions on his fat cattle and crops had been well fed. To day the rural Native is confined to fixed areas. Through overstocking these areas the land has deteriorated. Middledrift was cited as an example. Where land is poor, cattle are undernourished and they in their turn yield milk of poor quality. Consequently where milk is the staple food, the native is undernourished.

Many, finding the land can no longer support them, flock to the towns where their earning cannot keep pace with their growing needs under civilising influences. The result is malnutrition.

The Native Affairs Department is now endeavouring to restore the country to the condition it was in before overstocking ruined it. Soil Erosion is being checked. At Fort Cox and in schools where now an agricultural bias is being given students will go forth well equipped with knowledge to improve the methods of agriculture in their homes and encourage the growing of diversified crops for the family use. Instruction is being given to parents and children on the growing of vegetables to improve that dietry.

A most obvious effort to deal with health is seen in improved medical service—rural clinics, training of Native Medical Aids, of Native nurses, allocation of Bursaries to enable Natives to qualify as doctors and dentists.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES declared recently that one of the most urgent Colonial problems was that of the colour bar. Although allegations against East African territories and Rhodesia in that connexion are usually so exaggerated as to have little relevance, the wise are constantly on guard against complacency. The challenging observations made by Canon Broomfield elsewhere in this issue should therefore be welcomed by responsible opinion. He writes in his personal capacity, but with the onus resting upon the general secretary of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, which he served for many years in Zanzibar, and the operations of which cover large areas of that Protectorate, Tanganyika Territory, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. He proceeds from the fact that "many Europeans are most scrupulous in their consideration of African susceptibilities"; and it is undeniable that in this matter considerable numbers of settlers have set themselves standards equivalent to those normally followed by missionaries and officials. That many Europeans engaged in agriculture, commerce and mining do not attain the same high level is attributable partly to the more difficult and irritating circumstances in which they so often make contact with the African, and partly to a regrettable lack of understanding, arising largely from inadequate acquaintance with any African language. Almost every missionary and district official speaks at least one Native tongue fluently, and the white settler who is equally proficient is very seldom an offender in the matter which Canon Broomfield discusses. The real delinquents are men who know very little of the African because they have no means of conversing intimately with him, and in the vast majority of cases they are persons of poor intellectual attainment, who, devoid of moral ascendancy, seek to impose an air of authority by methods which they themselves distrust, and which the African inevitably resent. The normative, almost always a good-natured being, cheerfully tolerant of reasonable authority, will even submit to the unreasonable exercise of it, but, as all who have lived in former German Colonies can testify, he is fully alive to the practical evils of the Herrenvolk idea—though in our view there is the widest gulf between the worst cases which could be cited from, say, the Copperbelt under British administration, and what was almost normal practice in the German African Colonies: we say nothing of the infamous nature of German rule in Poland today.

Africans Penalised

It has been frequently expressed that the unsatisfactory state of health among Africans is traceable to their economic condition. They live below the average living line owing to the wages paid to them. This is a subject which calls for sympathetic and adequate attention by the Administration. The greater number of Africans live below the living line and this fact is well-known by the European masters and yet up to now next to nothing has been done to bring about any remedy for this undesirable state of affairs.

The fact of a man with a family being paid an average of one pound ten a month is a scandal of the first magnitude. What with the present day expenses which every family man must face, can keep him from seeking unlawful methods of eking out a living in order to keep himself and family alive? This problem has been frequently brought before the public eye and expense tables and estimates have been conscientiously calculated and found to be reasonable, but the European masters have taken no step to alleviate this position of the Africans.

At a meeting of the Joint Council recently at Vryheid over which no less a personage than the Bishop of Zululand presided, it was submitted that a census of African labourers' wages has been taken to the Vryheid area. It is said that the figures from twenty representative families living in the Municipality were obtained by a member of the Council who submitted that twenty representative families had as an average wage 34 shillings per month. The barest necessities in food alone for a family of seven came to 14s per week, taking no account of clothing, rent, school fees, books & etc., which any self-respecting family has to face. That figure excludes medical attention and medicines.

We have never heard of medical practitioners ever considering Africans to the extent of charging for professional services a lower rate than they do for well-going Europeans. This we mention here because there are many cases where the African patient is as low financially in the ratio of 10 to 2 as compared to the European master.

The fact may also be put forward that the fines in the courts of the land are frequently ruinous to the Africans. A fine of £5 for an African is equal to about £20 for a European. It seems to us this position could be viewed differently if it was realised that the ratio of the servant's income to that of the master is as suggested above.

This position is the cause of so many of our people devising or taking to objectionable methods of eking out a living so much so that they sooner or later come under the clutches of the law and thus become inured to gaol life to the extent that it has no longer any terror for an increasing number of Africans. This condition is not one to be viewed non-challantly but should be healed with the only remedy at the hands of those who enjoy the vote for the good of the land—a readjustment of wage scales for Africans.

No More Bantu After 20 Years?

Another alarming piece of news was told last Saturday in the account of a meeting which took place in Durban — that the Native population may die out within twenty years! The ominous words were uttered by Dr. B. A. Dormer, Head of the Tuberculosis Hospital at Springfield, in a talk to members of the Women's General Council of the United South African National Party.

In that speech it was declared that it had been proved that tuberculosis was unknown among the Native population before Europeans came to South Africa but now it has worked havoc among Africans to an alarming degree so much as to justify the above statement in order to draw the attention of the Administration to meet the situation which has risen as the result of the new conditions of life introduced by the European rulers.

The statement was made that investigations had been made for three years in Natal and it had been ascertained that there were in the Province 26, 000 Bantu victims of Tuberculosis. It was also discovered that among those of the Bantu population in Natal who lived in tribal areas there was one sufferer from tuberculosis out of 400 Bantu, and in the semi-urban population the figure was one in every 100 whereas in the urban areas where European foods which are highly refined are eaten, there were two tuberculotics in every 100.

The figures in the other racial groups were given as six hundred European sufferers and three thousand Indians. These statements go to prove that present living conditions in urban areas dangerously affect the Bantu, thus increasing the woful deaths among a people who seem to have no remedy to save themselves from this slow death, since they are unable to help themselves. The remedy is clearly with the employer classes who are privileged to call for legislation which will have the effect of lowering this death rate by providing such food for their servants and labourers as will conduce to their preservation from this slow but relentless death.

Dr. Dormer is justified in his statement that the Bantu before the Europeans came to this part of the world were comparatively free from this dread disease. The responsibility then lies with those who have the ability and power to bring about such conditions of labour as will make it obligatory for all masters in rural as well as urban areas to see to it that their Bantu servants should be fed on food which is capable of maintaining their powers of resistance to this devastating disease. The food element is not the only cause of this dire threat to decimate a whole race of people but accomodation in urban areas is mostly undesirable and conducive to bringing about ill health. Inspectors are frequently sent out to see if business premises are always kept in a sound healthy condition but not so much to see if the sleeping quarters of Bantu servants are in a desirable and healthy state. This is not as it should be.

One other point which should be considered by those in the responsible position of being the "fathers of the people" should be the encouragement of education on hygiene so that the number of sufferers from this and other diseases should be reduced with the aim of ultimately driving it out or at least reducing its incidence and threat to wipe off a formerly virile race of people off the face of the earth

EAST LONDON : JUNE 30

FOR URBAN AFRICN AFFAIRS

The South African Institute of Race Relations is holding its mid-year council meeting at East London on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday June 30-July 2. The main subjects to be discussed concern matters connected with Urban Native Administration. To secure the maximum benefit from these discussions the Executive Committee invites the following bodies in the Midland and Eastern district of the Cape Province to send two representatives each to take part in the discussions: Municipal Native Advisory Boards, Congress of Native Advisory Boards; African National Congress (Cape Province branch); Joint Councils of European and Bantu; National Council of Women of South Africa; Bantu National Council of African Women. In addition to the foregoing parliamentary representatives and members of the Natives Representatives Council are also invited. Any further particulars may be obtained by writing to Mr. A. Lynn Saffery, Secretary, S.A. Institute of Race Relations, P.O. Box 97, Johannesburg.

Africans' Bid For Higher Positions

It is becoming more and more apparent from discussions in Parliament, the Natives' Representative Council, General and Local Councils that the Natives' rights to employment and promotion in the Government and Council service where their education, skill and aptitude merit are going to be strongly contested. The complex of inferiority to employees of other races which has overshadowed them for many decades past, is being replaced by a race consciousness that has instilled courage to battle for a fair computation of their worth. In addition to this awakening, the stalwarts who have been members of local self-governing bodies for many years past, have come to realise that it falls upon their shoulders to press at all costs for the employment of the sons of their race in higher-paid positions. It is only right that this feeling prevails. There is no sentimentalism or anti-Europeanism at the bottom of it.

General councils like those of the Transkeian Territories and Glen Grey have existed for over thirty years. The former was established in 1903 and the latter in 1894. Since then Ciskeian local councils have come into being from 1927. European supervision was admittedly necessary in the early stages. In the meantime Africans have spent small fortunes in training their sons at university colleges and agricultural schools. What could all this effort and self-sacrifice have aimed at, other than gaining higher and more remunerative positions in councils that serve their people? The Bantu expect co-operation from the Department of Native affairs and its officials in introducing educated Natives into higher positions, even if this means replacement of former European incumbents. It is a co-operation that is rightly demanded. The question of prestige and colour must not be allowed to outweigh the demands of justice. Nor even pre-suppositions that Natives will fail to justify appointments. The Government and some General Councils have lost thousands of pounds through failures or lapses in the case of individuals. Experience is only gained by being employed in work, hence it is fatuous to over-emphasise the much-vaunted attribute of experience when considering applications for local council work. This invariably operates against the new aspirant, who may possibly have more aptitude through his education than the rival so-called experienced man.

An extract from the minutes of a meeting of the Middledrift Local Council (March 25, 1941) dealing with the projected appointment of a Dipping Supervisor, is typical of the earnest to employ Natives in higher positions. As the matter is still under consideration, no comments, neither for or against, are being made in this article.

Page 43: "Cr. Dwanya who craves for indulgence while he traces the antecedents of the present appointment, states that when the Council was established, the two dipping supervisors, officials of the Native Affairs Department, were Messrs Marais and Ackerman. Objection was at once taken to their salaries which the Council felt would be too great a drain on its funds, and it was finally decided to take Mr. Ackerman only, at a salary of £15 per month. It was then made, Cr. Dwanya continues, a condition of Mr. Ackerman's appointment that he would train two Natives, Ben Moyake and John Takane (also taken over from the Native Affairs Department's staff), who would in time take over the supervision of cattle dipping. After over twelve years of such training, he points out, these men should now be in a position to succeed Mr. Ackerman."

CHAIRMAN: "You say the training of these men was a condition of Mr. Ackerman's appointment. Did he train them?"

Cr. Dwanya: "I presume that he did. But if Mr. Ackerman has not done so, our trust has been misplaced, and he has let us down very seriously. Besides this, Mr. Ackerman's dipping has been and still is-like that of dipping supervisors in the Ciskei—under the supervision of the Stock Inspector. Mr. Stent visits the tanks periodically and he tests the strength of the dip. "When", he asks, "are our people ever going to be given a chance? By Act of Parliament councils have been established to give Africans a measure of self-government; and now when vacancies occur in Native areas, vacancies which should rightly be filled by them, every effort is being made to raise objections to the appointment of those people whose taxes make up the Council's revenue. I should add," Cr. Dwanya concludes, "that the eyes of everybody in this district—and I might say of Councils throughout the Ciskei are looking to see if we in Middledrift will play the game and do right by our people. In these circumstances I therefore see no way but to insist on the appointment of Miton Mpulu."

EMPEROR SETS UP TWO-HOUSE LEGISLATURE

Overrides Opposition Of The Church And Noble Families

(Chicago Defender Foreign Correspondent)

LONDON—Despite opposition on the part of the feudal rases and other reactionary forces in Ethiopia headed by the bishops of the Coptic church which owns most of the lands in the country, Emperor Haile Selassie has granted a new constitution to the Ethiopian people.

Two chambers are set up, an upper house or senate nominated by the Emperor from among the rases and other dignitaries and rulers of provinces, and a chamber of deputies or commons, chosen by the nobles and local chiefs from among the people.

This is a temporary arrangement until the natives are able to elect their own members by secret ballot.

The constitution requires for each chamber a quorum of two-thirds of the members. The British House of Commons demands less than one-twelfth.

A cabinet system will be introduced, composed of young Ethiopians who were sent abroad to study in European and American universities before Italy invaded the country. Most of these young men were educated at the Emperor's personal expense.

History Of Reforms

Until Haile Selassie came to the throne, Ethiopia was governed as an absolute monarchy, the Emperor conducting public affairs as he thought fit, taking the advice of the leading rases and bishops as he felt disposed.

In 1916, when Lij Yassou was deposed, Empress Zauditu succeeded him, and ras tafari, as Selassie then was, became regent since it is a constitutional tradition that a woman can be empress in her own right, but that the affairs of state must be conducted by a regent, usually one of the princes of the royal house.

Ras tafari tried to introduce many reforms at that time, but was opposed by the bishops of the Coptic church and powerful rases who exerted great influence over the empress.

They feared that any change of the status quo would weaken their power and strengthen the Europeanized younger generation who was rallying behind the regent.

Empress Zauditu died in 1930, and ras tafari was proclaimed emperor (Negus Negatsi—literally "King of Kings"), with the throne name of Haile Selassie 1. Seizing his chance, the Emperor began to launch his reforms, but before he could consolidate his position, Moussolini, hoping to exploit internal difficulties picked a quarrel with Selassie and ordered his Blackshirt legions to invade Ethiopia.

Now the Emperor has to start all over again, but much depends upon the final outcome of the main conflict between the Axis powers and the democracies. In the meanwhile, Haile Selassie intends to lay the political foundation of Ethiopia's future progress.

SO. AFRICAN NATIVES SEE NO DIFFERENCE

Both Countries Are Oppressors

CAPETOWN, South Africa — (ANP)—Here in the southernmost tip of Africa, the native population finds it difficult to get very excited about the war. Unlike West Coast Africa or Egypt or Ethiopia or even French Equatorial Africa, in all of which places the Africans are armed and a definite part of the fighting forces of their countries, here in South Africa natives are recruited only for labor and service battalions in which they get about half the pay of a white soldier.

An idea of the thinking of the African here in the Union of South Africa, perhaps the worst country in the world for a black man, is shown by a debate which took place at the People's club here last week.

"What For?"

The subject of the debate revolved around whether it would be in the interests of the South African workers to fight for the establishment of a socialist government during the present war. Every speaker but two supported the idea. They said they could not see any essential difference between the imperialistic aims of Britain and those of Germany. The war, they said, had been engineered by two rival sets of capitalists each bent on securing economic domination at the expense of the working classes. The majority of natives in South Africa, it is said, showed a complete disinterestedness in the war—a feeling of lassitude—and when a native was asked why he was not fighting, the answer invariably was, "What for?"

Western Chiefs' Conference

ACCORDING to a Government Notice which appears elsewhere in this issue, a conference of Chiefs of the Western Provinces has been slated to take place from June 3 to 5 at Ijebu Ode, and among the items tabled for discussion, is a most vexing question which we feel should receive the impartial consideration of the Natural Rulers. We refer, in particular, to the fifth subject on the Agenda, namely, "whether it is desirable that a Native Administration should only employ persons who are Natives of the area controlled by that Native Administration."

Too much has been written in the local Press for and against the retention of people who emanate from a different tribe but who, by virtue of their service, have been asked or ordered to serve in districts governed by a Native Administration other than their own. The contention put forward in both cases has carried a certain degree of weight. The people who emanate, for instance, from Okigwi, would prefer to have in the local Native Administration people of their tribe, other than a man from Bende.

The same may be applied to the latter, and vice versa. The reason which has so far been advanced for this attitude, is the allegation, probably correct, but very highly debatable that immigrants other than the indigenes of a place do not have the welfare of the people of another tribe, in whose services they may be, at heart. The other reason which certainly carries a certain degree of weight, is the submission that since the revenue of the Native Administration are derived from the Natives, it is not advisable to engage the services of foreigners whilst the Natives are unemployed.

These contentions are all right in a way, but nevertheless, a very imperative question arises at this stage, and that is whether efficiency, in any case, should be disregarded in the making of such appointments. In our opinion this point deserves impartial scrutiny and we have no doubt that in arriving at a solution, the Chiefs would take it into consideration. The Native Administrations have certainly reached a stage today when they should be able to translate into practice the principles of self-government and we trust that the forthcoming deliberations will lend a way to the realisation of this fact.

British Charge French Drive Natives from Djibouti

LONDON, Sept. 25 (AP).—Authoritative British sources charged today that French colonial officials at Djibouti were driving some natives at gunpoint to British lines outside that blockaded Somaliland port. They denied British forces had attacked Somaliland posts and said such reports from Vichy may have resulted from the attempt of some Somalis to return to the French lines despite threats of being shot. They probably were mistaken for British colonial forces, these sources said.

All--African Convention and African National Congress

Appeal To All Organised Bodies

Greetings,

During the triennial conference of the All—African Convention last December at Bloemfontein, an important question was referred back to the constituent branches, the question of the relationship between the All African Convention and the African National Congress. The full text of this matter and discussion thereon is to be seen in pages 9, 10, 25 and 26 of the booklet "Minutes of the All African Convention" (obtainable for 7d post free from the Bookstore, P. O. Lovedale, C.P.).

By reason of the crisis of the present war, the daily press declined to telegraph the usual excerpts summarising the proceedings of the conference, but the full minutes are now available as above stated.

It is important that all affiliated bodies post their considered decision on the matter mentioned above to the General Secretary (Mr. S. Mac. Lepolesa, 637 B tho Location, Bloemfontein) before the 30th June next, in order to facilitate the task of co-ordinating the replies for the EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE and in view of the special conference of the All African Convention in December 1941.

All organisations not yet affiliated should immediately correspond with the General Secretary and also secure copies of the previous Minutes containing the constitution (Minutes December 1937, 1/3 post free, Minutes June 1936, 1/3 post free and Findings of the All African Convention 1/- post free, of the same publishers) and get themselves acquainted with the earlier history of the movement.

(Signed) S. Mac. LEPOLESA,
General Secretary.

President.

Cape African Teachers

The Cape African Teachers Association met in congress at Grahamstown last month. Mr. Mkize, B.A. of Umtata presided. A feature of oustanding importance in the preliminary business of the congress was a delegation of five members from U.T.A.T.A. (formerly known as the Transkei Teachers' Association) who brought a message of goodwill to their confederates in congress. It will be remembered that several attempts had been made in years past to unify or federate the Cape African Teachers' Association with the Transkei Teachers' Association; but the ship that carried the olive branch always foundered in the sea of suspicion, distruct and lack of mutual confidence.

The mellowing and educative influence of time resulted in wiser counsels prevailing. Out of spontaneity, the U.T.A.T.A. felt constrained to offer their willingness to have a united body of African teachers in the Cape Province, hence the deputation. We understand that the subject is still under consideration by a committee consisting of an equal representation of both associations. It is hoped that the final issue will be the proposed unified body of teachers. There never seemed to be any soundness in the past, of separate associations representing teachers existing in one and the same province. Under one Provincial Administration, a set of different associations could not do justice to their cause. Either by submitting conflicting views to authority, or creating inevitable prejudice as between members of the several bodies, teachers tended to dissipate their energies in abortive attempts to better themselves.

If the contemplated unification of Cape Teachers be achieved in due course, an example of broad-mindedness will have been set even for administrative bodies like local and General Councils—an example worthy to be followed. We have always contented that enemies of rapprochment, viz. self-protection against possible loss of high offices, inferiority complex, can be overcome if one has self—confidence of meeting the other fellow on the same platform, and if defeated, not to be ashamed to learn and adopt the tactics that gave his adversary the power to defeat.

African Princess Tells About Native Land At Negro 'Y' Session

Pointing out the Negro's contributions to modern civilization, Fatima Massaquoi, native African princess, speaking at Smithfield Court Auditorium Thursday night, cited the part her race is playing among iron workers of industrial America, the rich folklore and spirituals that teach moral lessons, and the Negro's philosophy of life.

Princess Fatima was presented under the auspices of the Negro Y. W. C. A.

The "secret society" of her native Liberia was explained by the princess, who said that the girls are taken from their homes to schools in the "bush" when they reach the age of 3, to be trained by strangers deemed better fitted to teach them than their own parents. When they reach the age of 10, they are usually married to mates of their parents' choosing and go to live with their mothers-in-law where they learn the likes and dislikes of their husbands with the hope of becoming favorite wives.

Accounting for the small amount of crime she said exists in Africa, the speaker related that when one is suspected of crimes in her native land, he or she is forced to withdraw a hot iron from a pot of boiling oil. If it burns, the suspected one is guilty, she said.

There are five organizations similar to our civic groups in America, she asserted, which embrace hundreds of members who are interested in bettering community conditions.

The daughter of a former Liberian consul-general to Germany, Princess Fatima says she will continue her studies at Boston University next year on a scholarship. Her autobiography will be published this Fall by the Rosenwald Foundation through Fisk University.

Domestic Servants In Nigeria

SOME years ago, there was much hustle and bustle among domestic servants in this country which seemed to suggest that after all, they too had come to appreciate the value of co-operation and the success in concerted action. They rushed through the preliminary stages and finally became a registered body under the Trades Union Ordinance. They were, perhaps, misled to think that, being a registered union, they had arrived at their haven and that everything could be got for a song. But after a little over a year, as a registered body, they seem to have learnt their lesson in life and have begun to think differently.

Says a Correspondent: "It would appear to me that in spite of the fact that the Union was registered under the Trades Union Ordinance . . . . . there are yet to be seen what the Government is proposing to do in accordance with the aims and projects of the Union".

From the achievements of a similar union which functions in the Gold Coast, it is safe to predict a very great future for the Nigeria Domestic Servants Union, if this body could only organise and move forward to press its claims under dynamic and intelligent leadership. It must still do a lot more of spade work and endeavour to create that atmosphere of mutual understanding and sympathy between members of the Union as servants and their employers, the European and African masters.

There is nothing urging Government to take sides in this matter, excepting where the issues involved between a master and his servant cross the domestic boundary into the precincts of the law. But Government could act as an intermediary between a union, as a registered and recognised body, and the employers of labour wherever and whenever there is a dispute from either of the parties concerned.

Stipend Of Colony Chiefs

THE position of Native Chiefs in the scheme of the administration of the Colony of Nigeria has yet to be definitely settled by the Government. Unless it is so settled, there will always be trouble and agitation. This fact is amply borne out by the amount of time and paper wasted in writing petitions and replies over the problems of one Chief or another.

Even in Lagos, we are sure that nobody can say definitely what positions the Native Chiefs occupy. There was, the other day, the suggestion that a Native Court should be started in Lagos. The people were dead against it and that for very good reasons. As a matter of fact, the Government knew or ought to have known that such Court would be unacceptable in a place like Lagos before it was suggested to the Chiefs-in-Council that the views of the people should be ascertained.

However, this fact does not dispose the eternal question as to what is the position of Native Chiefs and whether nothing could be found for them to do. It is surely not fair that certain Chiefs should receive stipend and others not when they have all been officially recognised.

In this connection, we have to refer to the question of the unpaid Chiefs at Epe. It is understood that about eight months ago, some persons approached the Commissioner of the Colony over the question of payment of Chiefs and they were told that their Chiefs would be paid if the people agreed that they should be paid. Since then, it is understood that the people have sent a unanimous petition requesting that the Chiefs should be paid but nothing has been done over the petition.

Accuse Italians Of Theft Of Ethiopia's Roval Crown

Italy Claiming New Victory In Mountains

NEW YORK—(C)—The Italians apparently still possess one memento of their short-lived Ethiopian empire, the crown jewels of that country, Hiram B. D. Blauvelt of Oradell, N. J. said when he arrived from Africa, via the West Coast of the West Indies on "Alcoa" liner Evangelism.

A gold, jeweled-encrusted crown one and a half feet high and other jewelry was missing when the British and Ethiopians entered Addis Ababa, he said, and it is believed the departing Italians took it. Blauvelt traveled 30,000 miles through Africa as a representative of the British-American Ambulance Corps. He brought back a collection of flags, weapons and curios which will be exhibited here to raise money for more ambulances. The collection includes: the first Ethiopian flag to fly in that country in 5 years, raised after capture of Harar; a captured Italian Blackshirt Battalion flag; a British air ensign which flew over Aden and a Navi swastika flag taken from the German Legation in Addis Ababa.

ROME, Italy—(C)—Italian and colonial troops of the Culquabert garrison in Northern Ethiopia drove British forces out of positions in the Denghel Mountains in a surprise attack, but 100 were killed and equipment taken, said the Italian High Command.

Reserve Regulations.

These regulations, of which reference was made in the vernacular in our issue of the 12th inst, have become the subject of discussion amongst the African residents of the reserves. In this reserve the salient points of the regulations were, not long ag , read and explained by the Acting District Commissioner at a pitso of the residents at the conclusion of which he stated that if anybody had any points that he would like to have explained to him he could call at his office where he will be given the necessary explanation. The statement is welcome as it leaves the door open for the discussion of such pointsas may affect adversely the interests of the residents of the reserve.

Although we were informed that most of them were old reserve regulations it may be pointed out that however true that may be yet the regulations were not known to the people whom they affect and are therefore properly regarded a new. That they are intended for the benefit of the local residents cannot be doubted, nevertheless this fact does not place them above criticism and we shall endeavour to make here as constructive a criticism as we can possible make. There are several points requiring consideration and discussion but we propose to discuss first the building of houses and the cleanliness of pavements

The regulations provide that no building or extension of a building must be carried on before submitting a plan to and obtaining a written permission of the local authority. We have not been acquainted of the causes that led to this requirement but we presume that it is with the object of complying with the modern requirements of town planning which aims at avoiding slum conditions and encouraging airy and well lighted houses that are conducive to good health, and no one would quarrel with such requirements as they are for our interests. The cleaning of pavements in front of the houses, though it may entail extra labour that may at first be uncomfortable yet in course of time people may get used to it and appreciate it. But in this reserve while there are parts of the Native village that have been well planned and sufficiently wide streets were made, yet there some parts where there is no order, where huts are clusted together in a confused form, facing in all directions and where there are no streets at all. Perhaps the regulations refer more particularly to the former than to the later parts of the village. We have now come to a point that falls under the hammer of our criticism. These streets, the pavements of which the residents are required to keep clean, failing which they are subject to punishment, are very badly neglected and are almost useless for traffic in the village. In some streets there are slutes and ditches running along them while in others they are cutting across them. Slutes and ditches as is commonly known are places in which all sorts of dirt and rubbish collect and naturally become breeding places for all kinds of disease carrying germs This is a danger to which the residents of the village are exposed and if the health of the residents of these parts of the village is endangered whose fault will it be? Will it be theirs or those responsible for the maintenance of the road—the Government? Nobody will deny that the Government will be held responsible.

The residents, according to the new regulations are liable to prosecution for throwing ashes and rubbish in the streets and not keeping them clean. But with the roads so neglected these rubbish is the only expedience to which recourse can be made in order to maintain traffic that is so necessary in the village We—Native,—are very unfortunate. If we complain, it is because we are ungrateful. If owing to our modesty we keep quiet hoping that in the end our needs will be attended to, our modesty is mistaken for contentedness with the existing conditions Complaints have been made from time to time in the columns of this paper about the state of the roads in the Native village yet little has been done to improve them. Traffic in the Native village is one of the important items in the life of the residents of the village. They cannot exist without it, and yet it appears as if nobody is responsible for it. Several Natives living in this village own cars and lorries for which they pay tax yet nothing will be done to improve roads in the village; there are today Natives holding traders licences in this village yet nothing is done for their traffic. The European Traders in town who are carrying on mostly Native trade and have to deliver goods to their customers at the village must carry on traffic at a great risk to their vehicles, yet roads leading to the race course, to the range and to polo ground—places of amusement to the European community must be kept in good condition though they are not required for continuous service—to say nothing of roads leading to the residential quarters of the European community. Is this fair?

It is high time that the village recieved better attention in the hands of the authorities than it does at present—especially from the traffic point of view.

There are several such anomalies in Basutoland and so long as the interests of the Natives will be considered like those of dumb animals, that is, doing things for them without taking trouble to consult them as to their needs and wishes and must be expected to accept without murmur, whatever is considered good for them by their rulers there will always be such anomalies, the criticism of which is to their di-comfiture. So much for that.

"Strangers" Tax: A Nigerian Vindication

In WEST AFRICA for October 20 last, criticism was passed upon what appeared excessive localism in Nigeria, one being in an Emirate of the Northern Provinces. An African, non-Mahommedan, visited a friend, also non-Mahommedan, fell ill, and was taken to hospital, and on its being found that he was a " stranger " (a person from a district outside that administrative area) he was ordered to pay 9/- residential tax, and his host was fined £3 for "harbouring" a non-taxpaying "stranger". So ran the statement reaching us and, on the assumption that it was accurate, comment was passed to the effect that the action appeared unjustifiable.

The incident was referred to again on April 12 last, when a reader formerly of Nigeria, now in Iraq, expressed disagreement with the original criticism and gave his view that no injustice had been done. The circumstances have been investigated in the Northern Provinces with thoroughness and authoritatively ; and we have to state that the comment by our correspondent in Iraq proves justified, and our own comment cannot be sustained.

The " stranger " had come from Jos into the Zaria Emirate. Investigation has shown that he had not paid his dues in Jos, nor was he able to show that he had paid in any part of Nigeria. His host was not fined £3 for harbouring.

We have to express regret that an erroneous version was given in our columns. Our regret, however, is not unqualified, for investigation led to the finding of a minute by the Emir of Zaria in his own handwriting in connexion with this case. This is the translation:—" I have inquired into this matter, and as it was a first offence I severely reprimanded him and warned him that if he does it again he will be sharply punished.

This evidence that a leading Emir in dealings with non-Mahommedans is guided by the consideration as to first offenders, leads to the reflection that, after all, a good purpose has been served. There is nothing unreasonable in requiring a taxpayer to be able to produce his tax receipt.

Africans Protest Police Brutality

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa —(ANP)—It is interesting to notice how life among natives in Africa and Negroes in America parallel in many respects. In many cities in the United States protests are being made because of the brutality of police. Here in this far off outpost ruled by the British, Africans are compelled to resort to the same processes in seeking protection.

Last week a delegation of African leaders led by Dr. Alfred B. Xuma, famous specialist and president of the African Negro congress, who was accompanied by S. P. Matseke, president of the Transvaal congress and Edwin Mofutsanyane, called upon the minister of justice by appointment.

They outlined the grievances of the African people, protesting against raids made by white police on African homes; the savage methods with which they are conducted; the reckless use of firearms by police on unarmed Africans; the difficulties placed in the way of Africans proving assaults made by police; the raiding and arresting of Africans for brewing native beer when municipalities were allowed to brew beer and sell it to the natives.

The commissioner promised to take the representation under advisement and to punish any police whom he found guilty of abuse.

FAMED MILITARY ACADEMY RE-ORGANIZED IN AFRICA

St. Cyr, Founded By Napoleon, Re-Established in Central Africa By De Gaullist Free French Forces Under General Eboue, Black Governor.

By Our London Correspondent

LONDON, Oct. 23. (Censored)—Were Napoleon Bonaparte, Emperor of the French and first dictator of modern Europe to return to this world, he would be surprised to discover that the famous military academy founded by him is no longer in France but in Central Africa.

Saint Cyr, which has educated some of the greatest military leaders of France, has been re-established by General de Gaulle with the assistance of the West Indian Negro Governer-General, Felix Sylvester Eboue, chief of the Free French African empire of Equatorial Africa, at Brazzaville, and is busily training white and black officers for the Free French Army.

General de Gaulle, who has just returned to London after an extensive tour through Africa and the Near East—Syria, Palestine and Egypt, expressed great satisfaction with the development of the Free French movement among the natives. He also expressed high admiration for the work of Governor Eboue, who led the revolt against the Vichy Government of surrender. As a result of this timely move, the Free French movement organized by General de Gaulle in England is now able to reorganize and recruit new forces in French African territories.

Brazzaville, the capital and headquarters of Governor Eboue, has become the chief centre of resistance against the Nazi controlled Vichy government in West Africa. It is the point to which Frenchmen from all parts of the world make their way to enroll and undergo training for service in the Free French forces.

Regent W. S. Morris Declares He Is Still Opposed to Ouster

State Regent W. S. Morris issued a statement at Augusta last night concerning an "erroneous impression" he said several friends had gathered regarding his position on the ouster of Dean Walter D. Cocking of the University of Georgia's School of Education.

The president and publisher of the Augusta Chronicle said "several of my friends have told me they gained the impression from Monday morning's story about the southern university conference meeting in Birmingham that I had reversed my position, and appeared before the committee with the Governor and other board of regents members to defend the ousting of Dean Walter D. Cocking of the University of Georgia."

Cocking was ousted by a 10-to-5 vote of the regents, Morris voting with the minority, on Talnadge's charges that the educator advocated racial co-education.

Recalling that he had voted against dismissal of Cocking, Morris said any impression that he had reversed his position was "erroneous" and added, "I fel exactly the same way about the issue as I did when I cast my vote with the minority members of the board of regents against his ouster.

"I did not go to Birmingham to defend the dismissal of Cocking," he continued. "My only purpose in appearing before the committee of the Southern University Conference, along with the Governor and other members of the board of regents, was to do what I could in the interest of the University of Georgia, and to try to prevent the committee from asking our state university to withdraw from the conference."

FORMER U.S. STUDENT IN PASSIONED PLEA FOR AIR TRAINING

LAGOS, Nigeria, West Coast Africa, Sept. 25—(ANP)—Residents of Lagos, British West Africa costal colony, have been pleading with English officials to train their young men for aviation, George I. Mbadiwe, former student at Lincoln university, Pa., but son of a well-known family here, served as spokesman in presenting the claim of the native population to a chance to earn honor in flying for the mother country.

Said Mr. Mbadiwe: "There has been much discourse in the press of late about the arrangements being made for the training of air-minded Nigerian young men as pilots, gunners and radio-mechanics in the Royal Air Force. Appeals have been made for men with the required qualifications, physical and academic. There is no doubt that a good number of young men will have responded to the call—a few of them, of course, who do not satisfy the specified requirements, physical or academic, will have to wait. It has been observed further that some who have passed the preliminary tests—other tests await them in England—have still got to wait.

MUST UTILIZE ALL MAN-POWER

"It is an esetablished fact," said Mr. Mbadiwe, "that this war is not a secretarian war. It will not be limited to Europe, to Asia or to Africa. It is already in the hearts of the Americas. It is not a war for the liberation of Europe, or of Asia, or of Ethiopia. It is a war for a fuller and a clearer assertion of the rights of man. If we must defeat Hitler, let us do so quickly and decisively. All our resources all our manpower must be utilized. The direct sacrifice in economy must be made. We need an air training school for Nigeria."

Before Mr. Mbadiwe came to America in 1938 to attend Lincoln university, he studied at the Aggrey Memorial College, Aro-Chuku.

Haile Selassie Asks Britain's Aid

LONDON.—(ANP)—A statement released Friday, dealing with the misunderstanding which has arisen regarding the non-representation of Ethiopia at the interallied conference Wednesday revealed that Haile Selassie, emperor of Ethiopia, had told the British government that he would need certain outside assistance and guidance in economic and political matters. In reply, the statement said that the British government intends to recognize an independent Ethiopia as soon as the military situation would permit.

It pointed out that the task of restoring civil administration and creating an army in Ethiopia, which for six years has been under Italian control and ravaged by two wars, is difficult. The emperor is receiving help and support from Britain, and discussions are going on regarding what form the assistance and guidance should take.

Concluding, the statement said, "It is impossible to forecast the precise time when the exchange of diplomatic representatives will take place, but it may be assumed that this will be done as soon as the situation permits."

NIGERIANS SEEK FREE EDUCATION

ENUGU, Nigeria, West Coast Africa, Sept. 25—(ANP)—Speaking before the African club here, C. D. Onueama, LL.D., made a plea for the free education of Nigerian citizens. Averring that large portions of African population are still ignorant and superstitious, he stated that the government should take immediate steps toward overcoming these failures.

It has been the erroneous opinion of many that anyone who had been to England was educated, said Mr. Onueama. This, particularly true among females of the country, brought about the formation of a hybrid society which regarded itself as far too superior to its compatriots, which resulted in their being classified as neither Africans nor Europeans.

In his opinion, the education which Africans must seek should be based upon a plan which aims at spreading knowledge to all parts of the country.

Housing in Basutoland.

The problem of housing African civil servants has been brought up for discussion in the press by one Mr. Wilfred T. Sera and since then another correspondent signing himself as James S. Thotolo has written in your issue of the 30th ultimo to support the contention of Mr. Sera.

Well, Mr. Editor, as Pessimist I fail to see what good will your correspondents gain by shedding crocodile tears and howling, in the paper, like miserable dogs in a deserted village, for they know perfectly well that the reins of government are in the hands of the ruling race who are looking after their own interests and have no time for the poor Africans who will not be contented with the trouble the government has taken on their behalf but must keep on grumbling. Somebody told me that any criticisms appearing in the press with the object of improving the lot of the Africans merely show how ungrateful the Natives are for the good that the white man has done for them.

A few months ago one European woman, a descendant of the missionaries was criticising the way the Regent Mantšebo had dressed for the reception pitso for Lord Harlech, our present High Commissioner, on the occasion of his first visit to Basutoland. She thought the Regent didn't look well in European fashion and that the best thing that she should have done was to come to the pitso wrapped up in her blanket—the national garb. Mr Editor I am only bringing up this to show how the Europeans look down upon us. Although the missionaries have brought us light—and they were proud of the fact—yet their decendants will sneer at our attempts to show that we have embraced their doctrines.

Talk of housing! Why every house for the European civil servants in this country is a palace, complete with out-houses for servants, roomy stables for horses, cow sheds and sheds for storing feed for these animals—motor garages and all. They get an allowance for petrol and three pounds a month for a horse that will go on trek once in twelve months. But when it comes to housing Natives—Oh Lord! have mercy on us! Masern interpreters were lucky—the pioneers in that occupation were chiefs and built their own roomy and comfortable houses that were later sold to the government and have ever since been used to house interpreters. As for others it appears as though iron-roofed two tiny roomed houses were considered as making Europeans of the Natives—but the bedrooms are just big enough to contain a double bed and the sitting room with a small table in it leaves scarcely any room to allow a fed Native woman to pass in and out with ease without squeezing herself uncomfortably. They are not expected to cook food in these houses neither to make fire to warm themselves during winter months—and who does not know how bitterly cold are the winters in this country—nor are they expected to have families when they are in the service.

Reading the reserve regulations one day recently I noticed that no new buildings were to be put up in the reserves unless plans of same had been submitted to the local authority for approval—I suppose it is with the object of stopping "Natives" from putting up decent houses that will look like European houses if not, what else can be expected? The example has already been set. You need only go to the police barracks in the reserves to see it. If I am wrong in my opinion, Mr. Editor, and I hold that I am right, the local authority at Ty. should immediately order that the huts housing the police at that reserve be pulled down at the expense of him who is responsible for their up-keep and that more modern and hygienic houses be put up instead that will not be a disgrace to the government that employs them. That would be a just thing to do but Mr. Editor, Pessimist as I am I will eat my head if he will do it for that would be against the object of the regulations on housing.

With the usual formalities

Pessimist.

De Pitch Black Follie in Rustenburg

AUG 30 1941

(By SOLUS)

At the instance of Mr. Sol. Sizumo, Secretary of the Rustenburg Local Council Rustenburg was terribly raided by the famous De Pitch Black Follies, of Johannesburg, on the nights of August 15 and 16. The visiting artists, under the able conductorship of Mr. Griffiths Motsieloa, gave two successful performances in the local Old Bioscope Hall which hitherto was only known to be for Europeans. On the first night (Saturday) the spacious capacity of the hall was heavily taxed, and the visitors given a rousing reception as this was their first time to give a performance in Rustenburg. The audience, some 500 souls strong, was composed of nearly all the racial elements to be found in this part of the country, and was held spell-bound from the first rendering till the close. The atmosphere itself was so highly charged with excitement that it seemed difficult to believe that most of the people would ever recover from so deep a mental well. At any rate, the Black Follies' 'fury' was all the more serious, with Misses Snowie Radebe and Eleanor Oliphant high in the admiration of the crowd. Stanley Kambule, Jonathan Masoleng and Nimrod Mahlangu proved themselves old masters of the stage, whilst, as pianist, young Godfrey Choolo showed what an African was capable of doing when given opportunity and encouragement.

The function was one of the first ever to be well-organised in the District. And, in this connection, Mr. Sol. L. Sizumo was highly complimented as rightly did Mr Motsieloa point out that, had it not been through the efforts of Mr. Sizumo they might never have known Rustenburg. The presence of ex-Native Commissioner for Rustenburg, Major T. E. Liefeldt lent a note of dignity to the proceedings. It was on the night of the first performance that, in difference to the wishes of the majority of the members of the audience, it was decided to have a Repeat Show on Monday, the 18. On both nights with the second with a much larger attendance, the presence of the cream of the District was most conspicuous. Dancing also took place on the second night. I must, in conclusion, make mention of the names of Messrs R. S. Sidzumo and S. Morake, both of the Native Affairs Dept., who greatly assisted in making the performances the success they were and in arranging with the local church leaders about furniture etc. for use in the hall on these important occasions. To Rev. J. G. and Mrs. Swaartland go the hearty thanks not only of the visitors but also of the community for the kind hospitality accorded the visitors during their memorable stay in Rustenburg.

Africans and the Police.

According to The Bantu World of 9th August, on July 8 a deputation of the African National Congress led by Dr. A. B. Xuma, President-General, waited on the Honourable the Minister of Justice. The deputation was the result of telegraphic protests and letter representations made by the President-General of the Congress regarding the shooting and killing of Africans by Police; Police raids; and relations of Police and Africans in general. Dr. Xuma was communicated with by telephone from the Department of Justice and advised to form a deputation of three with himself. He quickly made arrangements with Mr. S. P. Matseke—President, Transvaal Congress—and Mr. R. V. Selope Thema, M.R.C. as other members of the deputation. Unfortunately, three hours before the deputation was due at the Palace of Justice, Mr. Thema declared his inability to join the deputation, consequently, Mr. Edwin Mofutsanyane substituted for Mr. Thema. The deputation then met the Minister at 2.30. The members were introduced to the Honourable the Minister by Dr. Xuma who also led the representations made. He, at once, expressed appreciation of the Congress to the Minister for his courtesy and public-mindedness in meeting a deputation of Africans who could give him certain aspects of any question in Native Affairs which no non-African is capable of. In the forty-five minutes that ensued various aspects of Police and Africans were discussed, such as

(1) Police Raids on African homes and African people.
  (a) The method in which they are conducted.
  (b) Need and reasons for their abolition.

(2) Reckless use of fire-arms by police on unarmed Africans.
  (a) Shooting, killing of two Africans and wounding one African at Sophiatown, June 15th, 1941.
  (b) Police raid and shooting near Roodepoort on Sunday, July 6th, 1941.

(3) Treatment and arrest of certain cases at Benoni and elsewhere.

(4) Police Raid at Western Native Township, Johannesburg, on the 22nd June, 1941 and the following Thursday.

(5) Alleged assault of pregnant woman by police at Sophiatown.

(6) Difficulty for Africans to prove allegations of assault by police, and why.

(7) Raiding and arresting Africans for Native Beer when the municipalities are allowed to brew and sell beer to Africans.

(8) Abuse of the right to use fire-arms in self-defence or alibi of action taken in the lawful prosecution of duty.

These and other questions formed the basis of the discussion. The deputation was most sympathetically received by the Minister who expressed appreciation of the spirit in which the deputation came, and stated that he expects the police to be exemplary in their conduct and not to break the law in its enforcement. He further stated that where evidence was conclusive he would take severe disciplinary measures against any policeman. It was his desire, he said, that no section of the community be singled out for ill-treatment. In conclusion, he urged the deputation to draw up a memorandum along the lines of their representations and submit the same to him for substantiation and action. Dr. Xuma thanked the Minister for his sympathetic and patient hearing of the deputation's representations as well as for his appreciation of the good intentions of the deputation. It is understood that the deputation is now engaged in the preparation of their memorandum for the Minister as requested.

What of the African?

Most Europeans in the territories to which this newspaper is devoted are, of course, alive to the continuing perils of the present position, of which the above-mentioned items are but a few of many; but what of the African? Gone are the days when the Native might be considered to know little and care less about the causes and consequences of the white man's wars. Nowadays the African, however deficient his detailed information, is alert to implications: but though he knows that for him all that makes life worth living depends upon the British winning this war, he, like the European, needs to be reminded by wise propaganda of facts casually accepted but not deeply graven upon the consciousness. In particular, it should be repeatedly explained that for him the triumph of Germany would mean just what Hitler and the other apostles of the "Nordic creed" have stated, a return to slavery, as befitting the "half-ape." That, it cannot be too often recalled, is, in "Mein Kampf," the Nazi Bible, the synonym of "African."

Language Of The Drum Saved By Young Missionary In Congo

By GEORGE WELLER

Chicago Daily News-The Commercial Appeal Special Radio. Copyright, 1941

CONGO RIVER STATION, YAKUSU, STANLEYVILLE, Belgian Congo—In the nick of time to save the vanishing art of talking drums, John F. Carrington, a young missionary here at this jungle outpost partially supported by American contributions, has been able, by intensive encouragement, to keep the young generation of the Congo peoples from losing forever a unique method of primitive communication.

Aided by a tall, deeply tattooed old drum master named Lifindiki Tuaytolo, which in English means "Quarrelsome Smith," Mr. Carrington has been able within the past year to instill the river tribes centering around this Baptist station with sufficient interest in the jungle telegraph so that it will probably survive a few years more.

Beat Out Messages

While nearby a swimming hippopotamus' nose barely appearing above the Congo's brown flood made an arrowhead ripple upstream, Mr. Carrington, who is a tall, blond Briton, 29 years old, stood beside a six-foot village drum beating out messages for your correspondent.

"As soon as the tribesmen leave the villages and get acquainted with the white man's telephone and telegraph they begin to disdain the drum," he said. "They even forget their drum name, given to them by their fathers at birth."

At the correspondent's request, Mr. Carrington, in drum language, asked the fisher people of the village, for whom meat is a rare delicacy, why they had failed to enter their canoes and spear the swimming hippo. Mr. Carrington translated the reply:

"We cannot overpower majesty of his jaws."

OCT 10 1941

Language Is Elaborate

The drum language is more elaborate than human speech, Mr. Carrington has found. When Germany invaded Belgium, the jungle drums called it not simply a war, but a "war of spears and knives."

In drum language every spoken and written word becomes a full phrase. The reason is that each drum, like the spoken language of the Lokele fisher folk, uses only two tones, obtained by hollowing wood to different depths upon opposite sides of the drum's sound-hole. Contrary to human tones, the high note is called the man's voice because it carries farther, and the low is called the woman's. One drumstick strikes the woman's side of the drum, the other the man's, each blow corresponding to a syllable in an ordinary language. But since many spoken words when drummed would sound identical, names are expanded into long synonyms in order to bring out variations. Thus the jungle telegraph has become a kind of poetry rather than cablese and longer rather than shorter than human speech.

Big bluish-black clouds were piling over the opposite side of the river and the villagers began fearfully closing the doors of their wicker huts when Mr. Carrington pounded the rain call which goes, "Badman, son of disease, is coming down upon clods of earth."

Quarrelsome Smith took over the two rubber-ended drumsticks and began hammering out the call to frighten away the rain.

"Don't come, rain, the men of our village don't want you."

The drum-making village of Yafolo, 40 miles upriver, carves drums from the bolondo, a species of pterocarpus wood. Drums require a fortnight's work, cost $20 and up and last about 10 years. Eight-foot drums carry about 15 miles but contrary to explorers' stories of the Congo, drum messages cannot be sent long distances because they cannot be understood where the tribal language is different.

The polite drum word for a white is "white man spirit from the forest," but until recently the synonym, "death on the river," was common.

Wave Of Divorces In Congo Brings Joy To Catholic Priest

OCT 17 1941

By GEORGE WELLER

Chicago Daily News-The Commercial Appeal Special Cable. Copyright, 1941

RUNGA, Territory of Paulis, Province of Stanleyville.—A wave of divorces has struck the village of Ndubala, 70 miles from here, and Father Jordan Bonhomme, head of this Dominican mission, is rubbing his hands gleefully.

No less than 15 marriages have been broken up, each violation of the bonds of matrimony causing greater satisfaction to the reverend father who is known as one of the holiest men in the Congo. Every time another marriage at Ndubala goes bust Father Bonhomme says an extra litany of thanksgiving.

Peculiar Circumstances

This does not mean that the Catholic Church in the jungle has renounced its traditional opposition to divorce. The circumstances placing Father Bonhomme on the side of Reno are peculiar.

Under the code of Congolese polygamy, getting married to another woman is like buying another issue of bonds in the United States. Every wife works productively whether in the garden, at home, or upon the river fishing. The man pays the wife's family for the privilege of marrying her and thereafter she bears interest in labor, companionship and children, principally in labor.

When a divorce is decided upon, whether at the wife's or husband's initiative, the wife's father repays to the husband the money the husband expended in acquiring her with a reasonable allowance for deterioration and obsolescence. The wife then returns home and awaits the next bidder.

Madangba, former chief of the Mangbetus at Ndubala, had 40 wives, which made Father Bonhomme refer to him blushingly as the "Troubadour."

Father Bonhomme wanted to improve the moral situation at Ndubala without upsetting connubial economics. Whenever he visited the village he had long talks with Madangba's son, Mopira, destined to inherit all his father's 40 wives.

When Madangba died last year Mopira, although still a thorough pagan, consented to cut down the family endowment from 40 to 15 wives. Father Bonhomme sat back quietly to wait 25 years, hoping to reach monogamy with the next generation rather than to flood the market with wives.

He Keeps Only One

This week Father Bonhomme received from Mopira a letter which reads:

"I have considered well and am sending this letter before your eyes in order to tell you I wish to be baptized a Christian. I have selected the wife whom I wish to love and cherish as the only one and am making preparations for returning the others to their families. Please keep her with you until the divorces have taken place."

The Dominicans have a standard requirement of two years' instruction to men before baptism can take place and only about 4000 of the 150,000 in this region are Christians. But a woman, like Mopira's wife, can become a Christian through her husband's act of embracing the faith.

"I understand that in returning my wives to their families only in order to become a Christian, I cannot hope to claim or recover the money my father and I have paid for them," Mopira told Father Bonhomme. "But I shall be able to go through the ritual of telling my 14 wives they are going to be divorced only providing you and the territorial administrator sit beside me in the village when the divorces begin."

Stampede For Salt

Until we receive fuller reports, we shall not be very free to express our opinion on the incident which took place at Onitsha as reported in this Newspaper on Saturday last, but the character of the story tends to suggest that there are Salt Days at Onitsha, on which days alone salt may be sold. On the last Salt Day, the number of people were so many that a rush was inevitable for people to secure their shares, and so many were trampled upon.

OCT 3 1941

Reports go to suggest that profiteering is very much prevalent at Onitsha, and many petty traders and even big ones, cannot raise a hand of not being guilty. The Court is severe on the offenders, but heavy penalty has not succeeded to debar the profiteers. It will save much unpleasantness and danger to life if salt and other commodities are allowed to circulate free.

We also suggest that the Competent Authority in charge of fixing the price of local articles should employ non-uniformed men who should go to the market, bring the daily ruling prices of goods, and have power to arrest those who sell dearer and those who buy dearer than the ruling prices.

This method which the Lagos Town Council has decided to adopt will, if employed in the Provinces, help to stabilize price fluctuations. Besides, the weight of Court penalty on offenders should increase in case of big firms, and Magistrates should be disposed to inflict exemplary punishments.

Recognition For Bravery.

THE GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN RHODESIA has presented a bicycle (his own choice) to a Native for his bravery while helping to rescue a Royal Air Force pilot from a burning aeroplane. It was obviously an action which merited reward, but the award was hardly in line with the merit. Not long ago an African of Northern Rhodesia who had shown like bravery in saving the life of a white miner received an official award for gallantry; and in many weeks of the past year this newspaper has had the pleasure of recording the receipt of D.C.M. and M.M. by askari for gallantry in the field. Courage, whether in the surroundings of peace or under fire, is ever the same shining quality, worthy of parallel and fitting official recognition.

Discharged From Asylum

NOT many yards from the Yaba Police Station, in the commercial area, a man has been living in the shrubs by the main road for many days. Day and night he could be seen there with nothing to cover his skin except one thin blanket. Last Saturday, as if he was tired of life, he moved to the main road and stretched his feet out. A representative of this Newspaper seeing him complained to the Police. He was informed that the man was discharged from the Asylum and that the authorities could do nothing about it.

In the normal run of things, lunatics are salvaged from the streets and admitted into the Asylum. When they have gained reason, they are again sent into the street. This man could easily be killed on the bus route where he was allowed to stay.

Is it not possible to provide for such unfortunate persons, so that, discharged from the Asylum, they could be cared for? Is it not possible to get in touch with their people and find out if they are willing to board them until they could work and provide for themselves?

The way we allow the disabled members of our society to move about the township or live on the main roads is a shame. Africans have not learnt to be so generous in their outlook or regard it as their duty to help in this way. One reason is that Government attitude in treating Africans like children does not give rise to individual or even collective power of cultivating initiative.

Shagamu-Ijebu Ode Road

AN accident which happened on the Shagamu-Ijebu Ode road recently points to the necessity for effective policing of the route which is getting more important as days pass by. On the date in question, there was a motor lorry accident at mile 27 from Shagamu. Since there was no telephone in the area, one of the victims, after extricating himself from his entanglement, made for the Police to report.

At the station he found nobody save one who was their Chief. According to our report, this Chief explained the lack of Constables either at the route or in the town by the fact that there were only four Constables and all of them, on that day, had been posted to duties outside the town. This Constable followed his informant to the scene of the accident and rendered such help as was in his power.

If the news is true that there are only four Constables on duty at Shagamu, then the matter should engage the serious attention of the authorities. What can four Constables achieve if faced by armed burglars, if called upon to quell riot or to discharge any of those duties that demand serious Police intervention? What will happen if the four Constables are outnumbered, in a town where they cannot telephone for help?

Several times have we written about traffic on this road calling attention to the dangers of the lack of Police supervision on this route where negligent driving is well known. We maintain that from Idumagbo Marina to Ijebu Ode all is not safe on the route and the authorities concerned should investigate and take the necessary action.

Salt In Nigerian Economy

SALT is gradually playing an important part in the economy of the country. It was not long ago that we published the news about the stampede for salt and how some women were trampled at Onitsha and now our Ibadan Agent has given some revelations of what obtains in that big and important town. It appears as if profiteering in salt eclipses that of any other commodity and very soon there may be shortage if matters are not adjusted.

The salt situation in the country has assumed serious and appalling dimensions and it will be good if the authorities do not take things lightly. Competent authorities all over the country should lend themselves to the solution of the problem and devise ways and means of arriving at an adjustment acceptable both to the seller and the consumer.

The possibility of meeting up the supply of imported salt with local salt should be explored. A considerable quantity of salt exists in the Chad basin and in various parts of Northern Nigeria, and with the active help of the Agricultural Department, many tons can be added to the existing quantity. Not only the Agricultural Department but the laboratories of our colleges can help in purifying salt and so deviate the syllabus for practical chemistry until the end of the war.

At any rate, the people of this country should be relieved from the unpleasant situation which salt is creating in the country.

Transfer Of Native Teachers In Natal

A Reply

Sir,

I maintain that the Department does not make it its policy as "Disgusted Parent's" remarks imply, to transfer teachers without a good reason. The Department has the interests of the parents in view always. Sometimes transfers are effected to suit either the teacher or the community. In such cases both the teacher and community gladly accept the transfer. It may be felt that the only way to avoid friction between the two would be to transfer the teacher, and consequently the other school whose teacher had no trouble with the community suffers.

The Department has as much interest in the one school as in the other and wants to be fair with its teachers and respective communities. If it did not give any cognisance to the grievances of the communities there would still be more trouble. It may be necessary too, in some instances, to send a teacher that has not been serving his community in the way that the Department thinks satisfactory, to a school that will not be easy to work and so make him penitent.

What would "Disgusted Parent's" reaction be if he were disgusted with a teacher, and the Department paid no heed to his complaints? I believe he would be a "Very Disgusted Parent."

It costs the Department money to transfer a teacher and still more to initiate him to the conditions of the new school, so why should the Department take a more costly course when it could have let sleeping dogs lie?

There are quite a lot of teachers in Government Schools who have not been transferred for a long time. This indicates clearly that the Department does not favour transfers without a reason. Further, transfers are not confined to Government Schools alone, Aided Schools suffer similarly. Sometimes teachers want transfers or communities want teachers transferred for some reason or other, and such circumstances force the Department to recommend transfers. It appears that "Disgusted Parent" wants to make a general statement on a few instances which may happen to have come to his notice, but if he would consider the amount of difficulty that the Department has in dealing with its 800 - 900 schools with different conditions and grievances, he would quietly put up with its decision to transfer teachers.

The Department is aware of the disadvantages of transferring teachers during the year, but if it could have a guarantee that no complaints would arise either from the parents or from the teachers, perhaps "Disgusted Parent" would have greater cause to complain about the transfer of teachers.

"Disgusted Parent" seems to know so much about the mysteries of the Education Department that I wonder if he is not "Disgusted disgruntled teacher." From my knowledge of the teachers in Zululand, they are a happy lot.

The July News Letter of the League of Coloured Peoples (164, Queen's Road, Peckham, S.E.15; 3d., post free), is an 18-page issue, again with numerous features of general interest. The committee of the League has decided to appoint a full-time travelling secretary to form branches, etc. The statement is made that leaves granted by "corporations in London" (it is not stated whether this means City livery companies or commercial enterprises) specifically bar from tenancy or sub-tenancy persons of "colour". Congratulations are offered to Mr. G. Foster, of Jamaica, on his appointment as an assessor by the British Ministry of Labour.

An account is given of a social meeting of the League at which the chief guest was the Under-Secretary for the Colonies, Mr. George Hall, M.P. Mr. Watson, of the Ministry of Labour, on the same occasion gave an account of the doings of 115 Jamaicans at Merseyside at work on munitions. After a severe bombing, they turned out to work punctually and in full. Reference is made to Alderman D. A. Miller, who fills many important public offices in Plymouth, including the Head Wardenship (unpaid), and whose father was a Sierra Leonean (Freetown). An extract from Sir Selwyn Grier's recent address at Dorking is reproduced from WEST AFRICA.

The News Letter states that many years ago a Jamaican N.C.O. won the V.C.

East Africa and Rhodesia
London, England

ON THE NECESSARY ASSUMPTION that the summary published by the Uganda Church Review does him textual justice, a statement made by Mr. G. C. Turner, Principal of Makerere College, Uganda, and former Master of Marlborough, is of considerable significance. Addressing a Church Missionary Society conference on education, he is reported to have said: "What should an African school be like? There is always a danger of trying to imitate too closely an exotic model, for example, an English boarding school, which embodies the long social tradition of another race and derives its nutriment from a foreign soil. In Africa a school formed after the model of the English public school might easily show the defects rather than the merits of that institution: it might tend to produce too many prigs and too many bullies. A form of discipline is necessary: it should be simple and clear, and multiplicity of rules must be avoided." So far-reaching a statement from such a source seems to call for elaboration, and it may assuredly be assumed that the great number of people deeply interested in this subject throughout East Africa and the Rhodesias will be anxious to have a further pronouncement upon the matter from Mr. Turner.

JUL 31 1941

A Problem of Education in East Africa.

Preventing Prigs and Bullies.

They will, in the first place, want to know what alternative the Principal of Makerere College has in mind. At Makerere, as in the case of the English public schools upon which it is broadly modelled, there are assembled African boys and adolescents from far and near, many of them from districts hundreds of miles away. In that respect the parallel between this seat of higher education for Eastern Africa and the English public school is precise. The intention—implemented with acknowledged success there and at the Gordon Memorial College, Khartoum, as at Achimota, on the Gold Coast—is, while embodying all that is of value in home tradition, to lead the pupil forward towards progressive social utility. Mr. Turner has mentioned, as an apparent drawback of the plan to model such an institution on the English prototype, that the result might be a harvest containing too many prigs and bullies. But in schools of any kind anywhere this twin phenomena is an incidental drawback always to be encountered and checked. It is therefore probable that the abbreviated published report says less than Mr. Turner actually explained.

The Place of Discipline.

In regard to discipline he leaves us equally desirous of further explanation. He is recorded as alluding to "a form of discipline" being necessary, and to have added that "it should be simple and clear, and a multiplicity of rules must be avoided." But surely such a definition of scholastic discipline is an exact counterpart of that which is in fact found in the English public school. What modification is intended? It would be useful to know. In the case both of the European and the African the concern is with the formation of the character of the boy, and even more largely the adolescent, away from his home; and for that reason discipline is certainly as necessary to the young African as to any other male adolescent. The temptations and tendencies of adolescence are widely known, and they are deeper pitfalls in the path of the African than of the average European. Surely, then, the best environment in which to check and govern them is that in which discipline is enforced with wisdom.

That same universally salutary influence is surely also the best safeguard against such abnormalities in the young of any race as the bully and prig. It is admitted, of course, that any comparison of such institutions as Makerere and the English public school must take constantly into account the profound differences of biological and racial development in the pupils. But such factors have from the outset been kept in mind. Mr. Turner, an outstanding headmaster fresh from a great English public school, and now with two years' experience at Makerere behind him, can express the views of an exceptionally placed specialist upon this wide and immensely important subject, which must influence the whole trend of educational progress in Eastern Africa. We trust, therefore, that he will set forth his opinions in greater detail and with undiminished candour.

A Plea for More Detail.

M. P. Wants Democracy To Be Taught In Colonial Schools

JUN 25 1941

LONDON (B.M.).—Colonel Joshua Wedgwood, M.P. and author of "Forever Freedom: An Anthology On Democracy And Freedom," wants the various Colonial Governments in Africa and the West Indies to use it as a reader for coloured children and students in the schools, so as to inspire them with democratic ideas and arouse their love for liberty.

Discussing the matter in Parliament, Colonel Wedgwood, descendant of a famous family of potters, asked Mr. G. H. Hall, the ex-Welsh miner, and Labour Party Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, whether, in view of the need for the teaching of the virtues of liberty and Democracy, he contemplates taking steps to get such education into the schools in the Colonies?

He also asked whether he will consult the educational authorities in the Colonies and the Ministry of Information in the matter, and consider combining such instruction with the teaching of the English tongue?

To this, the Under-Secretary replied:

"The Colonial peoples vary greatly in race, language, tradition and civilization and their educational system must be framed with regard to these differences.

"But the virtues of liberty and Democracy are fundamental conceptions which must underlie all British systems of education; and I assure my Right Honourable friend that the atmosphere of instruction in the Colonies is infused with these ideas.

"The teaching of the English language is fostered as a general policy and is itself designed to unlock for the Colonial peoples, through the teaching of literature and history, the storehouse of those political ideas which are part and parcel of the British heritage.

"While, therefore, I entirely agree with the spirit of my Right Honourable friend's enquiry, I feel that there is no need to take the specific steps which he indicates when the whole course of day-to-day administration in this sphere is set in the direction which he desires."

Colonel Wedgwood then asked whether in view of the importance of pals took them round; the African Hospital and the Sacred Heart Hospital.

At the latter place the Sisters of the institution and the Reverend Fathers of the Catholic Mission entertained the visitors with the Alake and suite, including the Osile, the Agura and the Olowu.

The Resident was able to arrange for them to see the principal Native Court in session (the Ake Major Court) presided over by Mr Justice Adebesin Folarin, B.L.

They also went to other places of equal interest and importance.

The more spectacular and formal events connected with the visit of the august personage was that which took place in the Centenary Hall at Ake and the brief reception at the Afin where the Omo Oba Aderemi assisted his father to entertain them.

The proceedings at the special meeting of the Alake's Central Council at the Centenary Hall were made memorable because, in spite of the short notice, the Councillors turned up almost to a man whilst the Press and Strangers' Galleries were fairly well filled.

Mr Peter Fraser's eloquent tributes and stirring address on the occasion clearly showed that New Zealand did not propose to slacken its effort until Nazism has become a thing of the past.

The distinguished visitor was later met at the Residency at a luncheon party at which were also present Oba Alaiyeluwa and Omo Oba Aderemi, the District Officer, Mrs R. E. S. Morgan, Dr L. W. Banks, Mr K. M. Leighton and the Asoju Oba.

WHITE, COLOURED AND BLACK SHATTERED MUSSOLINI'S EAST AFRICAN EMPIRE

The Prime Minister, Marshal Smuts, in a broadcast on Monday paid tribute in glowing terms to the valour and gallantry of the African forces in shattering to shreds Mussolini's East African empire. "They have given the first great knock in this war to the solid Axis front. It is the first stage in the downfall of the Axis itself," declared General Smuts.

"The Comander-in-Chief, officers and men, white, coloured and black, all in their measure share in that glory, and not least the gallant Springboks from South Africa. They have justified my pride and faith in them."

General Smuts said:

"It is just a year ago since I bade farewell to the first considerable contigent of South African troops on their departure for Kenya, and it is appropriate if to-night I refer to their achievements and pass in brief review some of the main developments on the war front generally.

"At that time Italian forces were in occupation of Kenya soil, Nairobi and Mombasa were at the mercy of vastly superior forces, and grave doubts were felt in responsible quarters whether we would be able to maintain our position in Kenya at all in case of an enemy advance.

"Units of the South African Air Force and anti-aircraft artillery were also rushed north to keep the enemy at bay, pending the arrival of our main army. Our advance forces probably arrived in the nick of time to save the situation in the Kenya highlands and to prevent the capture of Mombasa, the key to those highlands.

"Then came our offensive, and what an offensive it was! I do not think the like of it had been seen in the history of warfare. The mobility for which South African mounted troops had become famous in the past was completely eclipsed by the new commando on wheels, and in record time the vast territory of Italian Somaliland and Abyssinia was overrun, the resistance of the enemy broken in pitched battles, and the conquest of the country completed.

"This Abyssinian campaign, carried on by African forces of all arms, and matched against vastly larger enemy forces, and in the face of enormous physical difficulties, constituted a record which it will be difficult to beat in future.

"The Commander-in-Chief, officers and men, white and coloured and black, all in their measure share in that glory, and not least the gallant Springboks from South Africa. They have justified my pride and faith in them.

"They have given the first great knock in this war to the solid Axis front, and they have laid low Mussolini and his African Empire. It is, at any rate, a very good beginning, which has sent a cheer right through our hard-pressed Allied front.

"Then followed the spectacular route of Mussolini's legions in North Africa, and although it has not been possible to maintain this success, Mussolini's damaged reputation has not recovered, and the status of Italy has been reduced to that of a satrapy in Hitler's empire. It is the first stage in the downfall of the Axis itself.

"To the brave South Africans at the front who bore the major part in achievement; to the munition workers at home who toiled in our factories to supply them with the weapons of war; to the noble women who slaved to supply their men folk with gifts and comforts in their arduous life in the wilds of Africa—to them and to all who supported me in this struggle for the future of South Africa and the vast future of man, I wish to express my deepest thanks. May their devoted service be blessed for the unborn generations.

"From Abyssinia the scene has now shifted to North Africa, and there to-day the largest forces which South Africa has ever sent to a war front, face the formidable foe.

"In spite of the bigger odds they face there, I have complete confidence in the result. Just as Abyssinia proved fatal to Mussolini, so North Africa, and the Middle East generally, will make its important contribution to the downfall of Hitler.

"The final knock-out will come elsewhere, but the turn of the tide will probably come in the Middle East, and the Springboks will have their share in the crowning glory, just as they have had in the first success of the war.

Selassie Thanks Red Cross For $25,000

WASHINGTON, —(ANP) —Safely landed at the Eritrean port of Massawa are 25,000 tons of American Red Cross foodstuffs and blankets for the relief of hard-pressed civilians throughout the colonies of East Africa, it was announced here Wednesday.

The news was received by cable from Ralph Bain, Red Cross representative in the Middle East, who has just returned to Cairo from a 5,000 mile trip abroad a RAF fighter plane.

He visited Addis Ababa in Abyssinia, Asmara in Eritrea, and Nairobi in the heart of British Kenya. He reports that during a private interview with Emperor Haile Selassie in the Abyssinian capital, the emporer expressed "sincere gratitude for American generosity and good will."

OCT 1 9 1941

FREEHOLD LAND FOR AFRICANS

IN a recent report of the Johannesburg Joint Council of Europeans and Africans, the question of freehold title of land for Africans is stressed. This is a most important matter for all Africans in the Union who have to live in towns.

As all know there are very few places in towns where an African may buy a piece of land and build his own house. In most cases he has to live in locations and townships where he can only rent a house, and should he not be able to pay the rent he may be ejected, even though he has lived there for many years.

Many Africans, quite rightly wish to possess their own homes, but prices for land in places where they are permitted to own ground are so high that not many are able to buy. What is worse, however, is that the purchase price of the ground itself is so high that most people cannot pay for the erection of a decent building on it, and are thus forced to build with poor materials and without those requirements which make a house a real home.

In the beginning it was not thought necessary to put aside much ground for purchase by Africans, as most people came to the towns to work for a while and then return to their homes in the country. Now, there are many Africans who are born in the towns and live in them all their lives. They have no homes except in the towns and it is only right that they should be able to possess their own places where they can live in security knowing that their homes cannot be taken away from them.

People who own their properties take a great pride in them and work to improve them, but where the houses do not belong to them they can hardly be expected to look after them so well.

Ways to help Africans to get land of their own are being considered now. In Johannesburg the Department of Native Affairs is working out a scheme for a new township in which Africans will be able to buy land and have their own properties.

It is to be hoped that immediate action will be taken because land is being bought around Johannesburg so quickly that, in a few years, it may not be possible to acquire ground.

Property ownership brings about a spirit of responsibility and creates interest in the affairs of the community, and anything which encourages this among Africans is welcomed.

South Africa Bars Negroes From Factories

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (ANP) — A bill prohibiting natives and colored workers from being employed in factories along with whites has been made a law. In an attempt to prevent the bill's passage, liberal members of the senate suggested an amendment which would give the minister power to differentiate between workers on the basis of age, education or experience, but not on the ground of color. However, the amendment failed.

The minister, Mandeley, has promised that he would not make regulations under the offending color bar clause without first consulting members of the Native Affairs department, but it is generally conceded that this promise is a mere ruse and that nothing will come of it.

Cause of African Weakness

Jo The Cow Under Fire

APR 26 1941

Many thanks to Jo the Cow and his organ for having published my letter. If he chooses to he may evade the argument hereunder advanced as he did in the previous one. I understand very well that the strategy of the time is to drown truth in wild generalisations such as are demostrated in his feverish reply to my "angry protestations."

DISINTEGRATING FORCES

I referred to "Jo the Cow" his Bozo Club, other Clubs, personalities, and combinations of the like trend of thought as forces of disintegration who will set up the African against his fellowmen etc. In the same issue, somewhere else, 'Jo the Cow' and his organ affirms this accusation by unashamedly telling the public that "Ilanga lase Natal" is not "Ilanga lase Transvaal" meaning that the African in the Transvaal, whose entire life, like that of his fellow African anywhere in the Union, is completely embraced in and crushed by the same 'Country's Native Policy' has no business to interfere in Natal affairs etc.

THE SEAT OF AFRICAN WEAKNESS EVADED

I called the incorrigible Bozo's attention to the seat of our weakness to "control Native thinking and never mind his action" whose counterpart is, "Advance no Native to a commanding position unless you're sure he will be under white supervision." This wise and far-sighted Policy recognises and exploits the truth that actions are the material results of thought. It further makes an important provision to check what the first failed to control, by bringing all Native endeavours under "White supervision." Is this policy not evidenced by the whole "Native life"? Granted that we have only a handful of educated Africans—in what sphere are they not hemmed in in the above policy? Could you honestly refer to the ineffectiveness of this group's organisations as being due to ignorance and yet exonerate yourself from being called a hypocrite? Where are they (the educated) not under "White supervision" despite their efficiency and education? Hypocrites say "Ignorance" or "time is not yet ripe for as a group Africans are as yet ignorant"—that collective judgment again to ensure the keeping of the African at the longest disadvantage possible. Unless one's nostrils are unwholesomely clogged up by vested interests one does not need to sniff for hypocrites, Jo the Cow, when the atmosphere is so sickeningly pregnant with hypocrisy.

EFFECTS OF THE POLICY

Will you come with me into further "Native Life!" Are gaols not full of Africans who must give their services as prisoners and yet criminal manufacturers are seen at work and are let scot-free? Are we not hurled in "pigsties" only to be denounced carriers of disease? Are we not thrown into most vice-breeding conditions only to be condemned of vicious tendencies? Are we not kept at the verge of starvation and half-nakedness and shelterless only to be arrested for theft and Shimiyana - brewing? Are all these not the Effects and the result of the above Policy? Shameless, heartless, and self-interested beings who would pose as our champions hurl 'Ignorance' at us!

THE RESULT OF THE EFFECTS

Is the above detailed situation —the economic debasement of the African—not responsible for the merciless "Ubulaita" and "Ubuqola" now devastating the whole country? Is the general degeneration of our morals and physique—national and most regrettable disaster—not the direct outcome of this? Juvenile vagrancy and delinquency—undoubtedly a disintegrated Home-Life robbed of all its divine treasures, a deliberately designed desecration of the Holy Beauty of this once God - blessed and chosen institution—is it not the product of this? Don't the religious and other social workers—sincere friends of the Africans—come in only to meddle with these Effects instead of applying themselves to controling the unfortunate situation at its source? Call it a demonstration of ingratitude if you like, but my conviction is that their well-meant services only serve as a palliative while the acuteness of the situation demands a Curative.

SIMPLE TRUTH MURDERED

The Bozo exposes its lf as linked with destructive elements who will efface Truth, particularly if it affects their "treasures." Calling Mafura names, no matter how maliciously, only amuses him. I know that....."the nihilistic 'intellectuals' of Czarist Russia and the Marxian radicalism".....you so kindly associate, without pointing to the public where this communism in my last letter are but a gag used by the 'Friends of the Africans' and their 'willing tools' to suffocate Truth and outspokenness and also to draw the attention of the people away from the topic at table to the speaker as a "rotten apple in a case."

Now rather than to say I refer sneeringly at the 'useful institutions" why don't you say at 'Native Education'? That you have called for it may I remind the public that "Native Education" purports at producing men and women whose every action shall be subservient to the policy here under discussion, and whose very lives shall ensure the futurity of the policy. Shall we go further in discussing Native Education in details in your nextissue?

In conclusion, may I request you and your Club and other associates frankly and honestly to go into 'Native Life' to find the above arguments verified! May I also earnestly request you that we have Effects everywhere. Our business is to trace them to their Cause and then to apply ourselves diligently to the managing of the damaging source! Understand again that I condemned without quarters the Method of 'Reliefs' as merely lengthening the duration of the otherwise controllable situation. I take it that the embodiment of the arguments above advanced constitutes the real 'Native weakness' and I put it to you Bozo that 'Ignorance' is not the Cause. Reason and Truth say no.

A NEGRO CO-OPERATIVE MAKES GOOD

IN 1935 the store moved again, following the direction of its membership to a more densely populated neighbourhood on Fairmount Avenue. Here there was less opposition, because by this time Mr. Anthony was well known and well liked, and also because people had come to understand that he was not trying to force other stores to the wall. His store still depended somewhat on volunteer service, but it was a going concern, with over four hundred and sixty families on its membership list from several districts of Philadelphia. Its annual business was over five thousand dollars and it employed fifteen clerks.

When the Division of Self-Help Co-operatives of the FERA was organized, Mr. Anthony applied for a government grant. At this point the experience which had already enlisted Jewish and Methodist help became international and picked up a Finnish co-operator. He was Frank Aaltonen, formerly the manager of the United Farmers Co-operative of Fitchburg, Massachusetts. He had met Mr. Anthony at the Co-operative Congress held in New York City in 1932. Mr. Anthony had hitchhiked to the meeting, rather than take money out of the store to pay railroad or bus fare. When the reports of various co-operatives were being given, Mr. Anthony told the story of the struggle of the United Consumers Co-operative Inc. Mr. Aaltonen, who was present as a delegate from the Fitchburg co-operative, remembered that story three years later when he was connected with the Division of Self-Help Co-operatives of the FERA. When Mr. Anthony's application came in he recalled the man who wouldn't take money out of the co-operative store for his transportation, and had the application approved. On it were the signatures of many responsible citizens of Philadelphia who were willing to give proof of faith in Mr. Anthony. "He has friends all over the city who were glad to sign," says Eldredge Brewster. "My father signed first." There were friends in that interracial fellowship, friends among Philadelphia lawyers and ministers, both coloured and white, as well as friends in the Eastern States Co-operative League, of which Mr. Anthony's group was now a member. This readiness to sign was a visible proof that Kagawa is right when he insists that consumers' co-operation will bring all sorts of people together.

Segregation Amongst Africans

IDEA ABBARRED

JAN 25 1941

Sir,

In his letter published in the issue of "The Bantu World" dated December 14, 1940, Mr. Jacob R. Mohlamme suggests a dividing line between the Bantu people permanently settled in the urban areas and those fresh from the rural areas, as the latter are a hindrance to the progress of the former.

How such a suggestion can emanate from a man who has the common weal of his people at heart is unthinkable. We have far too many lines dividing us in the Union already. There is a white line placed between the Whites and the Asiatics, and a yellow line between the Asiatics and the Blacks.

Notwithstanding these discriminating lines, Mr. J. R. Mohlamme wants a black line to divide the Blacks which line cannot be called a line but a fatal crack self-inflicted. We abhor these discriminations.

If the people who reside in urban areas are educationally and refinedly in advance of their less fortunate brothers and sisters living in the rural areas, it is their duty to bring them up to their level of civilisation. If it certainly is true that these otherwise superior to those living in the backveld, it goes without saying that they possess stronger characters, and as such, free from falling an easy prey to people of low character.

As a means to civilise the urban Bantu (because he is not civilised nor does he understand the meaning thereof) residential segregation is suggested with the help of the Municipality urbanising their permanent tenants, if tenants can be called permanent. According to Mr Mohlamme a man from the rural areas and places outside the Union is incapable of improvement. His place of employment should be in the mines etc, where skill is out of the question.

The environment plays an important part in moulding a man, but a man's mental capabilities are within him. Educational facilities are extended to such people as are deemed undesirable by Mr. Mohlamme, and useful bent from these people should be used for the well-being of humanity irrespective of their places of domicile.

The concoction of all kinds of drinks is not attributable to the presence of people from outside. The low wages are at the root of this evil.

I would like to conclude by saying to Mr. Mohlamme, your suggestions are productive of more harm than good. They should be thrown to the winds, for if they were put to the test they would end in a cul de sac.

INDIA'S NATIVES ROILED OVER "JIM CROW" OF BRITISH

FEB 28 1941

"Democratic Rule" In South Africa Found Not So Hot By Dark-hued Visitors

CAPE TOWN, S. Africa, Feb. 20 (ANP)—This city's Indian colony is in a great furore as result of a series of insults heaped upon a group of Indian students who stopped here recently, enroute to Calcutta, from a trip to England.

Spokesman for the students was D. K. Basu, prominent barrister of Calcutta. So great was the indignation aroused over the treatment accorded Basu and companions in all places of business catering to the general public, that a protest was made to General Jan Smuts, premier of the Union of South Africa.

Relating their experiences, Mr. Basu said: "The P. and O. ship 'Strathallan' arrived in the Cape Town harbour, and the passengers were allowed to go ashore in the afternoon.

"We hired a taxi and asked the driver to take us to the centre of the town. Immediately we came out of the port, we were stopped by the police, who asked us to show our passes to the office, which was very near that place. Before entering the office to our great surprise, we saw that 'Europeans only" was written on the wall of the office.

"After getting down from the taxi, we wanted to have cold drinks. We entered a restaurant which was near at hand. But the waiter there asked us to clear out, as being dark people we could not have drinks there. Similarly we tried in 10 or 12 restaurants, but without success. In one, the waiter did not object to serving us, but the manager was against it.

"Nearly all the places the reply was that the law of the country would not allow them to serve a brown man, and we were asked to go to the native quarters.

"In one or two restaurants we saw that the European stewards of our ship were allowed to go in and have drinks though we had to come away.

"Then we tried to go to a cinema to see a picture. The girl at the counter asked us to wait and sent for the manager. The manager asked us about our nationality, and on hearing that we were Indians, he said he would not allow us to enter.

"Even the urinals are specially reserved for Europeans, and we were not allowed to enter there either.

"We went to the native quarters. They were dirty, and there was not sufficient light in the streets."

As a result of the incident, a telegram was sent Preimer Gen. Smuts from Lahore, India, by Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, president Imperial Indian Citizenship association, pleaded the cause of his countrymen. He wired:

FEB 28 1941

"Thanks for your cable and assurance that measures for improving the position of Indians in South Africa are under constant review. With regard to your belief that lots of Indians in South Africa are in many respects happier than in India, you are perhaps referring to their material position. They may be so, but you and I believe that between man and man there should be social justice, and our aim should be a nation of free men and women. Human dignity requires equal opportunity for political, economic and national expression and right of shouldering responsibilities. Until such facilities are afforded to Indians in South Africa true happiness cannot be established. I deeply appreciate your good wishes for progress of India, which I heartily reciprocate for every section of South Africa.

Writer Suggests Negro Return To Africa Now

Editor, Journal and Guide:

While the American statesmen are devising ways and means for sending more military and commercial aid to Great Britan, let us devise practical ways to free ourselves from the galling yoke of U. S. political oppression in the shortest length of time.

Our people are the victims of a craven political plot, hatched by central authorities many years ago in Washington, D. C., which has made our race the unwilling burden bearers of the United States agricultural labor issue.

As a people we are facing a social period very much like that of the German jews under the Hitler regime. The only difference in the two cases is that we have not been subjected to a "blood purge" as yet.

Having absorbed a goodly share of American social culture, as a group, we should now be thinking about voluntarily returning to Africa, and imparting some of our civilized understanding to our less intelligent heathen brethren of sable hue.

Segregation Vicious In South Africa

MAR 8 1941

Native Medical Students Dissect Black Bodies Only

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (ANP)—Restrictions and segregation even more vicious than that of the southland in the United States, are in vogue here and growing constantly worse.

Recently when a new railway station was planned for Hugenot, two separate entrances were provided, one for whites and one for the non-whites. Waiting room accommodations for whites were arranged for in the main building but non-whites were given a waiting room in a separate building.

When the new post office building at Pearl was built, similar provisions for separate entrances were made. Protests by the colored people and natives resulted in the plans being changed but the railway station plans appear set.

The A. P. O., the organization which fights for "coloured" rights, has lodged a vigorous protest charging that the rule is "unnecessary, provocative and humiliating."

DISECT BLACKS ONLY

It appeared that an important step forward had been made when two months ago the Witwatersrand university agreed to allow non-European (the local designation for any other than whites)) to attend medical school at the university and to work for both medical and dental degrees.

The number of non-European students was restricted to ten. The chief problem which the school authorities had to overcome was the matter of providing bodies for dissection during the student's fourth year. It was finally solved by deciding that non-European students should be permitted to dissect only black bodies.

KEEP UP SEGREGATION

Local leaders have accepted the stringent provisions. They say that "it is better than nothing" although they regard the rule as showing "just how far the anti-color bias extends when it is deemed advisable to keep up the practice of segregation even when dealing with the dead."

Liberia Should Liberalize Its Immigration Laws

Editor, Journal and Guide: It is not to the best interest of all concerned that the government of the Republic of Liberia should forever labor under the present obstacle of U. S. financial supervision. If Liberia is to grow and acquire new territory the state must rid itself of all parasitic influence, great and small, which tends to limit its sphere of imperialistic expansion.

One of the best ways in which Liberia can help herself to step up besides the leading world powers, in regard to population increase, is to revise the present state code of immigration laws. Instead of cooperating with the leading caucasian world powers in their united effort to permit only a few new individuals to enter their respective lands annually, it will be to great advantage if the Liberian immigration officials will immediately adopt an "open door" immigration policy.

This will prove an asset to the American Negro when the press of impending adversities make departure from the land in which we now live, a necessity. The minds of the statesmen in whose lands we live, are almost wholly inflamed with the doctrine of white supremacy and a more intense desire to increase their respective commercial holdings. As a race, this leaves us in a pretty difficult social spot.

To add to the dilemma, the hue and cry of Russian Socialism and Nazi Hitlerism are being openly voiced by many foreign political organizations throughout the various lands where Negroes reside. With regard to social value, neither of the above mentioned doctrines are worth a picayune to the average Negro. Nazism is barbaric, and Socialism is lacking along most lines which make civilization worth living.

Many American Negroes are in favor of war with our enemies, but these merely echo the sentiments of more or less rabid minded political leaders. Negro posterity needs a more liberal degree of economic freedom and Liberia is, in truth, the earth's most feasable haven of refuge from our enemies.

Hath followed to his kin and kith
They're up and we are still below.

The horseman skilled and soldier great;
Hath gone away from earthly woe
Away from scandals and from hate.

We wished we always him could see.

He's to a land where none are foes.
A land of comfort, peace and cheer;
The land where life's great river flows,
And all do steer without a tear.

He there shall move in holy breath,
Away from worldly wars and cries
And tho' we mourn his sudden death
To him we soon shall surely rise.

"AFRICANS" OR "NATIVES"?

The Editor, "Umteteli."

"ANTI-DETRIBALISATION" writes: Sir,—Not only are Mr. Mohlamme's contentions deplorable but also so is his manner of approach to each and every topic. What is just as disappointing about this writer is that he is anti-everything that is for the advancement of Africans. He opposes the national and universally approved trend of African thought; in other words, the air that he exhales is contaminated with anti-African convictions.

I do not know Mr. Mohlamme from the man in the moon, and I can only judge him from the nature of his ideas. It has been said that "Fools rush where angels fear to tread." These words have never fitted an occasion better. He expresses the selfish view that the "Natives" should not be replaced by the most appropriate "African." I think, my dear Mr. Mohlamme, it would be better for you to go down on your knees and plead for the revival of the "endearment term" "kaffir"!

Anyway who is Mr. Mohlamme to challenge the resolutions of the fully-representative Advisory Boards Congress—our grand old leaders?

The Bantu In South African Life

By Senator Edgar H. Brookes.

8. Nutrition and Health

JAN 18 1941

In the course of last few articles we have been dealing with m tt r directly or indirectly connected with the wage question. But we have felt it important to point out for example with r gard to housing that while wages are a very important factor, there are other aspects of housing to be considered. So it is with nutrition, by which phrase we mean simply the proper feeding of the community. The connection of poor wages with malnutrition is very clear, and must constantly be emphasised, but we must not think that we have dealt with the problem of nutrition simply by saying that people should get higher wages. This attitude is very often the result of suspicion. People feel that the suggestion of any remedy other than the raising of wages simply means an attempt to evade paying higher wages. We should put this suspicion out of our mind and decide both to work for higher wages and to consider nutrition and general health on their merits.

Food and nourishment are very different things. Food is what we eat: nourishment is what we get out of it. It is possible for a man to eat a good deal, and yet be undernourished. Take for example, the pure white "refined" mealie meal, which is sold in bags in our towns. It has been publicly pointed out by the Chief Medical Officer of Health for the Union that nearly all the real nutrition has been removed from this mealie meal. Those who eat it might almost as well be filling themselves up with sawdust When we consider that the staple food of many families in towns consists of this type of mealie meal, white bread and tea, often without milk, it is easy to see that many families may feel fairly well fed without getting anything like the real nourishment that they need. Just as it is possible to spend as much money on an ugly house as on a pretty one, so it is possible to spend as much money on poor food as on good food. Here is one side of the nutrition question which is independent of wages, and where good work can be done. Any householder can buy brown bread for the same price as white, and get far better value for money from it.

There is another aspect, however, of nutrition. Some of the foods which our people most need, particularly fruit, green vegetables and milk, are difficult to get in the towns. We must face that fact that the conservatism of the people sometimes prevents them from using such opportunities as they have for example of buying green vegetables cheaply, and the knowledge that so few people will buy them sometimes tends to discourage storekeepers from stocking them. None the less, there is a real obligation on the part of our Municipalities and other public authorities, to see that foods of this kind are easily available. Particularly is it important that facilities for the purchase of clean milk at reasonable rates should be available.

In these matters, there is much wrong thinking on the part of the Government and of sections of public opinion. Recent developments in our agriculture, such as the control of the sale of mealies and of dairy products, are based mostly on the interests of the producer, i.e. the farmer, and the needs of the consumer are not recognised nearly enough. Some people think that the farmer ought not to get any special protection. This appears to be a short sighted view. Under modern conditions it is not wrong to regulate the sale of farm products, and so help to keep the farmer on the land. This is a good, and not a bad thing. What is wrong is the concentration on encouraging the farmer to export, instead of taking responsibility for the sale of what are called the "protective foods", for example eggs, milk, fruit, at prices which are fair both to the farmer and to the buyer in town. This could be done if we would make up our minds to do it, and it needs to be done.

In the country districts, it is possible to get more milk and vegetables, but even there people need a good deal of education with regard to the type of food that they eat. It is particularly important to try to bring the mothers of the community to the point where they give their children at school a good meal before the day's school work is started. In many country districts all over the Union, children are sent off to school with either no breakfast at all or just a little cold porridge There are many areas where children get their first real meal of the day at about four o'clock. And this not because the parents are starving, but because of failure to adapt themselves to modern conditions, including school hours. Much of the poor work in our schools is due to under-feeding.

Everywhere we have to face grave questions of health, which indeed would merit a whole series of articles to themselves. Only a few points can be mentioned here.

There are things which the people can do for themselves, particularly with regard to the two great scourges of tuberculosis and venereal disease. Quite elementary care, such as spitting into a special covered utensil, would prevent the passing on of tuberculosis to hundreds of people who get it every year at the present time. Stricter morality, and also the use of the clinic that are already available, could reduce our venereal disease figures by several thousands every year. On the other hand, there is much to be done from the Government side. District surgeons vary very much as regards their active interest in the Bantu population of their area. Some are very keenly interested. Others do just the bare minimum which their official duties require. There are very large areas of the Union even today where the Bantu get virtually no medical attention at all. In recent years, the Government has done a good deal to meet these needs, first by beginning to train Medical Aids; secondly, by subsidising nurses; thirdly, by building more hospitals; fourthly, by subsidising clinics; and fifthly, by starting two big experiments in preventive medicine, one in the Natal. All this work only touches the fringe of the problem, and we have to press for more and more facilities.

One last word: Bantu communities can he p themselves in one important sphere. If they are prepared to find a small portion of the salary of a nurse, the Public Health Department will pay much the greater part of her salary. Very often the Native Affairs Department will assist with grants for building a dispensary and purchasing medicines. I do not think that there is any Native Commissioner in the Union who would refuse to help the people of his district if they are willing to subscribe, say, £2 a month among themselves to help to maintain a nurse.

BANTU LANGUAGES

MAR 1 1941

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. JACOB R. MOHLAMME, Robinson Deep, Johannesburg, writes: Sir,—It is quite evident that the difference of opinions on this topic, are dying out.

Progress! When I first wrote and suggested the abolition of Bantu languages in the sake of one, it was done all in a good mood for the benefit of the people. After all, we all agree that the Bantu should have no different outlooks in this world. It was here that Mr. Mangoaela, Stellenbosch, felt hurt and resigned the topic. It was here that Mr. J. J. G. Moiloa said that I "asked a lot of questions" but he answered none of those questions till this day.

Rev. J. J. Skomolo, Port Elizabeth disagreed with me, and Mr. S. Monaheng with Mr. P. Raboroko signed a pact against me, but Mr. Raboroko broke the pact and drifted towards me immediately he supported "Ranthite", February 1, as "Ranthite" sided with me.

Mr. M. J. Ncalo upholds our various traditions but says nothing about our progress and unity.

I will go on suggesting that the Bantu may as well choose only one prominent language, Zulu, preferably, to be the only Bantu language spoken in South Africa. The music dealers on the Witwatersrand, and the industrial areas hereabout, are witnesses as to the supremacy of the Zulu language.

Low Wage Policy A Condemnation

Sir, JAN 18 1941

Talking about wages in an article which appeared in your columns last week Senator Dr E. H. Brookes said that there was a school of thought which was against Higher wages for Natives and favoured a low wage policy supplemented by social services as Health Clinics, Housing Schemes and recreational facilities.

Dr. Brookes of course stated that he did not support the low wage policy. In my mind, however, the article raises two questions: Are higher wages incompatible with social services? What is the nature and purpose of social services?

A Higher wage rate for all sections is a sound social policy for South Africa to adopt. Higher wages for Natives would extend and strengthen our internal market. It would mean better social security for the white workers. When I was in the United States in 1939—40 I was tremendously impressed by the all-round advantages of high wages for all sections of the U. S. A. population.

POOR WHITES.

Higher wages are not incompatible with extended social services. Take the poor whites now being absorbed into Industry. They get a wage higher than that of Natives and even higher than their labour is worth, and yet their social services are on the increase. Indeed they have expanded into a state service, namely, the Union Department of Social Welfare. Likewise higher wages for Natives would still require the maintenance and extension of welfere services.

The truth of the matter is that, as with overseas workers and our white workers, the Natives, whether as individuals or as a group, cannot have the capital to provide their own hospitals, clinics, schools, and recreational centres and healthy houses. A public authority such as a Municipality or the Government has to provide these for them.

Further, welfare or social services are provided for depressed or underprivileged groups that are confined to lower levels of income. As such, these groups are denied the living conveniences that other better placed groups have. Thus the public authority steps in and endeavours to raise the standard of living of lower groups to that of the more fortunate groups.

The present tendency of Native wages to rise will not remove the fundamental inequalities of our economy and hence it will always be necessary to give Natives more and better welfare services.

These remarks are intended to elucidate some of the points raised in our Senator's article and to condemn the low wage policy school of thought.

SEGREGATION RAMPANT IN SOUTH AFRICA

Situation Grows Constantly Worse

CAPE TOWN, S. A., Mar. 6—(ANP)—Restrictions and segregation even more vicious than that of the Southland in the United States, are in vogue here and growing constantly worse. Recently when a new railway station was planned for Huguenot, two separate entrances were provided, one for whites and one for non-whites. Waiting room accommodations for whites were arranged for in the main building but non-whites were given a waiting room in a separate building.

When the new post-office building at Pearl was built, similar provisions for separate entrances were made. Protests by the colored people and natives resulted in the plans being changed but the railway station plans appear set. The A. P. O., the organization which fights for "colored" rights has lodged a vigorous protest charging that the rule is "unnecessary, provocative and humiliating."

It appeared that an important step forward had been made when two months ago the Witwatersrand university agreed to allow non-European (the local designation for any other than whites) to attend medical school at the university and to work for both medical and dental degrees. The number of non-European students was restricted to ten. The chief problem which the school authorities had to overcome was the matter of providing bodies for dissection during the student's fourth year. It was finally solved by deciding that non-European students should be permitted to dissect only black bodies.

Local leaders have accepted the stringent provisions. They say that "it is better than nothing" although they regard the rule as showing "just how far the anti-color bias extends when it is deemed advisable to keep up the practice of segregation even when dealing with the dead."

Democrats Pick Negro To Run For Alderman

3 Nominated For Post In St. Louis For City Election

MAR 20 1941

ST. LOUIS, (ANP)—Three Negroes have been officially nominated for the post of alderman in the forthcoming city elections to be held here. Edward Ward was named by the Republicans in the 19th ward, Atty. W. D. Shaver was named by the same group in the 5th ward, while Atty. George L. Vaughn, one of the best known members of the bar here, was nominated by the Democrats in the 19th.

This is said to be the first time the Democratic party has named a Negro on its aldermanic slate. It is assumed that the reason for doing so in this election is that the party is making a sincere effort to hold the heavy Negro vote which it has succeeded in winning in recent elections.

Aldermen are elected in St. Louis by a city-wide vote. Republicans have never elected their Negro candidates but the feeling is running strong that the Democrats in their eagerness or desperation may give honest support to Vaughn and actually elect him. It would be the first time St. Louis has named a Negro to the aldermanic board.

The School Election

When A. A. Alexander's friends persuaded him to run for the school director, one of the considerations which convinced him was that it is a good thing to have Negroes run for office even though they don't win. Eventually one will.

Unfortunately Mr. Alexander did not win. The total number of voters at the polls far exceeded that of the past few years. It worked against him. But several things were shown clearly by the vote:

1. The Negro votes just about in the same proportion as white people no matter what the issue nor who the candidate is.

2. The Negro will vote for his cause in large numbers. In the precincts where Negroes are rather thickly populated, Mr. Alexander received as high as eighty per cent of the total vote cast.

3. In many precincts where no Negroes live Mr. Alexander received a good percent of the total vote which shows that white people are willing to support a competent Negro candidate for public office.

As we said before the election, Des Moines had an opportunity to do a fine thing by electing Mr. Alexander to the school board. We say now that it lost an opportunity to have a man on the board whose training and experience out-distance any number on the board.

On the whole the campaign was very well conducted. We learned some valuable lessons that will be available next time.

20,000 Africans At The Mendi Ceremony

THE Anniversary of the sinking of the Troopship Mendi was held in Johannesburg on Sunday February 23, 1941, and was the most largely attended for a number of years. For the second time the W.N.L.A. Band under Captain Barwood rendered great service by accompanying in the singing and leading the uniformed detatchments as they marched past the Deputy Mayor, Councillor Hilson, who took the salute. The presence of Officers and African men from the Military camp was most appropriate at this anniversary. The men are a credit to the African race and the Officers are to be congratulated on producing such good results in a short space of time since the recruiting was started among the Africans. The other Detatchments included the S.A.P.; S.A.R.P. the Municipal Police, the St. John's Ambulance Corps (African) and the Pathfinder Scouts.

The St. Peter's Secondary School Choir under Mr. Habedi provided additional music.

In introducing the various speakers and visitors Mr. Brink, the Chairman of the Mendi Memorial Scholarship Fund Committee gave a brief address.

Mr. Lowe, the Chief Native Commissioner for the W.W. Rand, spoke. His address will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Rise Of The African

Dr. Xuma dwelt at length on the achievements of the Africans in all spheres of life. Beginning with Moshesh the Nation Builder and an Administrator, Tshaka the precursor of Dictators and a Military Strategist, he came to Dr. J. L. Dube and Mr. Cingo (who are African Educationists) Mangena's for Law, Mahlangeni's, Moroka's, Molema's for Medicine and many others who had proved that given an opportunity such as was envisaged by the Mendi Memorial Scholarship, the African was as capable of development as any other race. The Mendi disaster had shown an African as a lover of Individual and National Freedom and Social Justice so much valued by nations under Democratic Governments. The granting of the Medical Bursaries by the Union Government, said Dr. Xuma, was something that the Africans would remember with gratitude as an example of liberal policy, which was the only policy that could win not only war but peace.

Men Of Mendi Must Be Remembered

Chief Native Commissioner's Address At Memorial Meeting

MAR 1 1941

AT the Mendi Memorial gathering on the Bantu Sports Ground Johannesburg, last Sunday, a picture of which appears on page one, Mr. W. Lowe appealed for more practical remembrance of the men of the "Mendi" who went down in the Great War 23 years ago.

Mr. Lowe said: We are gathered to-day to commemorate the heroic deaths of those Africans who fell during the Great War of 1914-1918. They died in the service of their country. We are gathered to-day also to remind ourselves of the responsibility which they have passed on us, the responsibility for seeing that the ideals for which they have died are carried out. It is twenty-three years since they set us their example of devotion to duty and service to their fellowmen. In that time what have we done? Have we proved worthy of the trust they left us?

Since they died, can now we sincerely say to ourselves that we, too, have shown the same devotion to duty and sacrifice of our interests in carrying out their trust? If we cannot, their example shames us. It means that we have shamefully failed on our part. This is a very important aspect of this afternoon's commemoration, and I propose to examine it more particularly.

During this last week I have been reading some correspondence in my office, which deals with this anniversary. It deals with the ideas which the promoters of to-day's commemoration had in mind, and it was not inspiring reading.

Memorial Hopes Not Realised

In 1931, that is ten years ago, a movement was started for a national memorial to those who sank in that ship. The movement was initiated by the Inter-denominational African Ministers' Association. The memorial was to take the form of a Scholarship Fund to be subscribed for on a national basis by the Bantu people. The scholarships were intended to assist Africans in obtaining higher education, in encouraging the development of arts and crafts, of industries and social services among the Bantu people and it was hoped to help, more immediately, the children of those men who had died in the Great War.

To-day, ten years later, we have to confess that there has been very little practical result. The subscriptions to the fund to-day amount to less than £200. There has been little co-operation among the leaders of the people throughout the Union in the one common aim. There has been dissension, self-seeking and self-glorification, bickering and jealousy. The selflessness, of which the men on the "Mendi" gave us so noble an example, has not been emulated, and there has been little subordination of personal interests to the common good. Today there are two Associations working independently and without any community of action for the self-same object.

Have We Been Faithful?

All this is very sad to tell, but it must be told because it is our duty today to examine ourselves to see whether we have carried out that trust which was laid on us by those whose deaths which today we honour. In the face of what I have told you, can anyone of us sincerely say that he has been faithful to those who lost their lives twenty-three years ago? I cannot say that I feel proud. I think you, too, will also feel a strong sense of shame that we have done so little where so much was rightly demanded of us. We have been faithless, we have not emulated the noble example of the men of the "Mendi."

I would not say this if I felt there was no hope to carry out that great trust. If there were no hope of doing so it would be wrong to say these things, but that trust can yet be carried out fully and faithfully. We can yet emulate the noble example of those noble men and, in doing so, we shall build up again and restore our self-respect and our ideals of service (applause).

Tremendous advance in recent years

Co-Education Idea

MAR 1 1941

The tremendous advance made in the training of Native teachers in Basutoland in recent years, in spite of many difficulties arising from lack of funds and the particular needs of the country, is described by Mr. Christian van Haght, teacher in charge of the teacher training department, Morija Training College, Basutoland, in a recently published booklet on "Teacher Training in Basutoland."

"The time has now come," says Van Haght, "when the student teachers begin to realise more than before that they must put their own shoulder to the wheel and work for the welfare of their nation. There seems to be a growing understanding of the difficulties which are to be confronted by those Basuto who really wish to assist in building up the nation.

The aim now is to develop the future teacher to be a useful member of the society in which he is to live. His education will thus narrow, in time to come, the hiatus between the educated class and the rest of the community.

Mr. Van Haght described the growth of teacher training work at Morija since the foundation of the Normal School, under the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society, in 1868. Since that time the standard reached by the students has steadily risen.

The foundation of an elementary school for Native children at the college, in order that students should obtain a sufficient amount of teaching practice, is one of the most important innovations since Mr. Van Haght's appointment to the teacher training college.

When he suggested the institution of such a school as a "human laboratory," where the students could study the children and make observations for themselves, "this was flatly refused, as it had never been done before, and, besides, the mission had no money.

WALKING MILES

At that time students had to walk a mile to the village school for teaching practice, and those who had completed a two-year training course had on the average done 15.3 hours' teaching during the whole of their course.

In 1936 the proposal of opening a college practising school was at last accepted.

We were told that a few of the stupid children from the village school would be sent up to form the nucleus of our new college elementary school. We were grateful for we knew that we had a great future, as we were given the right type of children.

An old cottage was converted into class-rooms, Mr. van Haght and the students helping in the work, and the college elementary school was opened in August the same year.

Mr. van Haght describes the care with which the training of the students is planned and supervised, and the gradual improvement of the conditions under which they worked and the standard which is attained.

When the booklet was written the average amount of teaching practice given to each student was 136 hours, and all students received a weekly demonstration lesson in the English or Sesuto medium, and one public criticism lesson.

The number of children at the college elementary school has steadily increased and at a parents day held in 1937 the parents, according to student,, were spellbound to see the work of their offspring.

Until recent years, pnysical punishment of the college students was a frequent occurrence.

Flogging in public was still carried out in the quadrangle in 1928, when I was first appointed at Morija, and the sight was ghastly, but it was part of the system then existing. Though I advocated doing away with it, I was simply told: You don't know the Basuto, but I steadily maintained my view.

Mr van Haght deplores the fact that it is not yet possible, owing to the status of women among the Basuto, to train many Native women as teachers. In 1938 there were only two women students at Morija.

ONLY SOLUTION

The time will come, however, when more and more women students will enter for the Native primary lower course. To my mind, the only possible solution for the smaller mountain schools is to have women teachers and this, I feel, will happen automatically in future.

Women teachers are needed for the teaching of sewing, cookery and health (including mothercraft and nursing), for the bigger girls in our day schools. I say it is merely a matter of time before Morija is bound to become the great co-educational teacher training centre for the Basuto.

Those who are in charge of education must awake to the fact that the Basuto are traditionally a nation of talkers and not a nation of readers. What they need is discussion and demonstration lessons not journals and gazettes to reinvigorate their teaching.

Commenting on the progress of social service in education among the Basuto, Mr van Haght points out that with the waning of the ritual life of the Basuto, the youth falls into mischief because he has too much time on hand.

Pathfinding (Scouting for Native boys) was introduced at Morija in 1928 and this, it is hoped, will in time replace the old initiation ceremony of the Basuto. A training course for Pathfinder officers has been established at Morija. The college students are also keenly interested in soccer and are coached regularly.

In a foreword to the booklet, Professor R. F. A. Hoernle, president of the South African Institute of Race Relations, describes Mr. van Haght as an enthusiast for education among the people of Basutoland, and, in commending his work, adds that he is carrying on, in clear recognition of present-day needs, the policy of training Basuto to teach Basuto.

Mendi Heroes Praised

Speaking at the anniversary memorial service at Langa on Sunday commemorating the sinking of the troopship Mendi, Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, Minister of Finance and Education, exhorted the African people to show the same spirit of sacrifice in these troubled times.

He regarded himself as a friend of the Native people, and he was glad to be present to take part in honouring the memory of those 600 Africans who went down with the ship Mendi in the English Channel on February 21, 1917.

"You think of them with sorrow," said the Minister, "but you also think of them with pride because of the way in which they died. They showed themselves worthy of the brave men of your people in the past; you must show that you are worthy successors."

The men of the Mendi had not died on he battlefield with spears or guns in their hands. They, who were members of a Labour Corps, had perished in the cold waters of the sea after a collision between friendly ships. Nevertheless they had died as soldiers.

The sacrifice of the Mendi Natives had been equal in value to the service of any soldier who died on the battlefield with spears

"To-day again in this war the African people are willing to render the same service in the present time of difficulty," said Mr. Hofmeyr.

"You have been asked to render labour service, not to provide fighting men. But I want you to feel that the service of the labourer and the fighting man are of equal value in this war."

It was not enough to work merely for one's pay—one should also try to work in the spirit of service and try to make happier the lives of one's fellow-men.

"It is this spirit which we want to have more of in this war," added Mr. Hofmeyr. "It is this spirit that the men of the Mendi showed, and you will be showing yourselves worthy of their sacrifice if you prove that you are ready to serve God by serving your fellow-men."

The call had already come to some of the Natives to take part in the war. Others would have to wait for the call. Meantime he appealed to them to be calm, patient and prepared.

Stop Calling The Educated African A Clerk

Need For Employers Readjusting Their Outlook

NOV 16 1940

THE time has come for a drastic overhauling of the standpoint from which educated African worth is regarded in this Colony. This change of attitude is not only necessary in the Government service, but in commercial and mercantile circles.

It is no longer possible or practicable to regard all Africans who have received an education as suitable material for clerks. It is unfair to brand all African workers in offices or factories as clerks. As among Europeans so among African workers there are different grades of intelligence, character and spirit. Recognition must be given to these qualities.

WHAT CAN A CLERK DO

A member of this press recently had an interview with a European Civil Servant. In a reply to the pressman's suggestion that African talent was not being given full play in the Government service, the European said that it was the fault of the present system. He added that no African could hope to reach position of responsibility IF HE WAS NOT GIVEN THE CHANCE TO SHOW WHAT HE COULD DO. If he, the European was given the same job as many clerks were given, namely registering files and handing them for further action how could those to whom he handed the files know his capacity for largerminded work. He would onlyqualify as an accurate registrar of files and eventually drift into the £205 per annum Second Division backwater and vegetate until pension time.

GENIUS CRIMINALLY IGNORED

The same applies to African workers in the European-controlled commercial field. The clerks sit on their high office stools under he vigilant eye of an African a little bit higher than they in rank, and plod through their daily routine. Their occasional mistakes are brought home to them with disproportionate severity and the occasional sparks of genius which under suitable encouragement could be fanned into large scale brilliance and workmanship are criminally ignored.

INTRODUCE INTERMEDIATE GRADE EVERYWHERE

The criterion by which suitability for position in an office is judged is the degree of education of the newcomer. This is just as it should be. But once the African has been taken into employment that criterion should not be permitted to be the only consideration for advancement or repositioning Constant notice must be had of the worker's aptitude for certain types of work, and a scheme should be in operation to give the workers a chance of exhibiting in an acting appointment the existence of higher qualities If no such chances are given, these qualities in the individual may never be brought to light

PERSONAL CO-OPERATION WANTED BETWEEN AFRICAN AND EUROPEAN

It is the duty of European heads of departments, official or otherwise, to co-operate closely with the Africans who work under them with a view to knowing each man individually and his work. It is not sufficient, we should add, to depend upon recommendations from an African workman who may be in charge of the others. We feel we must emphasise this last statement. In the Government offices a scheme should be put into operation at once under which pushful and intelligent youngmen—we prefer not to call them "clerks"—may be given the opportunity to show whether they can perform the duties of administrative posts if sufficiently trained or by understudy.

Training Of Natives In Medicine And Dentistry

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P. O. Alice, C. P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in Science at Fort Hare. BE LOYAL AND STEADFAST TO KING AND COUNTRY

156a

ALL over the world to-day, capital (that is, money) is being destroyed. The facts that ships which cost anything from £80,000 each upward are being sunk, and the money they represent is being lost to the world, must be remembered by all Africans as one of the grim effects of the war.

Britain recently has been considering that it may even be necessary soon to reduce the personal money spent by its people in Britain to 25/- weekly per man: in other words, to £5 per month.

Even in America many people are living to-day, on the bread line, with just enough to eat and no more. The richest nations of the world are suffering as the result of the war policies of men like Hitler, that black hearted German upstart; Mussolini, the treacherous Italian who tried to stab France in the back last year, but who is now being unmercifully flogged in Africa by the British and is losing all his stolen Empire in Africa; and now Matsuoka, the Japanese robber, who wants to steal the lands and possessions of China, and the oil wealth of the Dutch East Indies.

Thus we see the great robbers of our day are despoiling the people and filling the earth with poverty and misery.

The "Race Relation News" has just published some interesting comment on the results of a social survey—the first of its kind ever held in Africa.

This survey, conducted by the Department of Social Science at the Cape Town University and directed by Professor E. Batson, revealed an incidence of poverty startling even to the investigators, familiar as they were with Cape Town conditions..

The survey covered the whole of the Cape Town municipal area and was based on 1,926 "random samples," representing about one in every thirty families of the population.

A "poverty line" was determined by calculating the minimum income on which a household could maintain decency and physical efficiency, barring illness and other extraordinary expenditure and assuming that the income was spent with a maximum of wisdom. Seven shillings and sixpence was calculated to be the minimum weekly amount needed to give an adult man sufficient food to maintain health. The minimum for clothing (including boot and shoe repairs) necessary for health and decency, assuming the most economical buying, was allowed at 1s. 10d. per week. For women and children these amounts were proportionately adjusted. Personal and household cleaning was allowed at 2d. per head of the family, and lighting at 6d. for one person and 1d. per head for each additional member of the family.

Yet, despite a rigid calculation of the poverty line, the survey showed that 28 per cent., over one quarter of the total population, lives below this poverty line. In European towns similar social surveys revealed that it is normal to have between ten and fifteen per cent. living below this purely subsistence level. In Cape Town 6 per cent. of the European families, 20 per cent. of the Asiatic families, 48 per cent. of the African families and 52 per cent. of the Coloured families live below the poverty line. That is: one out of every twenty European families, one out of every five Asiatic families and one out of every two Native or Coloured families lives at a level which cannot maintain decency or physical efficiency.

When it is considered that those bad men Hitler and Mussolini have already wasted the world's wealth to the extent of something like many millions by the terrible war which they forced on the world, which indeed is making us all poorer, we cannot but marvel at the queer outlook of many Europeans who follow Mr. Pirow (himself of German origin), and the Ossewa Brandwag, the members of which are all on the side of the enemy. These men, apparently, do not understand the great issues at stake.

We feel that our people, the Africans, know well who are their friends, and that Britain, fighting for freedom and the underdog, will stand by them until the victory is won.

Meanwhile, the war has made everybody poorer, Americans, Britons, South Africans alike.

We must bear our burdens proudly and courageously and must remain resolutely loyal to Government and King.

Training Of Natives In Medicine And Dentistry

MAR 15 1941

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been rendered possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of overseas, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P. O. Alice, C. P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared hereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the Matriculation Examination, and after that to take up and pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for funds for the award of five scholarships on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum tenable for one year, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

(1) Cape. MAR 15 1941
(2) Natal.
(3) Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West.
(4) Transkei.
(5) Transvaal.

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

African Juvenile Delinquency

Among the problems threatening Bantu social life, that of African juvenile delinquency is probably the most stupendous. Any opinions expressed by ardent students of this phase of Bantu national weakness, if pregnant with possible solutions, cannot but be regarded as a service to Africans. Thus do we regard the comprehensive dissertation by Dr. Wolheim, principal of the Welsh Native Secondary School, East London before a meeting of the E. L. Division of the South African Medical Association recently on the above subject.

He showed, inter alia, a graph of the total number of convictions of juveniles for all crimes during 1939 at East London. The rate of delinquency for Coloured and Native juveniles is three times that of European. The police crime list, however, does not show the various crimes nor the distribution of ages, so that these facts had to be extracted from a different source and were shown in a different graph. This information was obtained from the cause list of the probation officer for six months, July-December, 1939, and shows a total of 393 cases of juvenile delinquency among Natives. The crimes have been grouped under three casual factors, namely (a) peverty, ignorance and idleness, (b) vice and (c) violence. The first group includes all kinds of theft and robbery, traffic offences, loitering, contravention of Master and Servant Act and other petty crimes; under vice are included all liquor and dagga offences, drunk, disorderly and riotous behaviour and sex aberrations; under violence are included culpable homicide, murder, assault and obstructing police.

Over 60 per cent. of the crimes were the result of poverty, while vice and violence acounted for a relatively small number of cases. There is a steady increase in crime as the age increases, which seems to point to the fact that juvenile delinquency could be greatly lessened if proper care were taken of the younger offenders. The apparent drop after the age of 20 is probably fallacious, as a large number of these youths would be classified as juveniles but would be treated in the normal manner as adults.

There is widespread poverty among urban Natives, said Dr. Wollheim, and this poverty is at the root of practically all juvenile delinquency.

In the location rents for rooms ran from 10/- to £1 a month according to size, so that a complete family in most cases was obliged to occupy only one room and to board relatives and friends to eke out the rent. This was a direct cause of the terrible overcrowding in the location and a subsidiary factor in the causation of Native delinquency.

Dr. Wollheim then pointed out other subsidiary causes of juvenile delinquency which were resultant upon poverty. He mentioned broken homes caused by incompatibility of temperament aggravated by extreme poverty, casual marriages and loose unions resulting in a large measure of illegitimacy and abandoned children, overcrowding, under-nourishment and malnutrition and lack of control over children because both parents were obliged to work. It was variously estimated that from 50 to 150 children and youths had no homes at all, and were merely existing on what they could find in the bushes around the locations.

A further important factor in Native juvenile delinquency was the educational handicap under which Natives laboured. Education had a direct bearing upon delinquency because, of 647 cases of Native delinquents before the probation officer in Johannesburg, 15 per cent. had had no education whatever, 35 per cent. had been to school up to standard three, and only 20 per cent. had passed beyond standard three.

One of the main difficulties at East London in dealing with cases of Native delinquency was the total lack of any facilities to provide for these children. They were hauled before the magistrate for all sorts of petty offences, but could not be committed to reformatories, hostels or places of detention because there was no place of detention or hostel at East London. The magistrate in despiration then prescribed 12 cuts and turned the youth loose again to commit further crimes in his search for food or an outlet for his adventurous spirit. The local probation officer states that a "good proportion of the delinquents appearing before the local courts either have appeared before or are likely to appear again." Most of these delinquents were juveniles who had never been to school and had no proper homes or parents to take control over them. If they had parents, then both were out working, so that the children were simply turned loose from morning to night.

The speaker mentioned four means of treating deliquency. He pleaded for an extension of the probation officer system with properly qualified and adequate staffs, and the establishment of children's courts in all the larger towns to deal more adequately with the problem.

He asked for more reformatories where the worst cases could be placed and where rehabilitative work lasting over a long period could be undertaken.

Most of all, he pleaded for the establishment of a hostel and place of safety and detention for Bantu juvenile deliquents at East London and at other places lacking such places, and the establishment of industrial schools for Natives similiar to those for Europeans.

The speaker went on to outline a scheme undertaken by the local Child Life Protection Society whereby such a place is to be established if funds were forthcoming. It was proposed to erect an institution on the lines of the Native kraal in the Transkei with mud bricks and thatched roofs on the rondavel system. In addition to cheapness, this system had the great advantage of being more in line with the standard of civilisation of the delinquent, so that he would be the more easily able to adapt himself to the new conditions of life along social instead of anti-social lines. At this place there would not be any confinement behind walls or wire, but good food and clothes and a decent hut to sleep in would be provided. The colony would be run along the lines of a farm, so that children committed there would learn the rudiments of sowing, cultivation and reaping; how to run a vegetable garden, a piggery, a small dairy; how to shear sheep and keep poultry. In this way delinquents would learn that social behaviour was more comfortable and pleasant than their old anti-social behaviour when they were continually on the run and half-starved.

As preventive measures Dr. Wollheim mentioned the economic rehabilitation of the Native as the most important and proper housing the rehabilitation of the home and family and the proper adjustment of education as other measures. He stated that the wages of the Native had to bear a relation to his cost of living, and that this could be attained in both of two ways, namely, the raising of his minimum wage to a reasonable level by wage board determination or industrial agreement and the lowering of his rent by housing schemes under the Government sub-economic loans.

Finally, Dr. Wollheim stated that education should be compulsory in urban areas. Although the Union percentage for children attending schools was only 40 per cent., the position was much better in East London than it was in most other larger towns. He estimated the figure as about 60 per cent. Compulsory education would thus not cost so very much in the towns. He maintained that if municipalities were at all worried about their Native populations and about delinquency rate, they would take steps to erect school buildings and rent them to the province. This system was well known and obtained all over the province among missionary bodies. The speaker pleaded for rational financing of Native education from general revenue based upon the number of children attending school, the better training of Native teachers and the raising of the paltry pittance for which Native teachers were expected to do their work.

FUTURE OF ETHIOPIA PROBLEM FOR BRITAIN

APR 11 1941

International Body to Advise Emperor Is Suggested

While London papers are speculating on the feature of Ethiopia there is no formula expressed for the return of the country to Italy.

When Haile Selassie petitioned for the admittance of his empire to the League of Nations, his petition was granted after he had issued two imperial decrees: one abolishing the slave trade among his Arab subjects and the other abolishing slavery among the Copts. Britain opposed the petition, but Italy supported it.

The subsequent occupation by Italy proved that although slavery had been actually abolished, its commercial aspect had not, so Italy arranged with the Arabs to deal only in those Copts who still remained unreconciled to Italian occupation—there was no slavery, merely contract labor. This is one problem facing Britain, but according to a writer in The Times of London there is another:

"It is possible to believe that the independence of Abyssinia must be restored and yet to face the fact that the Emperor will need much help in re-establishing order and in putting an end to the old lawlessness and oppression along the Kenya and Sundan borderlands," he says. "How is that help to be given?

"We shall be in practical control yet for several obvious reasons anything resembling a British protectorate is out of the question. The other possibility, an international commission of expert advisers, also seems impracticable in present world conditions. Yet it is important to prevent misunderstanding, and also to avoid the possibility that, as before in our imperial history, our temporary expedient might grow into a permanent status.

"Might we not, therefore, arrange with the Emperor that he should accept from the first some non-British advisers? They should be men of such high personal standing that they would not even be suspected of using their position to advance their countries' interests. If, after the war, some international organization is set up they, with any British colleagues, could pass into its service."

"The Wicked Flee"

The only republic in Africa, little Liberia, was last month busting with pride. Like other republics great & small, Liberia had had a Nazi Fifth Column; unlike most others, Liberia had got rid of it, apparently for good and all, in a torrid two-act drama.

First act: Warned of a Nazi plot to assassinate him and take over the Government, Liberia's longtime President, short, scholarly-looking Edwin James Barclay, called the N.C.O.s of the 1,000-man Liberian Frontier Force into secret conclave. Next day, as Nazi leaflets fluttered in the streets, the N.C.O.s rounded up eleven men, including the ringleader, a fat, German-trained mathematician, Professor Massaquoi of Liberia College. Trumpeted President Barclay: "Am I a chicken? They were to move on me in the night, but I moved on them in the day."

Second act: Alarmed by a rumor that the U.S.S. Omaha was coming to Liberia, 15 German citizens packed up and left by fishing boat for the French Ivory Coast. According to Monrovian rumor, they did not stop running until they got to Hamburg. Crowed President Barclay Biblically: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Medical and Dental Training of Non-Europeans.

The following statement was made by Dr. Kerr at the opening of the new session at the South African Native College, Fort Hare, on 24th February:

"Two announcements of a high degree of importance to students were made during the recent vacation. In the first place the University of the Witwatersrand announced that it was prepared to receive for the full course in Medicine or Dentistry a limited number of non-European students, Native, Coloured and Indian. Hitherto such students, owing to the paucity of suitable clinical facilities had not been able to be carried beyond the third year of the six-year course and the cost even of that portion, especially to the Native community was almost prohibitive, being in the neighbourhood of £200 per annum. At the end of the third year non European students were confronted with the necessity of going overseas and of gaining admission to schools already suffering from over-crowding. It is a very great step in advance therefore that South Africa is prepared to extend to her own sons and daughters similar hospitality to that which has hitherto been, on the whole, so willingly offered by overseas universities.

"The second announcement was made by the Native Affairs Department and followed upon the first. It was that the Native Trust, recognizing both the importance of the step taken by the University of the Witwatersrand and the necessity of help if Native students were to take advantage of the facilities thus made available, proposed to offer annually five scholarships, covering the complete cost of tuition and maintenance, tenable by Natives of the Union selected as far as possible from five areas grouped as follows: 1. Transkei 2. Ciskei. 3. Orange Free State, Griqualand West, and British Bechuanaland (excluding the Protectorate). 4 Transvaal. 5 Natal. If any one area in any one year should be unable to supply a candidate the scholarship in that area might be awarded in another. These scholarships are granted to candidates who have taken the Pre-medical sciences at Fort Hare and satisfied the regulations for admission to the medical and dental courses laid down by the S.A. Medical Council. The award of the Scholarships will be decided annually by the Witwatersrand University in conjunction with Fort Hare College.

"As it is likely that before long there will be considerable competition for these scholarships which are open to women as well as men it should be noted that the candidate must have included Mathematics in his pass at matriculation and thereafter must have obtained fifty per cent in each of the pre medical sciences (Botany, Zoology, Physics and Chemistry) at the first year B.Sc. examination.

"In the award of the scholarships consideration will be given to the school and college record of the candidate, to his physique, his suitability for the profession of medicine and his character.

"In order that there may be a sufficient number of candidates from which the Medical Scholars may be selected, the Native Trust has established ten science scholarships of the value of £45 each to be awarded to suitable candidates in the same areas as the medical scholarships. Candidates for these will be required to have passed in Mathematics and Science at Matriculation and to support their applications by their school record. These scholarships will be tenable for one year only and no guarantee is offered that any holder of one of these scholarships will be selected to enter upon the full medical or dental course. If he is not so selected, the scholar will still have the option of taking a B.Sc. course in pure science with a view to teaching or industrial work, or of entering the Medical Aid course, or the advanced Agricultural course.

"While we are congratulating the Native Trust on providing such liberal assistance for the study of Medicine and Dentistry we should not forget that the Transkeian Territories General Council has for a number of years been awarding scholarships for overseas Universities and that a number of students from the Transkei are at present in course of completing their training in Medicine overseas.

"The first five candidates for admission to the second year of the Witwatersrand Medicine Course have already been selected. All are graduates in science of the University of South Africa and former students of Fort Hare. Their names are:

Howard Hermanus, Transkei.
James Njongwe, Transkei.
Donald Moikangoa, O.F.S.
William F. Nkomo, Transvaal.
Albert Mzoneli, Natal.

MAR 8 1941

"I should like to add that while the men named above have been selected on the ground of their qualifications they will receive their education at the cost of their community and will be expected, as will all others who follow them, to live up to the highest traditions of the profession into which they hope to be admitted, to set the welfare of that community and the honour of that profession above personal advantage or gain, and to do all that in them lies to maintain and improve the health and living conditions of the Native people."—South African Outlook.

Anxiety About Factories Bill

Question Of The Segregation Principle

BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.

THE House of Assembly has actually spent a full week legislating. Not only that, but it has at last begun to get its teeth into the more serious legislative work of the Session. Of course, as I have pointed out before, it is not the fault of the House that this happy development has been so long delayed. So long as the Government failed to produce its important Bills, the House has no alternative but to spend its time on more or less unimportant things.

The Factories Bill And Segregation

THIS week, however, one of the major measures of the Session at last reached the top of the order paper. That was the Factories Bill.

This is a measure to which we have looked forward with considerable anxiety. This anxiety was not due to the general intention of the Bill. That intention would, we believed, mean considerable benefits for all workers who could be identified as factory workers. This has proved to be the case. The Bill makes provision, among other things, for a forty-six hour week, extra pay for overtime worked, and a fortnight's paid leave after a year's service, but while it was certain to produce those benefits, we had reason to believe that it would also make provision whereby segregation might be introduced into the organisation of factories.

This was the reason for our very real anxiety, which was fully justified when the Bill finally appeared in printed form; for in the middle of the Bill was embedded a clause which stated that, "if, in the opinion of an inspector, conditions exist in a factory which result in undesirable contact between persons of different races or sexes, he may require the occupier of the factory to take such steps as may be necessary to prevent such contact." Immediately, representations were made to the Minister by numbers of interested parties of whom we were not the least active and emphatic, and after the Minister had announced the withdrawal of the Bill on the ground that the Afrikaans version was defective, a new draft appeared in which the offending clause was omitted.

DANGER NOT PAST

This does not mean, however that the danger is over, since a new section has appeared in the clause empowering the Governor-General to make regulations under the Bill. That section states that the Governor-General may make regulations as to the conditions to be observed in order to prevent undesirable contact between employes, a section which, according to legal opinion, can be used to force factory owners to separate non-European workers from white workers and which, we believe, may be used in that way.

So far the Nationalists profess not to have discovered the implications of this re-wording, which is all that the change amounts to, and on his introduction of the Second Reading of the Bill last Wednesday the Minister was challenged on his supposed removal of what has come to be known as the Segregation Clause. In reply, the Minister stated that he had never intended to introduce segregation and that he had taken out the clause just because it had been claimed that it was a segregation clause. At the same time he announced that he had put in another clause to enable him to do what he did want to do, and as it is still not clear what that is our anxiety remains.

The original clause, however, made it inevitable that the debate on this measure should become a colour bar debate. Already Mr. Ben Schoeman (H. P. Fordsburg), although he is clever enough to know that the Minister still has segregation powers under the new form of the Bill, has moved to have the Bill sent to Select Committee so that a new Bill may be introduced which will make this quite explicit and, so far, the whole debate has largely centred on this issue. Mr. Molteno, when he spoke, took occasion to emphasise the Minister's statement that his intention was not to introduce segregation, and foreshadowed our plan to move amendments in the Committee to make this quite clear. When the debate is resumed next week, I hope to be able to re-emphasise these points.

We are hopeful that the members of the United Party who represent coloured voters and others who are known to be liberal in colour issues will speak the same way, as indeed Mr. Morris Alexander (Cape Town Castle) and Mr. Morris Kentridge (U.P. Troyeville) have done already.

'They Died As Soldiers"

MAR 1 1941

The annual commemoration of the Mendi disaster is gradually becoming a national movement. It is gratifying to note that while Africans on the Rand were holding a more impressive and well organised memorial service than its predecessors last Sunday another service equally impressive perhaps was being held at Langa, Cape Town. According to reports, Africans in Pretoria are making arrangements to do honour to the heroes of the Mendi disaster on March 9. There can be no doubt that the importance of keeping green the memory of the men of the Mendi is being recognised by all thinking Africans.

The most important feature of the Cape Town celebration was the presence of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Jan H. Hofmeyr, who delivered an impressive address which has sent a thrill of hope throughout Bantudom. If our memory serves us well, it was the first time since the late General Botha, the then Prime Minister of South Africa paid a glowing tribute to the heroes of the Mendi disaster when he announced in the House of Assembly the sinking of the troopship Mendi, that a Minister of the Crown has had the occasion to praise the brave deeds of the men who perished in the English Channel during the last war. Mr. Hofmeyr's views on what is generally known as the Native problem are well known. He is one of the growing band of noble-minded Europeans who believe that there can be "unity in diversity" and that as the white man and the black man worked together in the past for the industrial and commercial development of this country they would continue to do so if their relations were improved and harmonised. His creed is that of a man whose mind ... been emancipated from the ... of race and colour prejudice. In human diversity he sees the purpose of God's scheme of creation, not of differentiation but of unity in thought and action.

It is not surprising, therefore, that Mr. Hofmeyr was able to make a speech that has, undoubtedly created a profound impression upon the minds of those who listened to it and those who read it. The tone of the speech reveals the sincerety of the man, and there was no necessity for him to say that he "regarded himself as a friend of the Native people." We all know he is, and what is more we know that his friendship is not influenced by selfish motives but inspired by his belief in social justice and political fairplay for every human being regardless of his race, colour or creed. It is inspired by his belif that in God's scheme of things the African has a distinctive contribution to make to "the gathering achievement of the human race." It is only a great man with a heart and soul made humane by the teachings of the Son of Man and with a mind freed from race and colour prejudice by the same teachings, who can say:

"We think of those who were drowned with sorrow, but we also think of them with pride because of the way in which they died. They showed themselves worthy of the brave men of your people in the past. You must show that you are worthy successors. The men of the Mendi did not die on the battlefield with spears or guns in their hands, but none the less they died as soldiers. Their sacrifice was equal in value to the service of any soldier who died in the last war."

This is not the language of a diplomat, designed to cheer us and to ease our minds; it is the language of a man who believes, as we have already pointed out, in interracial co-operation and harmony. The men of the Mendi and those who fell in South-West Africa and East Africa died as soldiers for their King and country. South Africa is as proud of them as it is of the heroes of Delville Wood, because "their sacrifice was equal in value to the service of any soldier who died in the last war." We are glad that official recognition of the services rendered by members of our race during the last war has been made public by the Minister of Finance and we can assure him and his colleagues in the Cabinet that as long as South Africa stands for the principles of democracy and for the advancement and freedom of the human race our race will never fail her.

Increase African's Purchasing Power

South Africa is a leading state of the African continent and if she is to maintain this position permanently she will have to include Africans in her economic development, not merely as labourers but also as consumers. The days when the African was only an asset to South Africa as a labourer are fast passing away. The impact of civilisation upon his life has completely changed his mode of living and it has whetted his appetite for the good and higher things of civilisation. His ancient life is fast disappearing. In urban as well as in the reserves, he is discarding the old way of life; he is plunging deep into the civilised way of life.

This change has naturally increased his wants and it is his ambition to fit himself into the civilised life of to-day. He realises that unless he does so, his race might share the fate of the Red Indian of America and the Bushman of Australia and of this country, who could not resist the destructive influence of Western civilisation. He knows that the salvation of his race in this Europeanised Africa lies in his adapting himself to civilised conditions, and not in clinging to the manner in which his ancestors lived and worked.

There are people, no doubt, who think that it is wrong for the African to adopt European mode of living, who think that he should be encouraged in this Europeanised Africa to continue to live the life of an Africa that is no more. These people, we know, are afraid of the advancement of the African. On account of their prejudiced minds they are unable to realise that the advancement of the African is not detrimental but beneficial to the welfare of Europeans in Africa. It will give impetus to the development and expansion of inlustry and commerce and thus increase facilities for the employment of those Europeans who are to-day living in poverty.

It is gratifying to note that there is a growing number of European business men who realise the importance of African advancement and who believe that its exploitation will enable South Africa to maintain her leading position on the African continent. They feel that Africans should be enabled to participate in the economic development of this country after the war. In this connection let us quote Councillor S. P. Lee who told the Ratepayers of Johannesburg the other day that "there is need in the Union of an immediate progressive increase in the purchasing power of four-fifths of the population, so that post-war products might be more readily absorbed. "Councillor Lee went further and said "he was convinced that a progressive increase in Native wages over a period of years would have a definite effect on the expansion of industry, because the additional purchasing power thus granted to Natives would mean additional employment for Europeans as overseers and charge-hands."

We are glad that this view is gaining ground in spite of the inability of the majority of Europeans to outgrow the belief that the black man should not be paid a living wage. We are glad that there are men who realise that the impoverishment of the Africans does not enrich the white man; but that it retards the progress of South Africa. The increase of the wages of African workers will not in any way be detrimental to the welfare of Europeans; it will not in anyway affect White security in Africa but will enable our industrial products to be absorbed in this country. The Africans are an important internal market which unfortunately is not being properly cultivated. Few business men know of its existence and as the result this market is hardly being tapped. The days of "Kafir" trucks are fast passing away. The ambition of the new African whether in urban areas or in the reserves, is to posses the good and higher things of civilisation. He has learned to appreciate a beautiful home containing all the requirements of modern life. He likes good food and to dress decently. If he is well paid, he will certainly spend his mney in South Africa and thus contribute his share to the prosperity of this land.

The United Africa Company Answers Critics

Pro African Not Anti

From the West African standpoint that of Nigeria especially undoubtedly those passages are much the most important in which Mr Williams re-affirms specifically what had been plain to most observers of late namely that so far from. The United Africa Company's policy being to freeze out the small trade especially the African small trader it is the exact opposite It is dealing with African local traders and employing Africans in responsible positions and it means to do these things more and more its course in supporting African local traders being limited only by the number of these whom it can attract and who have the essential qualifications of character ability and substance. Mr. Williams advisedly sets them down in that order and of course he is right. He and every other intelligent business man knows that given character and even moderate ability the substance will be a reward not long withheld.

His declaration should act as a stimulus to the West African rising generation. Here is the offer of useful and honourable careers for Africans; and Mr. Williams's remarks on this head may recall to the minds of some of our readers an article published in our columns about a dozen years ago, in which an experienced observer, with Eastern experience in mind, argued in favour of the policy now specifically announced and long since practised.

Land And Its Ownership

Upon another point, what Mr. Williams says might usefully be amplified. It is his reference to the establishment of an oil palm plantation in the Eastern Provinces. It is a fact that the dealing with some 10,000 acres for this purpose has raised a great deal of suspicion and anxiety among Nigerian Africans, both the Company and the Government being held up to blame; quite possibly because the whole position has not been explained to the public, or has now been forgotten if it was explained. Mr Williams knows, we all know, how sensitive are all the African races of the West Coast, lest their rights to their land should be taken away. his life has completely changed his mode of living and it has whetted his appetite for the good and higher things of civilisation. His ancient life is fast disappearing. In urban as well as in the reserves, he is discarding the old way of life; he is plunging deep into the civilised way of life.

This change has naturally increased his wants and it is his ambition to fit himself into the civilised life of to-day. He realises that unless he does so, his race might share the fate of the Red Indian of America and the Bushman of Australia and of this country, who could not resist the destructive influence of Western civilisation. He knows that the salvation of his race in this Europeanised Africa lies in his adapting himself to civilised conditions, and not in clinging to the manner in which his ancestors lived and worked.

There are people, no doubt, who think that it is wrong for the African to adopt European mode of living, who think that he should be encouraged in this Europeanised Africa to continue to live the life of an Africa that is no more. These people, we know, are afraid of the advancement of the African. On account of their prejudiced minds they are unable to realise that the advancement of the African is not detrimental but beneficial to the welfare of Europeans in Africa. It will give impetus to the development and expansion of inlustry and commerce and thus increase facilities for the employment of those Europeans who are to-day living in poverty.

It is gratifying to note that there is a growing number of European business men who realise the importance of African advancement and who believe that its exploitation will enable South Africa to maintain her leading position on the African continent. They feel that Africans should be enabled to participate in the economic development of this country after the war. In this connection let us quote Councillor S. P. Lee who told the Ratepayers of Johannesburg the other day that "there is need in the Union of an immediate progressive increase in the purchasing power of four-fifths of the population, so that post-war products might be more readily absorbed. "Councillor Lee went further and said "he was convinced that a progressive increase in Native wages over a period of years would have a definite effect on the expansion of industry, because the additional purchasing power thus granted to Natives would mean additional employment for Europeans as overseers and charge-hands."

We are glad that this view is gaining ground in spite of the inability of the majority of Europeans to outgrow the belief that the black man should not be paid a living wage. We are glad that there are men who realise that the impoverishment of the Africans does not enrich the white man; but that it retards the progress of South Africa. The increase of the wages of African workers will not in any way be detrimental to the welfare of Europeans; it will not in anyway affect White security in Africa, but will enable our industrial products to be absorbed in this country. The Africans are an important internal market which unfortunately is not being properly cultivated. Few business men know of its existence and as the result this market is hardly being tapped. The days of "Kafir" trucks are fast passing away. The ambition of the new African whether in urban areas or in the reserves, is to posses the good and higher things of civilisation. He has learned to appreciate a beautiful home containing all the requirements of modern life. He likes good food and to dress decently. If he is well paid, he will certainly spend his mney in South Africa and thus contribute his share to the prosperity of this land.

From the West African standpoint that of Nigeria especially undoubtedly those passages are much the most important in which Mr Williams re-affirms specifically what had been plain to most observers of late namely that so far from, The United Africa Company's policy being to freeze out the small trade especially the African small trader it is the exact opposite It is dealing with African local traders and employing Africans in responsible positions and it means to do these things more and more its course in supporting African local traders being limited only by the number of these whom it can attract and who have the essential qualifications of character ability and substance. Mr. Williams advisedly sets them down in that order and of course he is right. He and every other intelligent business man knows that given character and even moderate ability the substance will be a reward not long withheld.

His declaration should act as a stimulus to the West African rising generation. Here is the offer of useful and honourable careers for Africans; and Mr. Williams's remarks on this head may recall to the minds of some of our readers an article published in our columns about a dozen years ago, in which an experienced observer, with Eastern experience in mind, argued in favour of the policy now specifically announced and long since practised.

Land And Its Ownership

Upon another point, what Mr. Williams says might usefully be amplified. It is his reference to the establishment of an oil palm plantation in the Eastern Provinces. It is a fact that the dealing with some 10,000 acres for this purpose has raised a great deal of suspicion and anxiety among Nigerian Africans, both the Company and the Government being held up to blame; quite possibly because the whole position has not been explained to the public, or has now been forgotten if it was explained. Training Of Natives In Medicine And Dentistry

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financail support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P.O. Alice, C.P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for funds for the award of five scholarships, on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum, tenable for one year, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

(1) Ciskei,
(2) Natal,
(3) Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West,
(4) Transkei,
(5) Transvaal.

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

Heilbron Teachers' Association

MAR 15 1941

A Year's Activities

By RANDALL PETENI

NOW that we are so far into 1941 that a clear retrospect of the past year (1940) at Heilbron can be made, I put forward my impressions of it, with special reference to the activities of the Heilbron branch of the Orange Free State African Teachers' Association.

The year was crowded with activities. First came the preparations for entertaining the teachers' conference in September. Concerts, dances and other functions had to be arranged to raise the necessary funds, and all met with such success that when the conference assembled the treasury was in a healthy condition. This outstanding success was due to the harmonious and enthusiastic co-operation of all.

These activities, however, did not in any way deter the teachers from pursuing their private studies. Some were studying Afrikaans, others grappling with the matriculation syllabus, and others striving to advance themselves in post-matriculation work. Of these the achievements of Mr. Lembede, B.A., Mr. Makhetha and Mr. Khaketla deserve special mention. Mr. Lembede had to write four subjects to complete his B A degree. Being a man with capacity for work, he passed the four of them. In his curriculum were included courses like Afrikaans I and Latin II. Mr. Makhetha has also been successfully battling with the B.A. He is now left with two major subject. and a minor to complete his degree. But Mr. Khaketla's performance was the most spectacular. After passing the matric in December 1939 in the second class, last year he presented five subjects for the 1st year B A., a thing not usually done even by internal students, and he passed all of them. He is now on the high school staff of Eagle's Peak College, Basutoland.

During the course of the year four teachers boldly decided to join the holy state of matrimony, and it is hoped that even more this year will follow suit.

Several schemes for increasing the activities of the Teachers' Association, and under its auspices competitions in indoor games are being planned.

Further, though not part of the teachers' organisation, a dancing club has been formed.

It is hoped that the number of teachers will increase appreciably next quarter; and such additions should make Heilbron social life brighter.

Activities Of Afrjcans' Parliamentary Representatives

The Parliamentary Representatives of the Africans have been very much concerned to learn, as a result of enquiries made by Mrs Ballinger, M.P. that the Minister of Mines intends to introduce a Miners' Phthisis Bill into Parliament this session without making any provision in respect of the African workers. This is held by them to be a breach of faith, as they had been given to understand two years ago that, on the next occasion of the introduction of a Miners' Phthisis Bill, the present wholly unsatisfactory provisions in respect of compensation for African workers suffering from silicosis and tuberculosis as a result of their work on the mines would be reviewed and improvements effected. The findings of an Inter-Departmental Committee (Mines and Native Affairs) which reported two years ago on the position of Africans under the Miners Phthisis Act, recommended that benefits should be provided on a graduated basis for sufferers at various stages of silicosis, and that food and other payments in kind be added to the amount of the cash wages reckoned for compensation purposes. The Mining Industry agreed to give voluntary additional benefits until the whole matter were dealt with in an amending Act.

The Parliamentary Representatives interviewed the Minister of Mines (Colonel Stallard) on this subject on February 20, and pressed hard for the inclusion of the African workers in the proposed new Bill.

Colonel Stallard was adamant. He said that he had not the information necessary to enable him to decide what should be done for African workers. The deputation pointed out that the Inter-Departmental Committee had gone into the matter and had made recommendations, but Colonel Stallard said that he wished to have more information. He also said that scarcely anyone had taken advantage of the voluntary benefits offered by the Mining Industry. The Parliamentary Representatives subsquently took up this matter with the Secretary for Native Affairs and were satisfied with the steps which he has now taken to inform those who should have benefited. It was clear to them that the absence of claimants had been due to a weakness in the administrative measures taken.

The Parliamentary Representatives pressed Colonel Stallard again, but he would not agree to alter the present Bill. He indicated however, that he proposed to arrange for a Commission to overhaul the whole of the Miners Phthisis legislation and organisation and the needs of the African workers would be reviewed then. He was asked to include in the personnel of the Commission a non-official representative of the Native Affairs Department were included.

The deputation asked Colonel Stallard to approach the Chamber of Mines with the request that the improved benefits recommended by the Inter-Departmental Committee be applied pending the further legislation.

The deputation intimated that they would probably find it necessary to oppose the present Bill because it failed to provid for African workers. It wa pointed out to him, that if the proposed Workmen's Compensation Bill became law the Workmen's Compensation rates would be higher than the present Miners' Phthisis rates.

Native Farm Labour

The complex question of Native farm labour in European areas was brought up for consideration by the last session of the Natives Representative Council, Pretoria through a motion. This requested that the Council should appoin a select committee to consider the recommendations of the Committee on Native Farm Labour which reported last year; and that thi Council's committee bring forward those recommendation which it considered should b upported. As a result of this, a select committee of the N.R Council was so appointed, unde the chairmanship of the Chie Magistrate of the Transkeian Territories. The report submitte by the committee received ver brief consideration by the Council it being apparent from the outse that certain essential factors particularly to the benefit o labourers, had either not bee sufficiently enquired into, or received the importance they deserved. Consequently, the Council resolved that the consideration of the report be deferred till next year.

In the House of Assembly, a fortnight ago, Mr. Geldenhuys made a serious attempt to have the Cape Masters and Servants Act amended in such a way that non-Europeans should be thrown into gaol for what in the case of Europeans would be mere breach of a civil contract. The amendment he sought mainly concerned Native farm labour in White areas. Another member, Mr. Lief Egeland, moved an amendment demanding a commissions of inquiry into the working of masters and servants laws, emphasising that the farm labour problem was to be solved only by placing those laws in a modern and civilised basis.

It is significant that the report of the Farm Labour Committee had found that restrictive measures had done much to make farm labour unpopular among Natives. So great has been the agitation by European farmers in the Eastern Province of the Cape for example, that repeated representations have been made to the Government for relief, and this in the form of pressure being brought to bear on Native so-called squatters on farms to be evicted.

Resulting from this, the provisions of the 1909 Private Locations Act were carried out with unflinching zeal in certain districts. Even this method was doomed to failure like its counterpart, Chapter Four of the Trust and Land Act in the Transvaal. In preference to offering their labour to the next European employer, the evicted Natives in the Cape sought sanctuary among their kith and kin, thus residing or again squatting unlawfully.

It is difficult to foresee the extent to which shortage of Native farm labour will extend its tentacles in quest of its prey. What is definitely a crude solution of the problem is taking place, knowingly or unknowingly, on the Trust farms taken over by the Government from former White owners in Released Area No. 32. Here the position is that owners bought out left an admittedly unenviable legacy of large families of Natives. These consisted of aged heads of families, numbers of brothers and sisters of the servants who were in actual employ of the farmer concerned. The Trust is gradually settling the former ACTUAL servants on the newly-surveyed lots and charging them rent therefore, but it refuses to settle Natives other than these, whether they be brothers of the former employees. The rest are refused permission to occupy and rent new sites, with the inevitable result that they must move out and seek domicile

BANTUS AND THE INDIFFERENCE SHOWN TO EDUCATION

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR ELIJAH PHIKE, Worcester, C.P, writes: Sir,—The number of children who make good use of educational facilities is disappointing. Various factors account for this state of affairs, among them being poverty and ignorance of parents, but the main factor seems to be the unattractive wages paid out to Bantu teachers and skilled workmen.

The illiterate Bantu parent gives you all sorts of foolish reasons, such as the uselessness of educating a child, in that education makes him or her an aimless wanderer or that his ancestors were never educated; but the underlying reason seems to be the poor wages paid to the educated man. In many cases the rate of pay for educated Bantu is lower than that of unskilled labourers.

Year in and year out we request our Government to enforce compulsory education. The usual reply is that poll-tax returns are not quite up to the mark. And there it ends.

Mysteriously a small proportion of parents succeed in sending their children to recognised institutions for training. When they complete their courses, they are surprised to find that they are no better than ordinary labourers.

The majority of them find themselves in the ranks of the unemployed waiting for appointments as school teachers, agricultural demonstrators and certified carpenters. Would it be too much for our Government to pay its Bantu servants an attractive living wage? Europeans and Non-Europeans are in full agreement that the wages paid by the Government to educated Bantu are inadequate.

Some employers pay good wages to Bantu mechanics in the motor-trade (I don't mean the illiterate mud-guard-cleaners). Would it be too much for our Government to open doors for certificated Bantu engineers in the Government workshops and pay them good wages to relieve congestion in labour offices?

The indifference to education shown by the Bantu is the result of the Government's apparent policy of paying its educated Bantu servants as poorly as it can.

However, let us hope our Government will not be long in altering the present state of affairs.

Transvaal African Congress

MAR 8 - 1941

The fact that since the election of the Transvaal African Congress held at Orlando in August 1938, there has been one special Conference, two annual conferences, one press conference and a number of other meetings, is a sign that it is beginning to revive after remaining inactive for more than nine years.

It cannot be said that a great deal hes been done, but it must be remembered that it was no easy task to revive this once powerful organisation, and get it to function smoothly. MAR 8 - 1941

I feel it necessary for me to make certain criticisms of the conduct of the organisation of the Congress in the recent past. The main criticism is that not enough active work is being done by members. Members confine themselves to coming to conferences, there to criticise the officials, and to express opinions about the organisation. But they do nothing between conferences about establishing and working in branches in their own localities to further the work of the organisation. Conferences are all very well as means of co-ordinating the work being done by various members, but they are meaningless if no work is being done by branches.

It is not the aim of Congress to become a talk-shop such as many African organisations degenerate into. The cause of the Africans demands active work among the people. Work in the branches is the life of Congress. This work must in future be done actively and enthusiastically by people who are keen to see our cause advanced MAR 8 - 1941

Members might ask what it is they can do to further the work of Congress in their localities. One cannot here outline all the functions which could fall to the lot of active members, but one might mention such matters as organising deputations to place the views of the people before bodies such as Native Affairs Department, the Police Authorities, or Municipalities. The drafting of resolutions, advising the people in their difficulties, and generally acting as leaders and spokesmen, these are but some of the few functions of members of our organisation. Our members should be guiding stars and leaders of their communities.

It is hoped that at future conferences there will be more activity of the kind on the lines I have suggested. My advice to all members is to get out among your own communities and to organise the people there. Only when this job is done well will the Transvaal African Congress really have something to be proud of.

Native Liberian Bishop Passes At Age Of 71

CAPE PALMAS, Liberia—(ANP)—The first Liberian tribesman to become a bishop, the Right Rev. Theophilus Momolu Gardiner, 71, Protestant Episcopal Suffragan bishop, died here Thursday. Less than a week ago Bishop Gardiner was reported to the national council in New York City by the Right Rev. Leopold Kroll, who is on furlough there, as being on active duty among the mission stations in his diocese.

Bishop Gardiner was baptised at the age of 13, while a student at the Episcopal Mission school of St. John's in Cape Mount, where he was born, the school in which he had enrolled with the intention of learning English to continue in the trade of the Vai tribe, of which he was a member.

He refused his family's offer to manage an estate of tribal lands and slaves and was confirmed by Bishop S. D. Ferguson in 1892. The same year he became a candidate for holy orders at the Cuttington Collegiate and Divinity school in Cape Palmas. Ordained a deacon in 1896, he became a priest 10 years later.

For the next several years he worked among the people superintending mission work in scattered stations where native teachers and evangelists were engaged. Later he was made rector of St. James' church here, and this spectacle of "a Vai tribesman serving as a Christian minister among rival tribes", was of extraordinary interest in that area, according to a bishop who presided at that time. He came to the United States in 1921 for the first time, and made a second visit to attend his church's general convention in 1928

LIFE HERE

The answer to our minds is quite simple. In the first case the life of the individual in this country is different from what it is in other parts of the continent. He enjoys a perhaps greater degree of freedom of movement, of speech, of enjoyment and of justice. This can be traced right down the ages and owes itself to the fact that from time immemorial government of the people has been by the people and for the people. This system of democractic government has had a powerful influence on all of the inhabitants: it has made them more widominded as a whole, tolerant towards other people's institutions and outlooks, and has given them that independence of character that is the soul of a free nation. Those who have the freedom to think properly rise quickest to the needs of any emergence.

Therefore the Gold Coast man and woman is quickly amenable to discipline where the object renders the abnegation of self imperative.

The opening of the Winifred Holtby library, which is to take place in the Western Native Township, Johannesburg on the 7th December, marks an important step forward in the provision of library services for non-Europeans.

Hitherto, facilities for Natives have been confined mainly to the libraries which originated from a grant of £3,000 set aside for the purpose in 1929 by the Carnegie Corporation. The Carnegie libraries for non-Europeans in the various provinces have rendered valuable service. The Transvaal library alone serving approximately 90 centres, including schools, locations, missions etc., and distributing about 9,000 books per annum.

These libraries, however, have had to depend mainly on voluntary and untrained workers for the dispatch of books to the various centres, and also have been handicapped by lack of funds. Last year the Transvaal library's revenue amounted to £200 in grants from municipalities throughout the province plus additional £100 from the Provincial Council. The Winifred Holtby library is conceived on more ambitious scale. It is housed in an attractively designed building in the heart of the city's largest Native area, and it is intended to serve 35,000 people. These will be mainly Bantu but Indians and Coloureds will also benefit. Built and equipped at a cost of £2000 the library will be staffed by skilled Native and European assistants and the annual cost of upkeep will be £500. Another non-European library was opened in May at the Bantu Men's Social Centre with 3,000 books and a third library has been proposed in Orlando.

BADEN POWELL
The Friend And Champion Of African Youth

FEB 1 - 1941

By Chief Scout's Pathfinder Commissioner Senator Rheinallt Jones.

African boys and girls have lost a champion and friend for the Great Chief Scout has died. Lord Baden Powell (better known to millions of boys and girls all over the world as "B.P.") always acknowledged that it was an African young man who taught him a great deal about Scouting, and that many of the features of "Scouting for Boys" were African in origin.

From the beginning of the Scout Movement "B.P." wished boys (and, later, girls through the Girl Guide Movement) of every race to benefit from the discipline and training. At the beginning the Boy Scout Movement had a military flavour, but as time went on the Chief Scout gave more and more thought to using the Scout Movement to make the youth of the world to understand that all men are brothers and that peace is more honourable and helpful than war. The great "Jamborees" were gatherings of boys of various nations, and they certainly did teach the boys that "boys are boys" in every nation. For the time being, however, Hitler and Mussolini have destroyed "B.P.'s ideals in a great part of Europe. But these ideals must win if the world is to be saved.

The ideals of the Scout are as different from those of Fascism and Nazism as black is different from white. Hitlerism is against his will. He did believe in discipline imposed from outside. He knew, and we know, that true discipline is that which comes from free, self-discip

The opening of the Winifred Holtby library, which is to take place in the Western Native Township, Johannesburg on the 7th December, marks an important step forward in the provision of library services for non-Europeans.

Hitherto facilities for Natives have been confined mainly to the libraries which originated from a grant of £3,000 set aside for the purpose in 1929 by the Carnegie Corporation. The Carnegie libraries for non-Europeans in the various provinces have rendered valuable service. The Transvaal library alone serving approximately 90 centres, including schools, locations, missions etc., and distributing about 9,000 books per annum.

These libraries, however, have had to depend mainly on voluntary and untrained workers for the dispatch of books to the various centres, and also have been handicapped by lack of funds Last year the Transvaal library's revenue amounted to £200 in grants from municipalities throughout the province plus additional £100 from the Provincial Council. The Winifred Holtby library is conceived on more ambitious scale. It is housed in an attractively designed building in the heart of the city's largest Native area, and it is intended to serve 35,000 people. These will be mainly Bantu but Indians and Coloureds will also benefit. Built and equipped at a cost of £2000 the library will be staffed by skilled Native and European assistants and the annual cost of upkeep will be £500. Another non-European library was opened in May at the Bantu Men's Social Centre with 3,000 books and a third library has been proposed in Orlando.

BADEN POWELL
The Friend And Champion Of African Youth

FEB 1 - 1941

By Chief Scout's Pathfinder Commissioner Senator Rheinallt Jones.

African boys and girls have lost a champion and friend for the Great Chief Scout has died. Lord Baden Powell (better known to millions of boys and girls all over the world as "B.P.") always acknowledged that it was an African young man who taught him a great deal about Scouting, and that many of the features of "Scouting for Boys" were African in origin.

From the beginning of the Scout Movement "B.P" wished boys (and, later, girls through the Girl Guide Movement) of every race to benefit from the discipline and training At the beginning the Boy Scout Movement had a military flavour, but as time went on the Chief Scout gave more and more thought to using the Scout Movement to make the youth of the world to understand that all men are brothers and that peace is more honourable and helpful than war The great "Jamborees" were gatherings of boys of various nations, and they certainly did teach the boys that "boys are boys" in every nation. For the time being, however, Hitler and Mussolini have destroyed "B.P's ideals in a great part of Europe. But these ideals must win if the world is to be saved. The ideals of the Scout are only as different from those of Fascism and Nazism as black is different from white. Hitlerment against his will. He did and Mussolini believe in discipline imposed from outside He knew, and we know, that by a Dictator supported by a nation's greatness depends upon the discipline which free secret police and soldiers. But the "B.P." believed that the only men accept and upon their true discipline is that whichreadiness to serve their comes from free, self-discip country in peaceful ways. He also had learnt that the future of civilisation also depends upon freedom and free service for mankind.

FEB 1 - 1941

The Chief Scout of the World was greatly interested in the Pathfinders, and no one was more happy as "B.P." was when the Pathfinders were admitted into the Scout Movement. When he visited South Africa he enquired for Pathfinders wherever he went. His last words to me were: "The Native boys are keen and splendid stuff, but you need more and better officers.

FEB 1 - 1941

"B.P." has ended a long life of service for his country and for mankind. His greatest service was for youth. It was given without pay or hope of reward. He has gone to his rest with the gratitude of many millions of men and women who were once members of the Boy Scout and Girl Guide Movements, and mourned by millions of boys and girls—of all races—who are Scouts and Guides today. Will African men and women come forward to carry on his work for African boys and girls and for the future greatness of Africa?

Ohlange Institute Appeal For "Electric" Fund

Dr. J. Dube's Career

FEB 15 1941

ARRANGEMENTS are also in Johannesburg to celebrate the first anniversary of Mr. Jacob M. Nhlapo's appointments as principal of Wilberforce Institute. The occasion will be in the form of a social gathering, and will take place at the Inchcape Hall in Polly Street, Johannesburg, on March 14.

A musical programme, with two main addresses on "My Task" by Mr. Nhlapo, and "Our Achievements—So Far" by Professor J. R. Coan, will be rendered by the Wilberforce Institute choir under the baton of Mr. C. T. C. Xabanisa. Mr. Wm. Nkomo, B.Sc. (ex-principal of the Bantu High School, Pretoria) will preside.

Mr. Jacob Nhlapo was appointed principal of Willberforce Institute last year in March. He came from Moroka Institution, in Thaba Nchu, where he served with distinction as the only African teacher on the high school staff.

His appointment to Wilberforce was an acquisition for that school, and was acclaimed throughout the country. His confidence in his ability to make a success of the work was expressed in what at the time seemed to be extravagant terms, but the progress since achieved has more than justified his optimism.

The funds which will be raised at the social on March 14 will go towards the building fund of the institution.

OHLANGE INSTITUTE

FORMER students of Ohlange Institute at Phoenix, Natal, will have noted the appeal made by Rev. Dr. John L. Dube, Ph.D., for donations towards a fund intended to acquire an electric plant for the institution.

The appeal presents an opportunity to all former students of the School—and they are many here on the Rand—to show, even in a small way, their appreciation of education they received there.

Ohlange Institute was founded by Rev. Dr. Dube in 1908, and, like all schools purely African, has gone through anxious periods and lean years. But, thanks to the outstanding ability of Rev. Dr. Dube, Ohlange Institute to-day stands as firm as a rock,—approved and supported by the Natal Education Department.

Ohlange has been styled the Tuskegee of South Africa. It aims to do for the Bantu boys—and girls—of South Africa what Booker T. Washington's world-renowned school in Alabama, U.S.A., has done for the Negro boys and girls of America. Industrial arts, crafts and trades are emphasized; boys and girls are put through their paces in book-keeping, typing and shorthand in preparation for the day when their own people will require their services; and scores of teachers have passed through the doors of that institution. Their high school department—junior, senior and matriculation examinations are taken—has been turning out a steady stream of highly qualified students for many years now.

Former students of Ohlange especially, and friends of African progress, should answer the appeal of Dr. Dube generously.

REV. JOHN DUBE

REV. JOHN LANGALIBALELE DUBE was the first African to be honoursd by the University of South Africa when it presented him with the honorary Doctorate of Philosophy a few years ago. He was the second, after the late Dr. W. B. Rubusana to receive this high academic distinction.

Rev. Dr. Dube was educated in America. He is a counsellor of the Royal House of the Zulus, and a trusted adviser of the Native commissioners and other Europeans charged with the welfare of Natives in Natal. He founded the "Ilanga lase Natal," and is author of a number of books, notably "Isita Somuntu Nguye" and "The Clash of Colour."

In 1914 he led an African National Congress deputation to England, to lay before the British Parliament and the public the grievances of the Natives of this country, notably in connection with the Land Act of 1913.

The Great War of 1914, however, made it impossible for the deputation to fulfil its mission.

He is an ex-president of the African National Congress and president of the Natal Native Congress; a member of the defunct Government Native Conference and of the Joint Council movement. He is also a member of the Native Representative Council.

He was a delegate to the Pan-African Conference, England, and also to the Missionary Conference of La Zoute, Belgium.

Dr. Dube has played a leading part in the improvement of Native education in Natal, and has exercised considerable influence in various ways in the interests of the Bantu people.

FEB 15 1941

He is a good speaker, and has been nicknamed "Mafukuzela."

Segregation Amongst Africans

Sir,

FEB 8 1941

I noticed that Mr. Mahamela, in trying to oppose Mr. Mohlamme's suggestion of segregating urban and rural Africans in towns, expressed his feelings without defending them.

Economically, we find the rural African an obstacle to the progress of those in urban areas. Being used to nothing more than the bare necessities of life he is prepared to accept low wages, and is therefore preferred by the white master. Furthermore, having no people to support in town his wages go all the long way to the farm where they subsequently purchase some scrub cattle from which we cannot expect any milk or meat for trade in town. Thus he takes the bread out of the mouth of his urban brother.

Morally, he is more easily influenced into crime than his urban brother, and to put it bluntly he is a social misfit in town where he gets no tribal censure for his failings. He thus brings down the tone of moral life in town. Moreover because of the impression gained through him we are thought incapable of assimilating the Western Civilisation. Help them we are prepared, but not at our expense, for to destroy the helper is to render the victim helpless.

The Black Man And His Land

JAN 25 1941

The Story Of Farmer A & Farmer B

We now jump six years to 1931 before we have another look at our farmers. During these six years Farmer A has kept his grazing herd limited to 12 beasts. Every year, on the average he has sold or slaughtered four cattle. His grass is still in tip-top condition and his cattle are healthy. He has money in the Post Office Bank.

During these six years (1925 to 1931) Farmer B has lost 12 cattle, all of which died. He still has 18 beasts on his land. You will notice that his cattle are no longer increasing in number. The old ones die quicker, than the new ones come. About three quarters of his land is now useless for grazing; it is full of dongas, stones and prickly bushes. There are a few small patches of grass left where the cattle can still get a little to eat. But Farmer B still thinks he is better off than Farmer A. "I have 18 cattle," he says, and he has only 12."

The next two years, 1932 and 1933, were very bad years for farmers. There were terrible droughts, and when the rain did come it was very little. Both our farmers suffered from the drought, B suffered more than A. Farmer A's land was in excellent condition before the drought. The grass was thick and its roots were well set. There was plenty of humus in the soil and thus it kept its water longer. A's cattle still had food when B's had practically nothing to eat. But Farmer A very wisely reduced the number of his herd to 10. "It is not wise under these conditions to keep these two extra beast," he said. So in 1934, after the lean time was over and good rains came again, A had only 10 cattle on his land. And during the previous three years he had only sold 10 cattle. But with the good rains his land rapidly recovered from the drought, because the strong roots were still there, holding the rich soil together.

Now it is 1940. Farmer A has 12 cattle on his land. He does not intend to let his herd get bigger than that. He still has his four camps and he moves the cattle to fresh grass every week. He still sells some of his cattle every year and gets good money for them.

But Farmer B's cattle have continued to die. His land never recovered from the drought. He now has only four cattle left.

Between 1919 and 1940 Farmer A sold or killed 78 cattle valued at £350. During the same time Farmer B sold or killed or gave as lobolo 4 cattle valued at £15; he also had the use of the carcases of the 29 cattle that died. These would be valued at about £58. Total for B, £73. Farmer A also made quite a lot of money by selling milk and Farmer B made nothing from milk.

Our two farmers started equal 21 years ago. If Farmer B had managed his land and cattle in the way he should have done he would have been as well off to-day as Farmer A. As it is Farmer A has got about five times as much value out of his land cattle than Farmer B got out of his. In addition A still has 12 good cattle his land is in much better condition than it was 21 years ago. It will continue to bring in a good profit every year if he treats it properly.

But even the best farmers would be able to do very little with B's land now. Not only has the grass gone, but the soil has gone too. It is mostly rocks and stones. If this land were fenced off and no cattle were allowed on it for a few hundred years it might become good grazing land again and Farmer B's great-great-grandchildren might be able to use it. We know that soil is formed by breaking down rocks and it takes a very, very long time for a little soil to be made in this way. It takes hundreds and thousands of years to form a deep soil, but soil erosion caused by man and his cattle may wash it all away in the time it takes for a child to grow into a man.

Let us learn the lesson from this story of the two farmers. Let us try to keep our grass and our soil, because once they are gone we can never get them back unless we live to be hundred years old; and that you know is impossible.

African Fined For Bathing On 'White' Beach

CAPE TOWN, South Africa.—(ANP)—While Great Britain is ostensibly fighting a war in behalf of democracy, discrimination and segregation are still the order of the day in her South African colonies. Recently Dan Karseise, a young native, was fined five shillings, or five days imprisonment, for bathing on a part of the ocean front that had been reserved for Europeans.

The judge, in passing sentence said, that he was acting in accordance with the laws as approved by both houses of parliament which "must have given due consideration to the regulations, and it is not the function of the court to say that they had acted in an unreasonable way."

All-African Convention In Bloemfontein

JAN 11 1941

The fourth Conference of the All-African Convention began its sessions in the Community Hall, Batho Location, Bloemfontein, on Wednesday the 18th. December, 1940, under the presidentcy of Professor D.D.T. Jabavu.

There were over 56 delegates representing twent-three organisations from all over the Union and our Parliamentary representatives in the persons of Advocate D. B. Molteno, M.P., and Senator Rheinallt Jones were present.

Advocate Molteno in addressing the convention gave an exhaustive resume of the struggle he and other Parliamentary representatives of the Africans were having in attemping to obtain some amelioration of the living and economic conditions of our people. He touched on Wage determination, land question, education, Workmen's Compensation Act, African Trade Unions and the scheme put forward by the Government for their supervision by the Native Affairs Dept.

CLOSER CO-OPERATION

Senator Rheinallt Jones deplored the lack of closer relationship between the African organisations and Parliamentary representatives. He urged that it was most important that leaders of Africans should meet their Parliamentary representatives from time to time to exchange views on matters of immediate importance. He explained that from March 1941 Africans would receive full medical training in the Union without going overseas and that 5 scholarships and 10 bursaries were available for deserving candidates. He also mentioned that as from April 1941, school fees from African children would be abolished.

JAN 11 1941

The Presidential address dealt with matters immediately confronting not only the Africans but the world as a whole. It touched on the undoubted loyalty of the Africans to the Throne and the Government of the land. Among other things it outlined the aims and objects of the All African Convention and directed the delegates to the Convention to the desirability and necessity of forming farmers' associations and co-operative societies with a view to start businesses which would serve the African community.

JAN 11 1941

JOINT COMMITTEE

Africans And Milit ry Service

JAN 18 1941

The Executive Committee of the Governor-General's National War Fund, says Race Relations News, has agreed that Africans on military service and their dependants shall be covered by the Fund, on the same principles as those laid in Circular No. 1 for European, viz:—

"The Fund accepts the obligation of making such provision for the dependants of a soldier on active service as will, when added to the soldier's allotment of a part of his pay...and income from any other source, serve to maintain them in a condition of reasonable comfort and, so far as is possible, at the same standard as that which the family was wont to live before the soldier's enlistment. But the acceptance of this obligation is subject to certain necessary limitations. The rsources, whether actual or prospective, of the Fund will not enable it to make good to dependants in every instance the loss of income caused by the soldier's enrolment, and it is obviously necessary, if the more pressing cases are to be adequately met, to impose a limit on the amount of the grant to be made to a single family."

This assurance is very welcome because the allowances for dependants are quite inadequate for those who live in urban areas, and for those who live on a "civilised standard" in rural areas.

The South African Gifts and Comforts Committee includes all Non-European units in its provision of gifts and comforts to soldiers.

The National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s has also included the Non-European units in its War work activities.

Non-European organisations are, in increasing numbers, helping these funds; but more will be done when the Non-European communities are made aware of the above-mentioned facts.

JAN 18 1941

A special Sub-Committee for the application of these principles to the dependants of African soldiers has been formed under the Chairmanship of Major S. H. Cooke, O.B.E., formerly Dirctor of Native Labour for the Union and Chief Native Commissioner for the Witwatersrand. The other members of the Sub-Committee are: Mrs Ballinger, M.P., Mr. Lowe, present Chief Native Commissioner for the Witwatersrand, Mr. Ballenden, Manager of the Johannesburg Municipal Non-European and Native Affairs Department, Mr. R. V. Selope Thema, Member of the Natives' Representative Council, and the President of the Institute of Race Relations, Professor R. F. A. Hoernle.

Segregation Amongst Africans

IDEA ABBARRED

JAN 25 1941

Sir,

In his letter published in the issue of "The Bantu World" dated December 14, 1940, Mr. Jacob R. Mohlamme suggests a dividing line between the Bantu people permanently settled in the urban areas and those fresh from the rural areas, as the latter are a hindrance to the progress of the former.

How such a suggestion can emanate from a man who has the common weal of his people at heart is unthinkable. We have far too many lines dividing us in the Union already. There is a white line placed between the Whites and the Asiatics, and a yellow line between the Asiatics and the Blacks.

Notwithstanding these discriminating lines, Mr. J. R. Mohlamme wants a black line to divide the Blacks which line cannot be called a line but a fatal crack self-inflicted. We abhor these discriminations.

If the people who reside in urban areas are educationally and refinedly in advance of their less fortunate brothers and sisters living in the rural areas, it is their duty to bring them up to their level of civilisation. If it certainly is true that these otherwise superior to those living in the backveld, it goes without saying that they possess stronger characters, and as such, free from falling an easy prey to people of low character.

As a means to civilise the urban Bantu (because he is not civilised nor does he understand the meaning thereof) residential segregation is suggested with the help of the Municipality urbanising their permanent tenants, if tenants can be called permanent. According to Mr. Mohlamme a man from the rural areas and places outside the Union is incapable of improvement. His place of employment should be in the mines etc, where skill is out of the question.

The environment plays an important part in moulding a man, but a man's mental capabilities are within him. Educational facilities are extended to such people as are deemed undesirable by Mr. Mohlamme, and useful bent from these people should be used for the well-being of humanity irrespective of their places of domicile.

The concoction of all kinds of drinks is not attributable to the presence of people from outside. The low wages are at the root of this evil.

I would like to conclude by saying to Mr. Mohlamme, your suggestions are productive of more harm than good. They should be thrown to the winds, for if they were put to the test they would end in a cul de sac.

"Pick 'em up There, You Sons Of Africa"

JAN 25 1941

There is a rattle of musketry and hundreds of dark-skinned men clad in white jibbas and khakhi shorts leap from the cover of thorn bushes and advance in open formation across the parade ground to where, in the midst of a group of his staff, stands a small bearded khakhi-clad figure wearing a topee and the crossed swords of a general on his epaulettes.

Emperor Haile Selassie of Abyssinia is watching exercises by the new Free Ethiopian Army, which is being trained in the Sudan by British and Rhodesian officers.

After the exercises the Emperor drives on to the parade ground and stands at the salute while the cream of his troops, shouldering Britain's most modern rifles, march past in fine time.

JAN 25 1941

At their head rides the Crown Prince of Ethiopia, mounted on a magnificent white charger.

Commands are given in English, and one burly Ethiopian sergeant was heard to say, "Pick'em up there, you sons of Africa." The troops are being trained in all the arts of war, and they include men from distant parts of Abyssinia and former refugees in Kenya from the Italian invasion.

The Emperor's second son, the Duke of Harrar, now under training with the British, will shortly take the comnand. He was formly in the Wellington College O.T.C.

A constant stream of Abyssinian troops and camel convoys of arms are finding their way into the Abyssinian interior, where British artillery, manned by Abyssinians, is already in positcn.

THE LANGUAGE CONTROVERSY

MAR 15 1941

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. WELDON G. NDELAPHI, Modder Bee, Transvaal, writes:

Sir,—Without equivocation this illuminative discourse, rational to the far-sighted, will accelerate the production of the resentful phrases reserved in the minds of blind critical readers; let alone the queer conceptions of strictly traditional and conservative individuals who, refusing to recognise the historical development of more advanced races, create such a situation that psychological preventive measures are rendered devoid of practical value.

The brilliant conception of adopting a common medium of expression, first advanced in print by Mr. Mohlamme, albeit it made him run the gauntlet for a considerable time in these columns, will in the long run play a decisive part in educating and moulding a coherent body of public opinion (the essence of mutual co-operation and progress) to the dismay of opposition. Opinions have been expressed to the contrary; and whether such individuals, contemplating the formation of two specific linguistic groups—(creating one language as medium of expression for Zulu, Xhosa and Ndebele, either by fusion of the three respective languages into one or the authoritative adoption of either one for general purposes, another one on the same principles for Suthu, Chwana and Pedi as those applied to the Nguni section)—have taken the tribal status of others such as Shangaans, Bakalanga, Bacas, etc., into deep consideration, is still a matter of speculation. To say that concentration be focussed on the acceptance and development of such a proposition would mean admission of incompet[illegible] by the others. This realisation in the event will compel the recurrence, on a more pronounced basis, of former undesirable consequences—a thorn in the flesh—for which no effective remedy was sought in earnest. I say a thorn in the flesh, for should the under-estimated sections, proud of their tribal origin as any other, eventually impress the public by playing a decisive role in the commercial sphere, a demand for inclusion or recognition of language will crop up to prove the ineffectiveness of this cumbersome undertaking.

If therefore public opinion be bent on the maintenance of the afore-mentioned linguistic groups, then, human nature being what it is, preparations must be made from the onset to counteract or elude the inevitable clash, though, I do not intend presenting a dark outlook. Clear indication of such may be observed by a shrewed individual in the relationship exisisting between the two main European sections. So be on the qui vive lest you sign your own death warrant.

Rather than the creation of two powerful factional groups (for that would be the essential result) it were better by far to induce the formation of one great united African race through a common means of communication available to all sections, whilst preservation and development of original languages be confined to home and tribal precincts, yet I am aware of the difficulties to be encountered in bringing this Herculean task to fruition. MAR 15 1941

Nevertheless this startling idea, if acted upon by common consent, would have far-reaching effects. Otherwise with evolution for ever marching on, and neology surreptitiously creeping into our inherited languages, such corruption might induce forfeiture of this heritage for either one of the two predominant European languages already having an influence over youth especially those in urban areas. A people without a language are dying a living death. Men of different tribes on the mines have come to understand each other and Europeans by using a language termed "Fana ka lo." Should my opinions be considered rash, then, believe it or not, inter marriage and time will, against personal opinion, decide the issue.

Only a clear unbiased conscience capable of confronting stark reality will appreciate the views advanced, for let it not escape the mind that "the future of our race—its greatest promise—lies in our living human."

FARM LABOUR AND POLL TAX

He says the Natives are asking now for pensions. I should like to ask him whether he has ever seen a farmer in this country backward in asking the Government for anything he wants, so is there anything wrong in Natives also asking for consideration? Then the Hon. Senator has also complained about young Natives leaving the farms and going to the mines to earn a living. The natural consequence of the Poll Tax, which no other race pays, is that the young Native who does not earn sufficient money on the farm has to go to the mines to earn the tax.

In the part where I live, the Eastern Province, our experience with the Natives is this, that it is not so much a question of wages on the farm as a question of treatment. It is a question of home, and we have no difficulty with labour at all but that does not come into this question.

Senator Robertson: That is why they pay 15s. a month.

Senator Marchand: But we give them other facilities which you do not. We get loyalty from them. We are perfectly willing to give them enhanced wages if they allow us to cut down certain

Problems Of Farm Labour

MAR 8 - 1941

African Wool Growers

BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.

IT is difficult at any time to tell what the House of Assemby is likely to do but it was a particular surprise when it spent nearly three days of the past week in a general debate on the Third Reading of the Part Appropriation Bill. It is not customary for the House to spend much time on the third reading of any Bill unless somebody has very strong feelings against the measure in question, and on financial measures the second reading is always a large, general debate, so that the third reading is usually fairly formal. However, the rules of the House permit a debate on such an occasion if anybody wants it, and on this occasion the Opposition took full advantage of it on an amendment moved by Mr. Werth (Nat. George) that the House decline to pass the Bill until the Department of Defence had put its house in order and ceased to waste money unnecessary.

IT appears that the Herenigde Party was feeling sore about something that had been said about them in the earlier stage of the debate and determined to get back on the Government by holding up business in this way. It was a dreary type of revenge from everybody's point of view, not least from that of the Opposition members themselves who, to judge from their speeches, had considerable difficulty in flogging themselves into action.

MR. MOLTENO DEFENDS CONSUMERS'S INTERESTS

The few hours of Government time left over from this debate did something to redeem the week's work from complete futility, at least from our point of view. Colonel Collins introduced a Marketing Amendment Bill which was designed simply to tighten up the existing Marketing Act, but Mr. Molteno took the occasion to raise the principle of the original Act. He pointed out the injustice of trying to regulate the prices of farm commodities without reference to the ability of consumers to pay those prices, and stressed the difficulties under which the poorest consumers, the Africans, labour under the present law.

If the Committee Stage of the Bill, he endeavoured to get the Minister to accept an amendment to increase the number of consumers' representatives on the Control Boards. Of course he was not successful; but on another point, he did get a declaratien from the Minister that he would make it his business to see that labour tenants growing maize should and would be given the rights of producers under the schemes favoured by the Boards for the benefit of producers. That was one considerable gain.

BEHIND THE SCENES: THE WOOL GROWERS

It has come to my notice that the Department of Agriculture is contemplating in respect of African wool growers a plan which they were induced to scrap last year in respect of maize farmers. Under the Wool Agreement with the Imperial Government 50 per cent of any profit made by the Gorvernment on the re-sale of South African wool is to come back to South Africa for redistribution among the producers. The plan, however, in respect of African produce is to return their quota of the profits to the Native Trust Account. The Minister has confirmed this in a private interview, but has expressed his willingness to consider any proposition put up to him for the distribution to individual producers. In order to meet this suggestion, a deputation including a number of members of the United Party hope to have an interview with him this coming week which, they trust, will result in the Department agreeing to the distribution of the profits due to the African growers on the same individual principle as applies in the case of Europeans.

Training Of Natives In Medicine And Dentistry

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course, will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentisistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P. O. Alice, C. P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the Matriculation Examination, and after that to take up and pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for Funds for the award of five scholarships, on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses, but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum, tenable for one rear, for the first year Science course at Fort Hare.

As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

[1] Ciskei,
[2] Natal,
[3] Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West,
[4] Transkei,
(5) Transvaal.

FEB 22 1941

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

WHAT IS TO HAPPEN TO ABYSSINIA?

British Weekly London England

By A. M. CHIRGWIN

London Missionary Society

MR. ANTHONY EDEN answered this question, as far as the British Government is concerned, in a Parliamentary statement. He laid down four points: first, that Abyssinia must regain her freedom, second, that Haile Selassie must be restored to the throne, third, that the country must be given the assistance of a board of advisors appointed on an international basis, and fourth, that Britain has no territorial ambitions in Abyssinia.

By this statement Britain is pledged to the righting of the wrong that was done to Abyssinia four years ago, and to the re-establishment of international justice. The rape of Abyssinia was both a grave wrong to a small and helpless nation and a serious blow to international morality. In particular it shook the faith of the African in the white man.

The recent victory in Abyssinia gives the opportunity not only to put Haile Selassie back on the throne, but also to restore international confidence. The world is watching to see whether Britain will be as good as her word. What is perhaps more important, Africans everywhere are anxiously waiting to see the one kingdom in Africa that was really independent resume its independence.

A Test Case

For over four years the fate of Abyssinia has been a constant topic of conversation amongst African people, particularly in such large centres of population as the Rand and the Copper Belt, the West Coast and the Negro colleges of the United States. This is all the more remarkable in that the Abyssinians as a whole are not negro and not even negroid. Throughout the continent and in America Africans have come to regard Abyssinia as a symbol of their racial aspirations, and they are watching Britain closely, wondering if once more the white man will let them down. Abyssinia has thus become a test case of British and indeed of international good faith.

Abyssinia is unique in Africa; it fits into none of the categories. In a continent where the people are organised in tribes, Abyssinia is a kingdom, and has a monarchy that stretches back beyond the Queen of Sheba. Instead of being for the most part pagan and animist, like the rest of Africa, it is a country of Christian churches older than those of Britain.

In place of the homogeneous population of an African tribe, Abyssinia is a land of mixed peoples, drawn from various races at different stages of culture. The Amhara, who hold sway, are certainly not African. In some of their characteristics they have links with the ruling class in Madagascar, and like them are not only a dominant but a domineering people. The other main elements in the population are the illiterate nomad Somalis of the south-east, the warlike, restless Galla of the south-west, and a host of nondescript Negroid peoples scattered throughout the land.

Some of these elements, anxious to be free from what they regard as the Amhara yoke, advocate the partition of the country. It must be admitted that the hand of the Amhara has often been heavy, if not harsh, and that the country is backward and feudal. But it must also be admitted that the non-Amhara peoples could not stand alone, and to give them a country of their own would simply mean chaos.

No Easy Role

Is there not some other course? Are the only alternatives the yoke of the Amhara and the independence of the other sections of the population? It may be questioned whether the restoration of Haile Selassie means the return of the Amhara regime in its pre-war form, and whether this is necessarily implied in the promise to give Abyssinia her freedom. The solution of the problem has been indicated by Mr. Eden in the proposal to set up a board of advisors on an international basis. Such a board could hardly be set up against the will of the people.

In any case their task will be difficult and delicate. Haile Selassie will, it is fairly certain, welcome their presence; the Amhara, it is almost equally certain, will not. On the contrary, they will be suspicious of any foreigners appointed to do what for centuries they have done without assistance. Yet something must be done to redress the grievances of the subject people and to set the country on the path of progress.

It is easy to see that Britain has no easy rôle to play. On the one hand she must fulfil her pledge in regard to Abyssinian freedom, and on the other hand she must try to secure a larger measure of freedom and opportunity to the non-Amhara people. To do this she must be prepared to spend money and effect improvements, seeking no permanent advantages for herself. Then she must gracefully retire.

If Britain is able and willing to do this she will right a great wrong and give back freedom to a ravished nation; she will also increase confidence in international morality and restore the African's faith in the white man.

Graduation At Fort Hare

(BY SPECTATOR)

IN spite of rain a crowd assembled at Fort Hare on the morning of April 5 at the graduation ceremony. Twenty-one graduands were capped by the Vice-Chancellor of the University of S.A., Professor F. Postma, Litt.D. On the stage of the Assembly Hall, the scene of the ceremony, sat the Vice-Chancellor; Professor G. F. Dingemans, M.A., chairman of the Fort Hare Governing Council; Dr. A. Kerr, LL.D., principal of Fort Hare, and the members of the Fort Hare Senate and staff.

After the assembly had been constituted as the congregation of the University of S.A., Rev. Professor Mungo Carrick, M.A., B.D., read the scriptures and the Rt. Rev. Bishop Ferguson-Davie, M.A., D.D., led in prayer. Then Professor D. D. T. Jabavu, B.A. (Lon.), presented the graduands and the Vice-Chancellor conferred the degrees. Rev. G. B Molefe, M.A., acted as the hooding-steward.

For the B.A. degree there were: Misses C. N. Ramolahloane, Mildred Msomi, U. K. Dzivane, and Messrs D S. Dhladhla, S. S. Gape, G. I. M. Mzamane, L. Kerr Siwisa, G. J. S. Vabaza, C. Kuppusami, H. Lekhethoa, A. M. Lembede, J. M. Moeletsi, S. F. M. Sukati, and S. J. Mokhesi.

For the B.Sc. degree there were: Messrs M. D. Govender, B. Jungbahadur, E. Mahase and J. Z. Njongwe.

For the L.L.B. degree: Mr. Reginald Cingo.

For the B. Econ. degree: Messrs G. A. Mbeki and F. Blume.

Vice-Chancellor's Impressive Words

In the course of his graduation oration the Vice-Chancellor said he was glad to officiate at the ceremony. The college occupied a unique position. Though there were many other colleges doing similar work, yet that was the only one for the African people. Its existence was the confession of the truth that every man and woman was entitled to obtain whatever education he desired to have. There should be no one denying the African that right, but unfortunately there were some who thought Africans should not be educated. The result of the work done there should go a long way to lessen that opposition. That the College was a Christian College appealed to him. No one could appreciate fully the pioneering work done before the College came into being by the missionary bodies. Many other colleges had been established through the efforts of the churches. There should be no opposition between science and religion. Science was unified knowledge, and religion was the worship of the whole man to the Creator of all things. The various branches of learning made a universal whole, and each was bound to acknowledge its dependence on the others and the contribution of the others. The universal whole was not the outcome of accident but of systematic creation from the hand of a purposeful creator.

In conclusion Dr. Postma congratulated the graduands and said that from them would be expected not only leadership but also service and self sacrifice. Their motto was that in the light of God they would see light but they should remember that there could be no light without burning. If they wanted to shed light they must also burn, that is, burn with zeal for serving their fellowmen

Professor Dingemans, in thanking the Vice-Chancellor, spoke of the desirability of unity in diversity; and Dr. A Kerr in congratulating the graduands mentioned that that was a women's day, as that morning they had the largest number of women graduating at the same time. He mentioned that among the graduates, there was one who was born on the day the college was opened; and the father of this graduate, to commemorate the event named his son after the first Principal of the College. Dr. Kerr proceeded to read the letter written by Rev. Mr. Siwisa father of Kerr Siwisa, 25 years ago in which he expressed the wish that the two Kerrs would one day meet when his son would be availing himself of the higher learning. This was a touching allusion, more so as the father had long since died, but Mrs. Siwisa succeeded in realising this noble aim of her husband.

Abyssinia's Future

THE successful prosecution of the war against the Italian troops will be received with pleasure and thanksgiving by all who are friends of Africans, and that none the less by all of the Bantu races living in South Africa. The last war against Abyssinia which was so unlawfully begun and prosecuted by the Italians, was one of the most unjustifiable in the whole history of the world. That part of Africa was the only spot left for the Africans since the whole had for various reasons and objects been taken by European Nations.

That last war against Abyssinia was not justified by facts and attitude of the Africans ruling and living in that part of our continent. When Signor Mussolini's war was critised he defended himself by citing the British and all European nations and also powers who didn't hesitate to think of causes when they had resolved to take unto themselves the territories occupied and owned by Blacks. He was simply do ng what others had done in similar circumstances. He wanted the Black man's country and he had to enforce his claims by resort to arms as had been done by others who had military power and could thus enforce their claims.

Now that the country has been wrested from the clutches of the Italians, the whole world will expect that this only part of Africa which still remains in the name of Africans will be maintained under the rule of the Great Leader Haile Selassie. He has shown himself a really civilized and brave man and is a qualified ruler.

It is, however, to be expected that the expense in lives and arms which were instrumental in restoring his country will be considered but also that this will not be allowed to be in his way and that of his people from being denied their birth right.

The whole world is cognisant of the sacrifies made by the British Empire to drive out the Italians at such great risks. It is one of the military achievements which will be told with pride.

EASTERTIDE

The solemn recurrence of the Easter holidays has come and gone. The whole Christian world has celebrated this worthy occasion in most unusual circumstances this year. There were millions who could not celebrate it at their home countries as a result of this war. It would look as if this was not connected with the Prince of Peace since there has risen a power in the world which has so organised its operations that it will recognise no influence or power but itself in every object that it sets itself to accomplish.

This power seems based upon the erratic idea that a mortal has been accorded powers as great as those of God over the hearts of a great number of subjects of a certain country. The sufferings of the Saviour of the World and his Crucifixion and resurrection seems relegated to a secondary place to military conquests determined upon by that power. History is full of such human risings, ascendencies and eventual reckoning.

The Almighty will ultimately triumph in justice. Man is mortal while the Almighty is everlasting and will easily upset men's plans against his creation.

BETTER FOOD FOR AFRICANS

THE increase in the number of cases of tuberculosis among Africans in Johannesburg and other towns on the Reef was stressed by Dr. I. Frack, the acting medical officer of health for Krugersdorp this week.

He said that in Krugersdorp itself there were hundreds of such cases every month. These could not be sent to the Rietfontein Hospital owing to lack of accomondation.

Many Africans are very susceptible to this disease owing to incorrect feeding. Those who work on the mines are protected from the scourge because they receive the correct food; most Africans, however, do not understand the principles of nutrition. Although they may have enough to eat their food is not of the proper kind.

During the last few years many doctors have studied the question of the right kinds of food to ensure good health. We all know that there are certain foods which do not satisfy our hunger for more than a short period. Now there are a number of essentials which must be present in our food if we are to be strong and healthy and able to withstand illness when it occurs. These essentials are called vitamins and although there need only be a very small proportion of them in our food, without them we cannot be completely healthy.

These vitamins are not necessarily found in expensive foods only, but it is necessary to know which foods do contain them.

We have all noticed that since the beginning of the month only one kind of bread can now be bought. The new bread although it does not appear so attractve as white bread is more health-giving. The old bread had few vitamins but the new loaf contains many and is therefore more health-giving. Fruit (especially guavas) and vegetables also contain many vitamins.

This question of correct food is most important, especially for young children, and in order to assist our readers we have arranged with two members of the medical profession, who have made a close study of the subject, to deal with the matter in our next issue. We feel that their advice will prove both informative and beneficial.

"AFRICANS" OR "NATIVES"

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. JACOB R. MOHLAMME, Eastern Native Township, Johannesburg, writes:—Sir,—One of the major problems confronting some Natives in Africa is the finding of the appropriate term for their designation in the Government and Municipal dealings, to distinguish them from the Natives of other nationalities who are under the same Government and Municipal supervisions. I have said it, and I will maintain it, that we are all Africans in Africa, but we are not all Natives in Africa. (There's no absurdity in this statement please).

A resolution was passed intimating that "Africans" be used instead of "Natives". But the difference between the continental application of words and the Government or Municipal use as words for the differentiation of inhabitants in the same continent, repudiates that resolution; because in the Dominions status quo we are therein registered indiscriminately as "Africans."

I have said it from the very beginning that I do not deny us to be "Africans," as some men seem to understand me to be saying so. I repeat that that resolution seems to have insufficient grounds to land effectively in the minds of those responsible to accepting it, if they had to. For instance, we have some enterprising references, e.g., African Theatres Ltd, which would be registered indiscriminately in the Dominions' status quo as the "African enterprise"; and, it would only be with the Government or Municipality of the particular continent to clarify to the particular inhabitants that although these theatres are stated to be the "African enterprise," yet they either belong to the African Europeans, African Asiatics or African Natives, for we are all Africans in Africa; and we are not all Asiatics, not all Natives, not all Europeans, that we could even indiscriminately designate ourselves still as "Africans".

The Natives of Europe are indiscriminately called Europeans by us here (externally for them). And they too, in Europe (now externally for us), indiscriminately call us Africans. But the Government or Municipality is hence to satisfy the external indiscriminating call as to which of the African communities is now particularised for a certain purpose; and it may then be found that it referred to either Asiatics, Natives, or Europeans.

May it be noted now once and for all that:—"Africans" is a word of continental inheritance only, applicable to whoever inhabits this continent; "Natives" is a word non-applicable to whoever is not a of aboriginal inheritance only, and Native of this continent.

No Census for Non-Europeans.

APR 1 - 1941

The next census of Europeans in the Union will be for midnight of May 6-7. Every European man, woman and child will be counted, but the non-European census has become a war casualty, for the Government has decided that it will not take place on grounds of economy and the difficulty of obtaining sufficient suitable enumerators at the present time. In 1931 the non-European census was also a casualty "owing to financial stringency." Since the Union came into existence in 1910 there have been only three censuses of the non-European population, these being for the years 1911, 1921 and 1936. The long interval between 1921 and 1936 led to endless guessing and innumerable false estimates and deductions being made regarding supposed increases in the Native population; in fact much of the debating in connection with the Native Bills was mere groping in the dark. As Native labour is by many people looked on as South Africa's greatest asset it is surprising that the Government does not, if for this reason alone, keep a more watchful eye on this section of the population than on the rest. But the lessons of the past seem to have been forgotten and chaotic guesswork will probably again take the field before another census of non-Europeans is taken.

Our Men-Folk Are Real Weather Cocks

Editress,

APR 5 - 1941

I beg you to allow me a space in your honourable paper, to express my opinions and at the same time to answer Ndodana Nzima, whose articles was "The Weakness of our Women-folk".

I would in the first place like to draw his attention to the fact that men are just the same if not worse. He says our love is cheap, and we are unfaithful. Yes, Ndodana Nzima, we are alike: we talk alike, we dress alike, we laugh alike, and we walk alike, but our personal characters are quite different.

You men are foolish to the last degree, especially men of the modern period. You love girls, with no intentions to marry and make a fine home. Today, if you men open your eyes and choose suitable girls, girls whom your parents would rely upon, and love, hatred and stabbing among men would come to an end. Your fault is that you choose girls who are for everybody; first you choose girls who are beautiful, dress richly, and are willing to offer themselves for your pleasure. You want girls who will buy you suits, girls whose home welcomes every Tom, Dick and Harry.

The girls who are simple, kind-hearted, honest, and industrious you do not want because you say they are lifeless, you find no pleasure in them. They refuse to grant pleasure before marriage, so you run away from them. The girls who make life a paradise for a few moments are the ones you love and when you have had enough of them you begin to say their love is cheaper than any old gramophone plate.

The £10,000,000 For Natives' Land

When the Representation of Natives Act (No. 12 of 1936) was discussed in Parliament five years ago, General Hertzog, who sponsored the bill in its introduction, gave an assurance that the Cape Native Vote that was being altered would be substituted by the purchase of land for Natives. This purchase, he said, would absorb the sum of £10 000.000 from the Treasury, to be expended over a period of five years. It was ventilated in these columns at the time that if the land could not be bought through one lump sum there was the misgiving that a future government would disclaim responsibility of the burden. The Natives, it was argued, would find themselves deprived of their treasured right of the franchise in such an even tuality, and left in hand with an unfulfilled promise of money for land purchase.

Indeed this possibility almost took form during the time of General Hertzog's own government, when Mr. Havenga, the then Minister of Finance was vehemently urged by Senator Heaton Nicholls (of the Native Affairs Commission) not to omit in his Budget the provision of one million pounds for Native land purchase. Mr. Havenga had pleaded that there were more urgent financial obligations his government had to meet, and that the provision asked for by Senator Nicholls was not as important.

The Bantu population of the Union have reason to feel gratified and re-assured by the announcement made in the House of Assembly on March 25 by Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, Minister of Finance. Replying to the Budget debate, the Minister in the first place fulfilled the duty of binding over his Government to the promise originally tendered by General Hertzog. Secondly, the Minister has by acknowledging this contract, thereby raised the status of the Native land purchase vote to that of "most urgent financial obligations" for future government Budgets. The position explained in the short reference of the Minister to this matter is accepted in good faith by the African population. The Minister's reply is worded as follows:-

"A sum of £1,000,000 had been provided for in the purchase of land for Natives in 1940-41. That money had not been spent and it was not proposed to make any provision for the year 1941-42. That money would not fall back to the Treasury. It was being invested in Treasury Bonds where it would earn interest and would thus be earmarked for the future. When General Hertzog had made his statement in 1936 about the purchase of land he had not contemplated the outbreak of war three years later. Circumstances made it impracticable to spend £10.000.000 in five years as originally contemplated, but in all other respects the Government regarded itself as bound by the pledge General Hertzog had given and it would carry out the undertakings as quickly as circumstances permitted."

At its recent conference held at Bloemfontein, the Federation of African Teachers' Association discussed the question of the various editions of the African National Anthem: Nkosi Sikelel'i Afrika, on the Market, and resolved that the edition of the anthem obtainable from the Lovedale Bookstore at 6d a copy be the recognized one. The Federation desires to call the attention of Churches, Education Departments, Schools, African organisations as well as Africans in general to this resolution which has been actuated by no other motive than that of preserving and maintaining the correct rendering of this national piece of music.

The Education Departments are specially requested to bring the above resolution to the notice of all their African Schools and even, as far as possible, to supply each of them with a copy of the abovementioned edition to teach to the children. Translations into languages other than Xhosa have been made. To this the Federation raises no objection as long as the recognised harmony is faithfully adhered to by all Africans in the different parts of the country.

The Federation also desires to bring to the notice of all concerned the importance of never forgetting the fact that Nkosi Sikelel'i Afrika (God Bless Africa) is our national prayer for divine benediction upon Africa, and as such ought to be sung with due reverence. Ministers, Teachers, Leaders and all who are in positions of authority are earnestly requested to use their influence in the direction of having this anthem rendered reverently at all gatherings at which it is deemed appropriate to sing it.

The following are the officers of the Federation of African Teachers' Associations: Messrs Z K. Matthews M.A., LL.B, President (Fort Hare) A E. Mpapele, Vice-President (Lemana), D.G Mtimkulu, M. A. Treasurer (Adams), and J. M. Nhlapo B.A. Secretary (Wilberforce

Replying to the Budget debate, the Minister in the first place fulfilled the duty of binding over his Government to the promise originally tendered by General Hertzog. Secondly, the Minister has by acknowledging this contract, thereby raised the status of the Native land purchase vote to that of "most urgent financial obligations" for future government Budgets. The position explained in the short reference of the Minister to this matter is accepted in good faith by the African population. The Minister's reply is worded as follows:-

"A sum of £1,000,000 had been provided for in the purchase of land for Natives in 1940-41. That money had not been spent and it was not proposed to make any provision for the year 1941-42. That money would not fall back to the Treasury. It was being invested in Treasury Bonds where it would earn interest and would thus be earmarked for the future. When General Hertzog had made his statement in 1936 about the purchase of land he had not contemplated the outbreak of war three years later. Circumstances made it impracticable to spend £10,000,000 in five years as originally contemplated, but in all other respects the Government regarded itself as bound by the pledge General Hertzog had given and it would carry out the undertakings as quickly as circumstances permitted."

Keep To The African Ways

By Peter Mosebi

Most Africans are now so used to European food that they forget or have forgotten that even Africans are able to make tasty meals of an entirely African type or origin. Before Africans became so "European minded," they were a people of high physical culture and good health. They owed this to the mealie or corn meal porridge supplemented by a variety of healthy wild vegetable foods.

Porridge or African bread were usually made from mealie or corn-meal. The mealies or corn were first soaked in water for a day or night. When the mealie is soft it is then ground by women and the meal is sifted out of all the chaff. A pot,—usually a big one,—is put on the fire until the water in it boils and some meal is added. The stirring is done after the meal has cooked for a while. When the porridge is ready, it is made into big balls and stored away in baskets. At each meal-time the women break off some pieces of the bread or porridge and mix it with fresh or liquid milk or Amasi. This is the African's staple food.

A detribalised or urbanised section of the Bantu race depends on buying meat from butchers but one who is still African by custom ,has got to hunt for spring-hares, hares, squirrels, Rock-rabbits, and birds for his meat; but there are substitutes where meat of wild animals is unobtainable. Roots of certain bushes were used. These are properly cooked and spiced with certain powders and salt. These are used in conjunction with the porridge. In order to vary the food, the monkey-nuts were ground and mixed with mealie meal to make a very tasty dish of porridge. Nuts of Morula tree fruit were ground and mixed with samp. All these used to form a good treat and a healthy diet.

Do you attach any importance to the names you give your children? We hear so many silly, foolish names these days among Africans who think that the aping of the European name is so much better than sticking to those used among their own people for hundreds of years. Yet actually there is no finer and more suitable way of naming an African than by using those names belonging to the race, and which are beautiful both in sound and meaning.

Names have great importance for their owners, in any work they may choose to do. Employers are often turned away from engaging a person who foolishly adopts a quite foreign and "high-sounding" name, whereas if that person bore a name that belonged to his own race he would receive better attention and greater respect.

People with awkward names are they realise that otherwise they would make little progress in life. Take Adolf Hitler, for instance. He changed his name from Schuecklgruber to Hitler! It was just as well he did, for can you imagine hundreds of people standing at attention with their arms raise in the Nazi salute to cry "Heil Schuecklgruber!" (Perhaps, considering how such a name might have discouraged him from climbing the ladder of fame, it is a pity he did change his name!)

Lenin, who found the Soviet Republic, and Stalin, the present dictator of that country, chose to be called Stalin instead of his real name Djugashvilli. In Hollywood, too, it is customary for the actors to change to names that would be more suitable for screen work, for naturally a plain "Mary Jane" or "John Smith" would not seem nearly as attractive to the romantic-minded public.

So consider when you name your next child. He or she is destined for life as an African and not as a European, and even if the child makes a mark in the world as a great person, a European name would still prove unsuitable. Keep to African names for Africans!

Four Axis Airfields Are Heavily Bombed—Imperial Troops Push On in East Africa

MAY 7 - 1941

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, May 5 (Delayed) (AP)—Haile Selassie returned to his throne today, just five years and three days after the Italians drove him into exile from this capital.

MAY 7 - 1941

The Emperor was met on the outskirts of the city by his sons, Crown Prince Asfaou Wassen and the Duke of Harar, and by General Alan C. Cunningham, commander of the British troops that took Addis Ababa from the Italians.

Thousands of natives, afoot, astride gayly bedecked mules or hanging from windows, waved flags and cried out joyously as their Emperor rode through the streets.

His eyes flashing with emotion, Haile Selassie went to the grand gibbi, the royal palace, where he gave audience to British officers and native chieftains.

Italians remaining in the city kept to the security of their homes.

Library Facilities For Africans

To-day we venture upon a subject that is of the greatest interest to thousands of our members, both in urban as well as in rural areas. We refer to the question of Library facilities for Africans in Natal. We need libraries very much in Natal, and in Durban in particular.

Some years ago, the Carnegie Corporation started a library for non-Europeans along the Reef. Reports reveal that the scheme is becoming extremely successful and the African community show unprecedented zeal for reading. It is not a mere eagerness to be able to hold a newspaper in one's hand on a warm summer evening that makes Africans such reading-enthusiasts. The African is rapidly realising the importance and utility of a trained and informed mind. As is well known, his colour makes it extremely difficult for him to gain access to public libraries Books are sold at a discouragingly prohibitive price as far as the African's purse is concerned. And whilst we may be quick to criticise our day-school teachers in town and country schools for not reading much, we would not be unwise to bear in mind always the fact that the acquisition of a book is often a feat that leaves an African's purse not unstrained.

All fair-minded people, who work for the true good of the African, agree that the Africans on their part have to fight illiteracy. We are already making efforts to fight it—as witness the enthusiasm with which we take to Night Schools. You find people of our colour who are grandfathers of men with their own children—hurrying to night-schools with slates in hand almost every evening in Durban. Only, we do not have enough equipment for the teaching in larger numbers of these people. These all want to learn and to know what the outside world is like.

There are also hundreds of our educated men and women who would greatly welcome the opportunity for reading provided by the creation in Natal of a travelling Library. Some are preparing themselves for higher examinations, whilst others wish to possess more informed minds. Natal is a small province and it can be easily covered by such a library whose headquarters would of course be in Durban.

Our large schools periodically get issues of books from the Carnegie library—but these cover such a limited field that the eagerness with which they are read justifies our saying that Natal has need for a travelling library for her Bantu community. We need books, we need a good library, we have the enthusiasm and eagerness to read.

One great advantage with a travelling library is that it would extend its services even to the remotest corners of Natal and country schools and teachers would thereby benefit immensely. Apart from whiling away time on dull Sundays and Saturdays when preparations for school work have been done, such libraries would make Natal have more efficient, more informed and therefore better teachers and leaders of the community. We would hear less and less of Bantu teachers "degenerating." Instead we would hear more and more of the excellent work that our teachers would do. We would even have better examination results, better pupils and better members of the community.

The education of all sections of the South African community and the elimination of illiteracy, are in the common interest of all of us—irrespective of our racial extraction. For this reason those who interest themselves in Bantu welfare would be rendering the African community a priceless service by providing facilities of this nature. Would such a service be too much for the Carnegie Trust together with Bantu Welfare Trust? Social services of this nature are very necessary—urgently so in Natal. Together with a policy of improved Health and Welfare services we must provide recreational as well as reading facilities for our African community. We would like to hear what our readers think of this idea.

SOUTH AFRICAN FINED FOR BATHING ON "WHITE" BEACH

Cape Town, South Africa, (ANP)—While Great Britain is ostensibly fighting a war in behalf of democracy, discrimination and segregation are still the order of the day in her South African colonies. Recently Dan Kareise, a young native, was fined five shillings, or five days' imprisonment, for bathing on a part of the ocean front that had been reserved for Europeans.

The judge, in passing sentence, said, that he was acting in accordance with the laws as approved by both houses of parliament which "must have given due consideration to the regulations, and it is not the function of the court to say that they had acted in an unreasonable way."

FELIX EBOUE: IT COULDN'T HAPPEN HERE

FEB 15 1941

American newspapers last week blossomed out with articles and editorials praising General Felix Eboue, Governor of Chad Province, for his courage in aligning Central Africa with the regime of the French General DeGaulle, which is aiding the Allies.

Never before has the American press been so unanimous in praise of a Negro.

The reason for this front-page presentation is obvious: the world struggle between capitalism and socialism, which is disguised as a struggle between democracy and dictatorship, is a crucial one, and General Eboue has sided with the the socio-economic order which this country is defending.

But in all the articles and editorials, patently designed to swing Negro opinion definitely to the side of England and the United States in the current world struggle, nothing has been said of the fact that in neither empire as constituted, could a General Eboue rise.

Both England and the United States have worked assiduously to keep colored subjects and citizens from being equals and taking their places as such.

Both countries have set their faces against Negro officers in their armies, navies and diplomatic corps, and Britain has been more adamant than the United States.

General Felix Eboue went to the best academic and military schools France afforded, and won his way to high positions under the French Republic, first as Governor of Guadeloupe and later as Governor-General of the Chad Province.

No one can imagine England making a Negro a general and appointing him to the Governorship of Malta or Gibraltar or Hong Kong or Jamaica.

No one can imagine the United States appointing General Davis to the governorship of Puerto Rico or the Philippines.

Consequently in neither empire would it be possible for a Negro to duplicate the exploit of General Eboue.

But times change, especially in periods of crisis, and before this war is over, we are apt to see Negroes holding all sorts of positions under the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes.

Those who control the wealth and power in the British Empire and the United States will do everything to win the struggle against the Axis, even if it is necessary to appoint Negroes to the highest positions within their gift.

A Felix Eboue could not happen in the two countries as we know them.

But a Felix Eboue, and many like him, will happen in these two countries as we SHALL know them.

In fighting for democracy they will be forced to extend democracy even to the despised people of color.

The Police And The Africans

In the Senate the other day Senator W. F. Welsh asked the Minister of Justice "whether his attention ha been drawn to a report that in a case in the Johannesburg Magistrate's Court in which three policemen were acquitted on a charge of culpable homicide, arising from a Native death, the prosecutor had said that he was "sick and tired" of hearing cases in which Natives alleged assaults by the police who arrested them." The Minister replied that the prosecutor was called upon for an explanation and has admitted that his remarks were unfortunate and indiscreet.

From the Minister's answer it would seem that because the majority of policemen who had been charged for assaulting Africans are often acquitted, the allegations of assaults, therefore, are only made where there is no defence on the merits." We would like to point out to the Minister that the majority of our people, who come into daily contact with the Police in their search for liquor and in their administration of the pass laws and other restrictive regulations, are ignorant and are, therefore, incapable of formulating and presenting evidence in a manner that will secure conviction. It does not seem to us that the failure of the complainants to establish the guilt of the 54 policemen who were alleged to have assaulted them in 1940, really means that assaults by Policemen on Africans do not take place. This failure in the majority of cases is due, as we have already said, to ignorance.

Let us be clearly understood. We do not for a moment suggest that the whole of the police force consists of men who believe in taking the law in their own hands when dealing with Africans. The police in this country are placed in a position which make it difficult for them to humanise their relations with Africans. They are required to put into operation harsh and repressive laws, and they cannot do this without becoming harsh and intolerant and without causing resentment among the African people.

In their search for liquor, the police enter the homes of the Africans in the early hours of the morning and after upsetting everything in these homes, they start demanding passes and pou tax receipts in an atmosphere charged with resentment and antagonism. This naturally leads to a great deal of misunderstanding which invariably results in the police enforcing their authority. So long as there are restrictive laws enforced against Africans there can be no change in the arrogant attitude of the police towards the Africans and the insolent behaviour of the Africans towards the police. When men are treated like beasts they cannot but behave like beasts. This is a fact which cannot be ignored by Then there is a certain type of policeman who think that his duty is to uphold the prestige of the white race by assaulting Africans. Recently a well known African medical practitioner was assaulted by a constable who told him to always remember that he was black. Another case is that of a policeman who assaulted a blackman because the latter reported a white man with whom he had a dispute over a pound. Both these constables were convicted and fined £5 and £3 respectively.

Because the police have not got laws which send them after the Coloured and Indian communities their relations with these sections of the population are much better and the result is that we hardly hear of assaults on members of these racial groups. And it is our firm belief that if there were no harsh and restrictive laws operating against Africans, there would be hardly any antagonism between the police and our people. There is no getting away from the fact that Africans rightly or wrongly regard the police not as guardians of law and order but as the disturbers of their peace.

Thanks to the Italians we have better communications; on the contrary, the Italians had to face a force little above the standard of tribal levies, whereas we have defeated an army as well equipped as our own. Removal of White Teacher Sought

Replacement by Negro Is Main Objective

LEXINGTON, Ky—(ANP)—The initial step in what presages even greater developments that may end in court fights was taken here when petition signed by more than 500 Negro men and women was presented to the board of education asking the removal of Mrs. Harriet Williams, a white coordinating teacher employed at the Dunbar Trade School, an adjunct to Dunbar High School. The petition was drawn up by a committee of parents of Dunbar High.

The petition said in part: "The Lexington public school system is a dual educational system to all intents and purposes, providing separate buildings, housing Negro children in one set and white children in another; using white teachers to instruct white children, and Negro teachers to instruct Negro children, except in one instance: a white woman is employed in the Dunbar Trade school as a coordinator. It is our opinion that the employment of a white teacher in a Negro school is contrary to the general educational policies in this community, and further, that such a procedure creates situations."

One of the main situations described in the petition was that "the use of a white worker prevents another trained Negro from obtaining employment."

Mrs. Williams has been a member of the school staff for about two years, but it was not learned whether or not her appointment was regarded as temporary, or whether or not at any time the board of education had contemplated her replacement with a qualified Negro.

In a letter to the superintendent, the committee of parents stated that the movement for the removal of Mrs. Williams was launched "not out of prejudice for the lady, but as a result of the general social and educational policies."

The Negro schools years ago have been under the supervision of Negroes, but more recently white teachers have exercised this function. Under the Negro regime, whereas the principal of the high school acted as supervisor, now the Negro schools have three white supervisors working in the elementary, high school, and trade department. The petition seeks to focus public attention upon the situation as it now exists. The very spirit of the Kentucy educational lay itself calls for Negro teachers for Negro children.

This effort will eventually lead to a strong and united demand on the part of Lexington citizenry for an equalization on all teachers' salaries here with our regard to race, a condition which now exists with disparaging comparisons. Civic organizations and parent-teacher groups have taken cognizance of the signal victory along this line recently won by the Louisville teachers, and have signified their intention to carry the struggle to a successful conclusion.

PRINCES, CHIEFS RENEW LOYALTY TO HAILE SELASSIE

Emperor Prepares to Reenter Capital.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, Aprill 11—[Delayed.]—Thousands of Ethiopians, with their shamas wrapped about them, watched today as princes and chieftains prostrated themselves before Haile Selassie and protested their allegiance to the emperor at his headquarters about 100 miles from this capital city.

Wearing the khaki uniform of an Ethiopian field marshall, Selassie sat at the top of a flight of steps overlooking his headquarters courtyard. From a mast fluttered the green, yellow, and red royal standard of the lion of Judah, which bears Selassie's title of "king of kings."

In the courtyard hundreds of native warriors wearing talian uniforms waited to offer themselves to the service of the emperor.

From time to time the emperor used field glasses to study the approach of some of the 6,000 men who were snaking their way across a plain hundreds of feet below the town.

Raise Rifles Aloft.

The men scrambled up a hill to the town already crammed with armed warriors, rushed forward with rifles raised aloft, and threw themselves at Selassie's feet, crying that they were loyal to him and boasting of deeds done against the Italians.

"Each day they come to ask pardon," Selassie said. "I forgive them for I have great confidence even in the loyalty of those who once betrayed me."

When all 6,000 men had reached the town and prostrated themselves before the emperor. Coptic priests, wearing yellow turbans and walking beneath red umbrellas held a religious service.

APR 14 1941

War drums had throbbed thru this town yesterday when the news was spread that the emperor's heir, Crown Prince Asfa Wosan, had entered Ethiopa again.

Trek Thru Sudan Desert.

The crown prince and his younger brother joined their father as a special mission of British officers journeyed toward Addis Ababa, which their troops recently captured from the Italians. The princes with a small suite trekked thru the blistering heat of the Sudan desert to reach their father's headquarters.

The British mission preserved tradition even while in the wild country. An old Etonian captain, who will administer the courts of Addis Ababa, had his native servant lay out fresh clothes for dinner after his evening bath in the Blue Nile river.

Piles of stores surrounded the adjoining camps of the British mission and the Ethiopian princes. The biggest case contained theemperor's ornate saddle on which he may soon ride into Addis Ababa.

Negus Among His People.

FEB 22 1941

An interesting reported the Emperor about the Emperor of Abyssinia appears in the daily papers that he had recently made, what is described by the reporter as, a triumphal tour of his country. The report makes interesting reading when it has to be remembered that until lately he had fled from this country which had been invaded by Mussolini, without even declaring war, with the object of expanding Italian African empire. At the time Mussolini's war cry was to civilize Abyssinia which he contended still carried on slave trade To day the Italians are being pursued out of Abyssinia and their former colonies by the British troops assisted by the patriotic bands of Ethiopians. Here goes the report:

Haile Selassie has just completed a triumphal tour of the highlands of Abyssinia, writes Reuter's special correspondent with the patriot army in Abyssinia.

Bands of armed Abyssinians took a few days leave from fighting to greet the Emperor as he approached the end of his journey, prostrating themselves before his horse and kissing the royal foot, according to the Ethopian custom. The Emperor displayed splendid endurance throughout his arduous trip The cavalcade was led for a time by Bishop Glogis, clad in long black robes and carrying an umbrella in one hand and a gold cross in the other. Every morning as the party set out on its day's travel the bishop blessed the Emperor.

FEB 22 1941

Whole villages rushed out to greet the Emperor, proffering native beer and produce. After being informed of the British advance on Kerei the Emperor expressed his admiration for the British commander and troops and said that he hoped his own soldiers would emulate their example.

The Governor and the Principal of Moroka Training Institution welcomed.

The progr ss of the Moroka Institution is phenomenal

An appreciative function which was attended by a representative gathering, took place at the Moroka Institution on the evening of February 18, when the Governor (Rev. L. Treror Sadler) and Mrs Sadler, the Principal (Mr. J. T. Heynes) and Mrs Heynes were welcomed by the staff and the Barolong.

Chief W. Z. Fenyang, the Acting Paramount Chief, presided. Introducing the guests the Chief spoke of the good work done by Mr Sadler during the past seven years in Mafeking and referred to the progress of the school and hospital under the guidance of the missionaries, who had to surmount almost impossible difficulties. He extended a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs Heynes who hail from Healdtown.

Dr. J. S. Moroka, who was the next speaker expressed joy to welcome the new chiefs, and then related the history of the Methodist Mission to the Barolong, when they trekked with the missionaries from Matlwasi under Old Chief Moroka and established the first mission station in the Free State. He recalled the help the Barolong extended to the Europeans during the convulsions which followed at Mosega and Marikwa. "The progress of the Moroka Institution compared with that of other Native Institutions in the Union is phenomenal, said Dr. Moroka

Other speakers were Rev. Mr. Isaac Tau, representing the Anglican community, Messrs E. Lekhele, Schoeman and Sam Seane.

In reply Mr Sadler thanked the audience for their kind and spontaneous reception. He touched on the early work of the missionaries among the Barolong, especially that of Dr. Lüdorff whose itinerary included Moshaneng in Bechuanaland.

Mr Heynes who associated himself with the remarks of the last speaker stressed the development of character, intellect and physique among the Bantu and hoped that with the co-operation of the staff and the students the progress of the school will be maintained.

Rev. T. Matebese interpreted the proceedings and the two school choirs conducted by Messrs Ben R. and W. Sefelo sang

MAR 29 1941

European and Bantu songs. Among the visitors were Dr. and Mrs Bokwe of Middledrift and Miss James, matron of the Lovedale Hospital.

THE ITALO-ETHIOPIAN CONFLICT

WEEKLY NEWS

REPARATION—RESTITUTION AND RETRIBUTION.

MAR 15 1941

REVIEW

In keeping with what we regard as a Divine Mission, Great Britain has found herself as the efficient Instrument to right the wrongs committed by Italy with the connivance of all the civilised Nations of Europe when Mussolini undertook to launch his campaign of wanton and unprovoked aggression against the African State of Ethiopia, hurled a brutal attack against it and when it was found that this had met with stiff resistance made short work of the plunder by the introduction of mustard gas and modern tanks which became too much of what the Ethiopian soldiers were able to endure with the result of a temporary defeat. Thus the Emperor Haile Selassie was driven from his Kingdom in the midst of Italian hooting and jeerings; but Great Britain was quick to recognise the wrong, although for diplomatic reason she became dumb. when she should have been most eloquent. Nevertheless she provided an asylum for the fugitive Emperor who was quite confident that their wrongs would in the course of time be righted. After five years of patient waiting the hour for action was struck and the indomitable Emperor left his exile home and in a R.A.F. bomber he flew from Khartoum escorted by fighters; once more in his territory he resolved to take the lead of his troops and fight for the emancipation of his Country and people. Meanwhile for quite six months Great Britain had undertaken to train some Ethiopian warriors in the use of modern armaments.

Four hundred miles within the borders of Abyssinia a handful of British officers and N.C.O. had undertaken to take in hand those who have been known as patriots and prepare them to resist the Italians, training them in the use of modern firearms. Also in the mountainous region north of Lake Tana, two British officers assisted by Sudanese were at work mostly by night laying traps for the Italians by setting land mines on the main roads used by Italian mechanised columns. Thus the patriot warriors have fanned into a big flame the revolt which began since the conquest, five years ago, and with the presence of the Emperor they have been inspired to leave no stone unturned until they have wrested from the grip of the aggressor every portion of the land of their fathers. For the seven months, Mussolini has thrust his avaricious self into the war, he has made sufficient reparation for the wrongs done to Ethiopia, and by the nature of his defeat leaving valuable armaments and munitions of war, he has perforce made ample restitution for his robbery of Abyssinian possessions; whilst his conscience if it is still functioning will bring home to his guilty soul that the law of retribution still rules the Affairs of Men and none can escape the just consequence of their rapacious infringement. There is every prospect of a continuous advance until the Italians are quite wiped out of their stolen property. We quote from the Information Officer's Bulletin of 3rd March. "In Abyssinia the patriots are doing well and Imperial forces have penetrated Abyssinia at twelve different points. It will be however no easy matter to complete the conquest of the hilly country in the heart of Abyssinia."

It was just as well he did, for can you imagine hundreds of people standing at attention with their arms raise in the Nazi salute to cry "Heil Schueckl(gruber!" (Perhaps, considering how such a name might have discouraged him from climbing the ladder of fame, it is a pity he did change his name!)

Lenin, who found the Soviet Republic in Russia, also changed his name from Ulianov, while Stalin, the present dictator of that country, chose to be called Stalin instead of his real name Djugashvilli. In Hollywood, too, it is customary for the actors to change to names that would be more suitable for screen work, for naturally a plain "Mary Jane" or "John Smith" would not seem nearly as attractive to the romantic-minded public.

So consider when you name your next child. He or she is destined for life as an African and not as a European, and even if the child makes a mark in the world as a great person, a European name would still prove unsuitable. Keep to African names for Africans!

APR 1 - 1941

The representatives in Parliament of the Native people are to be congratulated on the determined opposition they have made to the passing of the Factories, Machinery and Building Work Bill, which Mr. Madeley, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, has been hurriedly piloting through Parliament in recent days. This Bill has some good features and White Trade Unionists have strongly backed it, but a clause in it gave the Minister powers to discriminate between different classes of workers which he claimed were not "segregation proposals" but which others claimed were much the same thing. Mr. Molteno (Native Representative), said that Mrs. Ballinger and he had supported the Government on the war issue, and intended to continue doing so. There was no question of the Government losing two of its supporters. But a clause had been tacked on to the end of the Bill—a Bill which otherwise Mrs. Ballinger and he regarded as admirable—giving power of discrimination against those they represented in the House. The Native Representatives had felt they should have an opportunity of proposing modifications or alterations, and if the Government was prepared to give them an opportunity for making these proposals they would not complain. That opportunity was not to be given apparently, and therefore they must oppose the motion. They felt that what was proposed in the Bill was not what the country needed in war time, and they would have tried to persuade the Government not to commit this folly.

Towards A United West Africa?

The Gold Coast in the Forefront

THE Gold Coast community does not need to be told that its country has innumerable friends and admirers in Great Britain. If, although innumerable there are still not a tithe of the population of the British Isles, this is only because it is still really very little that the average person in any country knows about the life and character of other people even in the continent in which he lives let alone countries under other skies and thousands of miles away. Not only does "wisdom linger" but even our acquaintance with each other Political Britain, at least that section of it, happily growing, which gives some part of its time and interest to wonderful West Africa, has (without disparagement of the other three Coast Colonies) a special though for the Gold Coast Africans, as the people whose delegates years ago talked plump and plain with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain when a law was proposed which would have shaken their hold of their own lands, and go from him as Colonial Secretary a reply equally plump and plain, that the proposal would be dropped; and further as the people one of whom fired the first shot against the Germans in the Great War That same section in Britain has been gratified though not surprised to learn from the East African dispatches during the first few weeks that examples of courage and resourcefulness by Gold Coast Africans have greatly impressed others, such as the Rhodesians and the South Africans, engaged with them in the campaign against Mussolini's forces. From the standpoint of the future of politically independent and politically dependent Africa, it is highly satisfactory that people representing each should acquire, under the stern test of war, mutual understanding and respect.

Friends of the Gold Coast in Britain would show poor appreciation of the marked individuality of the Africans of the Colony if they dreamed of intervention in their public affairs. They thoroughly realize that the Africans must develop in their own way at their own pace. They rejoice, however at the increasing evidence of the extension of free institutions, such as the Native Administrations and Treasuries; and now they will hail with pleasure the news that the amalgamation of the State which constitute the Gold Coast is becoming more and more a matter of responsible discussion

Gold Coast—Nigeria Contrast

Whether Nigeria, with its census population of about 20,000,000 (the real figure is probably about a couple of millions more) about seven times that of the Gold Coast, has as many natural sub-divisions as, or even more than, the Gold Coast one could not say without exact knowledge not possessed by the present writer; but if one is to go by the number of Provinces—probably arranged on a racial or tribal basis meant to be fair and reasonable—the larger country has only about one-third of the equivalent of the Gold Coast States, approaching the third dozen. The mere naming of them must surely be in the schools of West Africa, perhaps those even of the Gold Coast, quick-witted though its children are a memory test about equalling that which the average Briton faces when he tries to name the States, Territories and Districts of the United States.

It is not for communities in Europe with their own miserable failures to act unitedly as a League of Nations or even to get together against ruffian gangs such as Hitler's and Mussolini's to affect towards the Gold Coast a superior attitude on account of the largeness of its number of separate States; but perhaps an individual well-wisher of a remarkable country (which when ever a United West Africa may come about seems destined to supply its capital) may be allowed the reflection that the greater the total of separate States the more remote the unity which connotes strength.

The Gold Coast Africans have never lacked far-seeing leaders who have perceived this truth, and at more than one stage of the country's political development there has been a substantial movement having for its object not indeed an amalgamation but a federation of the States. Unfortunately perhaps because of their mental quickness and their individuality Gold Coast Africans have not had due appreciation at the hands of several British Governors, though others such as Guggisberg and Clifford, have almost instantly understood them and with immense and infectious enthusiasm have hastened to draw out their innate powers.

Thanks to the intellectual poverty of at least a couple of the misfit Governors the movement was thrust back; but one is glad to find from recently published minutes of a session which occupied about a fortnight—that it is now again to the fore, as in the nature of things it had to be.

Noteworthy Speech.

Presumably, it owed its inclusion in the agenda to one of the African members but it was made the occasion of some remarks by the Commissioner of the Province Mr. A. F. E. Fiedgate, an unobtrusive but experi and able public servant of the Colony which deserve special consideration at this time Mr. Fieldgate may have had in his mind the indifferent performances of the two Governors above referred to; and on that account may have spoken with the earnestness and directness which he used. One sentence is particularly noteworthy:— "If you are to have an effective local Government amalgamation must come." "Unity" or federation would perhaps have been a happier word than amalgamation but the sentiment is unexceptionable.

Mr. Fieldgate enlarged upon the text with telling effect. In the Central Province alone he pointed out there are 29 independent States. 'To be an effective unit exercising local government', he went on each of these 29 would have to have the same officers. You would have to have your treasurer your police your clerks your everything else and small States cannot take on these responsibilities in the same way as the larger ones can because they have not the money to do so. The matter is one to which you must give serious consideration.

Surely this is the language of truth and common sense, and the counsel of a friend! Surely also the serious consideration should not be confined to the African communities of the Gold Coast among the British West African Colonies! Surely one can without great effort of the imagination apply Mr. Fieldgate's words about all the separate official establishments not to a Province or the whole of the Gold Coast, but to all British West Africa! The African political leaders may be reminded of one thing in particular: Mr. Fieldgate, in arguing against the costly multiplication of services, is really arguing against an increase in the total of imported officials and even against the maintenance of the present total. This of course is not the main point which is the good government of the people as economically as possible and helping in their progress but it is a point of importance.

Mr. Fieldgate has given British West Africa as a whole and all on this side of the water who are concerned for its strength and welfare something to think about very seriously in these days of shrinking trade and revenu and the necessity to get the last possible result from every shilling of public expenditure.

The South African Institute Of Race Relations

While the air is everywhere full of schemes and efforts to stabilize andsecure the European section of the country's population in urban and rural areas it is gratifying to know that there is in the Union an organization which is engaged in the improvement of Bantu conditions throughout the Union. We refer to the Race Relations Institute whose headquarters are in Johannesburg. This organization has given to itself and undertakes the thankless duties of seeing to it that as far as Africans are concerned they shall be allowed scope for development in the cities as well as in the rural areas. We view this as a thankless task in that the majority of Europeans are out only for their own expansion and stabilization in this country. Such undertakings as seeking aveanues for the uplift of Africans and opposing measures which are meant to make slaves of Africans in everything but in name are generally not the concern of most European citizens.

It is, therefore, a valuable service on the part of this organization which interests itself in matters that are for the present and future good of our people. They are the very salt of the Earth shedding light on affairs which do not perturb the ordinary European citizen. Already the Institute has justified its existence in many laudable efforts which prove that they are bent on nothing but the improvement of our people's condition in the cities and in labour organizations. The Institute interests itself in matters in which the African himself cannot hope to steer his way successfully.

The latest annual report, the eleventh, reiterates the fact that it is not, and has never been a political organization for the reason that it would be viewed as an antagonistic organization and naturally to be opposed on all sides as out for "spoiling their Natives." It occupies itself with such matters as tend to secure to the privileged classes all the good things and these to be denied to the aboriginal sons of the soil. Theirs are virtual missionary activities making it of more value in that it is voluntary—not improved upon their hearts by others. Theirs may be a thankless task as it is not always and everywhere appreciated as it should be, but in spite of that fact, this body is the salt of the Earth. It reconciles the ruling race of the duty of viewing the ruled ones from a humanitarian point of view.

Native Farm Labour

In its eleventh annual report for 1940 the South African Institute of Race Relations observes that the report of the Committee on Native Farm Labour, appointed by the Minister of Native Affairs in 1937, was published in 1939. It is noteworthy that the members of the Committee did not visit farms but received representatives from farmers, farm workers and others interested, at numerous urban centres. The publication of the Report has not made any less desirable the investigations into actual conditions on the farms, as planned by the Institute before the Committee was appointed. The Institute's report on the farm conditions in the Orange Free State is being followed up by plans for a fuller study in the Transvaal. This investigation will be commenced before the end of of 1940. Special attention will be given to social conditions, such as housing, health services, school facilities for children, and their influence upon the migration of farm labour into the towns. The Report of the Native Farm Labour Committee shows that improvements in wage conditions alone will not be sufficient to encourage farm workers to remain on the farms, and the investigation now being arranged should result in further proposals likely to help the agricultural industry to retain its labour. It has been entrusted to Mrs. Rheinallt Jones, to whom has been handed the grant of £200 which was recieved for the purpose two years ago from Captain G. Thwaites, a member of the Institute.

During the year, increasing evidence has been received from the rural towns that aged and infirm Africans who cannot supply the labour of members of their families as workers on the farms, are being turned away. They seek shelter in the near-by small towns, where the Municipalities are unwilling to allow them to settle in the Native locations. This growing probem will be covered in the investigation.

African Women Dominate Husband In One of Largest Tribes on Dark Continent

Feminine Control of Food Supply Often Brings the Lord and Master to His Knees

'Sitting on a Man' Usually Does The Job

COLUMBUS.—(ANP)—As proof that "brains are mightier than brawn," the women in one of Africa's largest tribes have found ways to completely dominate the males by a new form of "passive resistance," according to Dr. Jack Harris, sociology instructor at Ohio State university. Dr. Harris recently returned from a 14-month study of the Ibo tribe in Nigeria, West Africa, with its population of 4,000,0 0.

Although the men display all the outward vestiges of authority, wearing the crowns, and passing the laws, the women, says Dr. Harris, by their control of the food supply, exercise supreme veto power. When a husband proves a little difficult, his food supply is cut in half, as soon as his hunger pains become acute, he is amenable to reason.

The tribal women have other ways of gaining their ends, including ridicule, strikes, boycotts and curses. One incident reported by Dr. Harris happened when the women found a rule adopted by the men not to their liking. The entire feminine population left the village, taking all the children, with the exception of babies in the nursing stage. For a day and a half the men fed the crying infants, cooked, carried water, brought in firewood and performed the other tasks usually allocated to women, before being brought to their knees. To the victors they gave goats as peace offerings, and formal and informal apologies.

Another quaint custom known as "sitting on a man" was witnessed by the Ohio State professor. If a man offends a group of women they march in body to his compound and remain to sing songs of ridicule until he apologizes.

The marriage customs of the Iobes provide that girls promised in marriage while still infants, become wives when the final installment is paid by the prospective husbands. The men contract to pay anywhere from $10 to $50 for a wife. Because a husband is unwilling to loss his investment, he tries hard to please his wife or wives as the case may be, since many of them have as many as [illegible]. Women who are displeased by their husbands leave and refuse to return,, charging mistreatment. However, if she remaries the former husband receives full repayment on his investment.

Training of African Nurses in Basutoland.

The First Product of the Project.

THURSDAY the 3rd April will be marked as a red letter day in the annals of the Government Hospital at Maseru. A pleasant little function was performed here at 11 a.m. amidst a select group of the senior officials of the Administration and a few friends and others, among whom were His Honour Sir Edmund Richards, Resident Commissioner of Basutoland, Lady Richards, Captain D. W. How, Deputy Resident Commissioner, Mr. O B. Bull, Director of Education; Dr H. W. Dyke, Principal Medical Officer and Mrs Dyke, Dr. Witworth M.O., Sister Pain, acting Matron, the Nursing staff, and African probationers nurses, Mr. Chapman, Superintendent of the Native Recruiting Corporation in the Territory, Mr M.N. Tlale, Editor Mochochonono, Mr R. Motsamai, Mrs M. Motsamai, Mrs Jankie, Mrs Pitso and a few other African women, when two probationer African nurses, viz, Victorina Motsamai and Vivian Mohai, the first to complete their training in general nursing and midwifery since the project of training African girls as nurses was undertaken in Basutoland, had the honour of being presented with their certificates.

This function took place in a peculiarly shaped but snug little room which at present boasts of being the Dining Hall for the probationer nurses and which had been daintily decorated for the occasion. When the gathering had assembled and the visitors taken their seats while the Medical and nursing staff remained on their feet, except the two recipients of the treasured certificates, Sir Edmund and Lady Richards who were accompanied by Captain How, Mr Bull, Mrs Dyke were shown in by Dr Dyke and were received with due respect and humility by those inside which they acknowledged by bowing to the audience before taking their front seats.

The proceedings were opened by Dr Dyke, Principal Medical Officer who delivered the following interesting and encouraging address:

We are gathered here for the presentation of Midwifery Certificates to nurses Victorina Motsamai and Vivian Mohai.

The training of Basuto girls as nurses commenced at the end of 1936 and the first group of probationer nurses that started training completed their general nursing at the end of 1939, and after passing their final examination were presented with their certificates. For the past year these two have had midwifery training and in their final examination Victorina obtained a first class pass with 78% of the total marks and Vivian passed with 58%. During the four years of their probationership they worked satisfactorily and their conduct was very good and above that they were reliable and trustworthy. The ceremony of presentation therefore marks a milestone in the development of the Basuto and he was glad that the Resident Commissioner, Lady Richards and friends honoured it with their presence.

The project of training African nurses in Basutoland is in a great measure due to the initiative and efforts of Sir Herbert Stanley, then High Commissioner for Basutoland, Bechuanaland Protectorate and Swaziland He obtained a very substantial grant from the Chamber of Mines for the High Commission Territories and Basutoland received a pro rata share of it and has used the money in providing the accommodation, midwifery facilities, equipment and salaries of the staff and probationers. He was glad that Mr Chapman Native Recruiting Corporation representative in Basutoland was there with them.

The training of probationer nurses entailed much patient work on the part of the Medical and Nursing staff In this connection thanks were due to all the European Sisters, put in particular to Miss Wilson who, unfortunately, owing to ill-health was absent, Miss Pain. Dr. Young who also was unable to be present was a systematic recturer in midwifery.

After His Honour Sir Edmund had congratulated the two successful nurses and passed a few words of encouragement to the probationers still in course of training, Lady Richards presented the certificates after they were read aloud to the audience.

THOUGHT FOR THE AFRICANS

APR 5 - 1941

Thousands and thousands of Africans work on the gold and coal mines, and you will be glad to learn that the authorities do all in their power to prevent accidents. The Africans know this: They see for themselves what care the white man takes in order that accidents shall be avoided.

APR 5 - 1941

Accidents are serious; nobody wants them; everybody wishes there were no accidents at all, and in 1913 the Prevention of Accidents Committee set to work to impress upon all mine workers, that for their own sakes they must not allow accidents to happen if it were possible to prevent them. Warnings were put up and pictures were shown, teaching the vital importance of carefulness.

SAFETY FIRST became a motto, and it is not a selfish motto so far as the Mines are concerned. It means taking care, using one's eyes, and being thoughtful not only for one's own sake but also for that of others. The result is the accidents on the Mines have for years been fewer and fewer.

Everything reasonably possible is done to prevent accidents on the Mines. The managements, the officials, and the whole of the staffs co-operate in order to ensure safety for the workers; and encouragement and support in these matters is given by the Government's Department of Mines, by the Native Labour Organisations of the Transvaal Chamber of Mines, and by the Prevention of Accidents Committee.

Because of the care thus taken, the Mine workers go about their work, and do it, with confidence.

The Farming Situation In Africa

MAY 24 1941

Editor, Journal and Guide:

Pausing for a moment to evade the barrage of war propaganda which is being poured upon the American people from European sources, let us consider the benefits which may be reaped by our race from a conscientious contemplation of the gigantic problem of developing the African interior hinterland.

Down in the Belgian Congo region, climatic conditions are exceedingly favorable for the support of large scale agricultural production. At present, a large percentage of the Congo land area is overrun by dense tropical vegetation of the vine infested jungle variety. However in the vicinity of Leopoldville, certain limited portions of cleared acreage have been harnessed down to standard farm production.

For the American Negro, such an outlook is very encouraging. Even in the far Western section of the United States, frontier life has practically gone out of existence. Undeveloped farm land is becoming scarce and there are few forested areas available for emergency economic consumption, with the exception of the large wooded tracts devoted to use as national parks.

The center of our cattle raising industry has shifted to South America. In the Southeastern section where most of our group live, practically all available farming areas are already under cultivation. Cotton and tobacco, which are the chief crops, are raised extensively. However, were it not for the regular use of synthetic fertilization, on a large scale, American Negro farmers would soon find themselves so seriously embarrassed financially, that the annual responsibility of their aggregate domestic obligations could not be met.

As the case now stands the masses of our group labor in the agricultural field under extremely unsatisfactory conditions. It is only just and fitting that whatever solution of our problem which promises to bring about a full and profitable victory for the Race, in the end, should be duly considered and if necessary, adopted.

The entire continent of Africa, with the exception of Egypt, Ethiopia, and Cape Colony, is more or less only partially developed, with regard to mass agricultural fertilization is practically unknown. So rich in plant food is the soil that potatoes of the Porto Rican variety may be cultivated over a period of seven years without replanting. After digging sweet potatoes the Liberian farmer merely throws sufficient soil over the living vines to cover them completely, and the following year a new crop of potatoes automatically springs up from the vines which have been covered up in the preceding summer and autumn.

We Americans are inclined to be a very practical-minded people and do not believe every romantic and fictitious story we hear such as the story of Ponce De Leon and his search for a mystical fountain of youth.

In order that there may be no modern-day Ponce De Leons among my readers, permit me to suggest that all persons interested in reliable data concerning the African agricultural situation merely write to the Liberian State Board of Information, Monrovia, Liberia, requesting any information desired. Postage rates for a letter to Africa cost only a few cents. If wide awake American Negroes are ever going to ferret out foolproof plans for bettering the economic and social lot of our group, it is high time we set about doing it.

The Africa of today is not the Africa of 1899. The light of European culture and Christianity are already firmly established in many provinces. Many large and prosperous cities flourish in all parts of the land. If the need should ever arise wherein the Negro people of America should be forced by unforeseen circumstances to change their sphere of habitation, it will be wisdom on our part to give Africa, and Liberia especially, first consideration.

The African National Anthem

APR 12 1941

REVERENT AND CORRECT RENDERING

Sir,

At its recent conference held at Bloemfontein, the Federation of African Teachers' Association discussed the question of the various editions of the African National Anthem: "Nkosi Sikelel' i-Afrika", on the market, and resolved that the edition of the anthem obtainable from the Lovedale Bookstore at 6d. a copy be the recognized one. The Federation desires to call the attention of Churches, Education Departments, Schools, African organisations as well as Africans in general to this resolution which has been actuated by no other motive than that of preserving and maintaining the correct rendering of this national piece of music.

The Education Departments are specially requesetd to bring the above resolution to the notice of all their African Schools and even, as far as possible, to supply each of them with a copy of the above-mentioned edition to teach to the children. Translations into languages other than Xhosa have been made. To this the Federation raises no objection as long as the recognised harmony is faithfully adhered to by all Africans in the different parts of the country.

The Federation also desires to bring to the notice of all concerned the importance of never forgetting the fact that Nkosi Sikelel' i-Afrika (God bless Africa) is our national prayer for divine benediction upon Africa, and as such ought to be sung with due reverence. Ministers, Teachers, Leaders and all who are in positions of authority are earnestly requested to use their influence in the direction of having this anthem rendered reverently at all gatherings at which it is deemed appropriate to sing it.

The following are the officers of the Federation of African Teachers' Association: Messrs. Z. K. Matthews, M.A., LL.B., President (Fort Hare); A. E. Mpapele, Vice-President (Lemana); D. G. S. Mtimkulu, M.A. Treasurer (Adams); and J. M. Nhlapo, B.A. Secretary (Wilberforce).

IMPERIAL POLICY IN OPERATION

African Salaries (3)

The African Teacher

MAR 1 1941

THE rate of progress of a people may be said to depend on the standard of education of the people. If that standard is high there is corresponding speeding up in every branch of industry, in commercial circles and in agriculture. The educated farmer is capable of thinking in wider terms than the hoe and spade. In other countries he has done so with the result that agricultural work is carried out with oil driven machines: the results are plain for everyone to see

On whom then devolves the task of producing a range of citizens with the mental equipment for these things. The task devolves on the humble school teacher; he is the man who plants the first seeds of knowledge in the mind of the African child and he is the person responsible for the rate at which the child's mind develops.

MINIMUM £25 P A SCALE BUT

There are many school teachers in this Colony Some are employed in Government schools others in Government-Assisted Schools and others again in non Assisted Schools The job they have set before themselves is the same, but the range of salaries differs widely The Education Department has fixed minimum scale of salary for teachers of £25 per annum In its own schools however a teacher is not started lower than £48 per annum

The £25 per annum scale was made law because it appeared that in certain unassisted schools still lower salary was paid to employees.

It was also introduced in order to do away with a class of teacher who while not possessing the necessary teaching qualifications was being employed

These measures while remedying the state of affairs temporarily have not produced the results expected by the Education Authorities

POOR WAGES FOR TEACHERS OF THE RACE

MAR 1 1941

Education of the masses must be had by the masses Therefore more and more of the non-assisted type of school sprang into being These schools found they needed men to teach the pupils who turned up in large numbers and, failing to obtain teachers of the standard advocated by the Education Department, employed men below those standards These men, knowing under what conditions they were being employed, were compelled to accept any salary figure with the result that the very state of affairs which the Department of Education set out to cancel by instituting the minimun £25 per annum scale came back into existence

LACK OF CONTROL OF EDUCATION DEPARTMENT

The unemployed teacher can not be rightly blamed for working for a figure below that specified by the authorities To him it is a question of living with it or without it It is however not fair that the authorities should shirk control over establishments which permit such conditions of labour The Education Department may argue that its effective control extends to and stops with Assisted Schools To our mind there is no reason why it should

The plain fact is that here is a job which has to be tackled by the Department and which promises hard work

And the job is the rendering of assistance to all Schools in the country All the schools are concerned with turning out the next generation on whom the welfare of the British Empire will in part depend, and assistance from the Government should not be restricted to "Assisted Schools" which, in fact are so self supporting that they do not need assistance

On the other hand schools which NEED help have to carry on without it, producing indifferently educated children, for it is self explanatory that an underpaid tutor can not put the heart and soul into his work that a properly paid tutor can and would

HOW COMPULSORY EDUCATION MAY BE INTRODUCED

A reorganisation of the whole of educational methods and institutions in the Gold Coast seems to be called for Those who open schools, elementary or otherwise, should receive a proper authorisation from the Government to do so and the Government should after laying down the conditions under which the school should be operated give a certain amount of financial assistance

It should not be necessary for revenue to be lost as a result Actually when the suggested reorganisation has taken place the scheme could be established on the lines on which compulsory education in England was established

But until such time, and not before, the foregoing is attempted will a satisfactory salary be paid to by far the larger number of school teachers throughout the Gold Coast and Ashanti And the evils of improperly trained children will continue to prevail

More And More Native Learning First Aid

No. 88/2

MAR 8 1941

Truly the advance made in knowledge of First Aid by Native Mine workers in the Transvaal is wonderful. Five years ago, that is about the year 1936, fewer than 10,000 of them were trained. Today more than 30,000 are trained.

x x x

Since the year 1920 as many as 160,000 Native Mine workers have passed the Red Cross Society's examinations. These examinations are not easy; they are not meant to be easy. There must be serious, severe tests before certificates can be awarded. The Native Mine workers know this fact, and there fore they give their minds to First Aid They are interested and they want to learn

About twenty five years ago comparatively few Mine Natives knew anything at all about First Aid, and certainly there could not then have been the great Competitions that now take place every year. So important are these annual Competitions that last year, as you have been reading, a Cabinet Minister came to present the trophies, and medals and prizes and cash prizes

Yes, today there are hundreds of highly-skilled Native working on the Mines who have been taught First Aid and who are fully fitted to deal with almost any kind of accident. That is what the Minister of the Interior and of Public health said the other day, and he ought to know.

The teaching of First Aid has made Mine employees, both Europeans and Natives, more safty-minded. That in itself is a testimonial to First Aid.

One Mine Native, Abraham Haloza by name, has won sixteen medals and decorations in First Aid Competitions, and there are a good number of other Native—your own people-who have also won medals and decorations similarly.

x x x

The Native Mine workers recognise that the Doctors and First Aid trianers wish to help them (the Native) to add to their knowledge--and knowledge is one of the precious possessions of life—nobody can take it away from you. This knowledge is imparted to the Natives in an INTERESTING way.

The numbers of Native Mine workers who know First Aid keep increasing

Native Farm Labour

The complex question of Native farm labour in European areas was brought up for consideration by the last session of the Natives Representative Council, Pretoria through a motion. This requested that the Council should appoint a select committee to consider the recommendations of the Committee on Native Farm Labour which reported last year; and that this Council's committee bring forward those recommendations which it considered should be supported. As a result of this, a select committee of the N.R.C. Council was so appointed, under the chairmanship of the Chief Magistrate of the Transkeian Territories. The report submitted by the committee received very brief consideration by the Council, it being apparent from the outset that certain essential factors particularly to the benefit of labourers, had either not been sufficiently enquired into, or received the importance they deserved. Consequently, the Council resolved that the consideration of the report be deferred till next year.

In the House of Assembly, a fortnight ago, Mr. Geldenhuys made a serious attempt to have the Cape Masters and Servants Act amended, in such a way that non-Europeans should be thrown into gaol for what in the case of Europeans would be mere breach of a civil contract. The amendment he sought mainly concerned Native farm labour in White areas. Another member, Mr. Lief Egeland, moved an amendment demanding a commission of inquiry into the working of masters and servants laws, emphasising that the farm labour problem was to be solved only by placing those laws in a modern and civilised basis.

It is significant that the report of the Farm Labour Committee had found that restrictive measures had done much to make farm labour unpopular among Natives. So great has been the agitation by European farmers in the Eastern Province of the Cape for example, that repeated representations have been made to the Government for relief, and this in the form of pressure being brought to bear on Native so-called squatters on farms to be evicted.

Resulting from this, the provisions of the 1909 Private Locations Act were carried out with unflinching zeal in certain districts. Even this method was doomed to failure like its counterpart, Chapter Four of the Trust and Land Act in the Transvaal. In preference to offering their labour to the next European employer, the evicted Natives in the Cape sought sanctuary among their kith and kin, thus residing or again squatting unlawfully.

It is difficult to foresee the point to which shortage of native farm labour will extend its tentacles in quest of its prey. What is definitely a crude solution of the problem is taking place, knowingly or unknowingly, on the Trust farms taken over by the Government from former White owners in Released Area No. 32. Here the position is that owners bought out left an admittedly unenviable legacy of large families of Natives. These consisted of aged heads of families, numbers of brothers and sisters of the servants who were in actual employ of the farmer concerned. The Trust is gradually settling the former ACTUAL servants on the newly-surveyed lots and charging them rent therefore, but it refuses to settle Natives other than these, whether they be brothers of the former employees. The rest are refused permission to occupy and rent new sites, with the inevitable result that they must move out and seek domicile elsewhere. Usually this infers employment at neighbouring European farms against their will and under conditions anything but modern and civilised" as Mr. Egeland put it.

MAR 15 1941

Our chief complaint with the Natives refused permission to rent lots on Trust farms is that they are robbed of domiciliary privileges they have virtually inherited by being born on the farms concerned. They know of no other place where they can claim to be received. It was indiscretion on the part of the former White farmers to allow large accumulations of Native families on their properties, but we would submit that the Trust appropriated these farms with the buildings, improvements and Natives thereon, irrespective of whether some of the latter were not actual servants. The responsibility of finding a home for all is with the present owner—the Trust. It is hard to understand how refusal to register any of them can be justified, except for the purpose, though inconceivable, of forcing farm labour

ENVIRONMENT AND THE NEGRO

THE possibility of the disappearance of the American Negro as a racial group as a result of inter-marriage with other elements has been discussed by Dr. H. H. Rubin in an enlightening study on Eugenics.

Among other things, he points out that though there is no difference between the blood of an African and a pure-blooded American Negro, yet the American Negro has made remarkable progress in commerce, art and the professions, all of which he attributes to environment, while, on the other hand, the African lags behind in most of these things.

Dr. Rubin further observes: "Everyone who has been thrown much into contact with the Negro will testify to the persistence in him of many child-like qualities. And also to his perennial happy-go-luckiness.

"Uncle Remus, Noah, in 'Green Pastures,' and many of our beloved Negro fictional characters, hold up a mirror, in which thousands of adult Negroes may see themselves—romancing delightfully, inventing incidents and episodes with all the naivete of an adolescent child."

They have enriched American literature, these sons and daughters of an enslaved race. They have reclaimed thousands of acres of productive land, untenantable by White labour.

And they have given us, in their reverent and truly beautiful spirituals, the true American volkslied, beloved by all who have heard "Were You there, When They Crucified my Lord?" "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "Wait 'Til I have put on my Crown," "Deep River," "Go Down Moses," and scores of other inspiring songs that reach into our hearts and pluck at our very heartstrings.

"If the Negro race should ever be completely fluxed in the melting pot of America, something very fine and friendly will have been lost to us," concludes Dr. Rubin.

"Friends Of Africa" Will Establish Memorial Library

JOHANNESBURG (BM).—For years, the black people of South Africa have been agitating for a public library, but without success.

Now, they are to have one provided by private subscription.

A Native Memorial Library, named after Miss Winifred Holtby, the well known English writer and sociologist, who died in 1935, is to be opened at the Western Native Township here, exclusively for Africans.

This library is the outcome of Miss Holtby's visit to South Africa in 1926.

Dismayed to find that neither the Government nor the Municipal Authorities provided any opportunities for the Africans to gain book knowledge through libraries, she formed an organisation among a few white liberal and socialist friends called the "Friends of Africa," and since her death this body has endeavoured to carry out her aims.

The library will be under the control of "Friends of Africa" assisted by the South African Institute of Race Relations, a joint European and African organisation which is trying to bring about a better relation between the white and coloured races.

Despite the limited educational facilities for coloured people in South Africa, quite a number of Natives here know how to read and it is hoped that the new library will stimulate their intellectual development.

According to the 1940 report of the Union Bulletin of Educational Statistics, there were 417,000 white children attending school out of a European population of 2,116,000; 453,648 Native children out of an African population of 6,997,500 and 165,322 Indian and coloured (half-caste) children out of a population of 1,046,000.

The percentage of the total population receiving education was: 19.7 for whites; 6.5 for blacks and 15.8 for coloured.

The percentage of educands in past-primary classes was: 19.4 for whites, 2.24 for blacks and 2.59 for coloured.

The total state expenditure on education was: £10,576,196 for whites; £954,320 for blacks and £965,173 for coloured.

The cost per educand was £25.36 per white child; £2.06 per black and £5 84 coloured.

The fact that it costs more than 12 times as much to educate a white child than a black one, is to be explained (a) by the much higher salaries paid white teachers, (b) by their receiving pensions which African eachers do not, and (c), by the more expensive buildings and better equipment of white schools.

All Africans over the age of 18 are made to pay a poll tax of about £1 per annum out of which is deducted the amounts spent upon Native education.

Europeans are exempted from this form of direct taxation except on incomes over £500 per annum.

Slavery in Sierra Leone

It all seems paradoxical that in the face of the supposedly perfect abolition of human slavery in Sierra Leone and its Protectorate the topic of this short article should affirm its continuous factual existence despite the amazing strides in modern christian civilization!

It was clear that on the first day of 1928 the British Government virtually set its ban on human slavery....apparently a red letter day....it brought untold joy in the hearts of freedom loving folks but misgivings and disappointment to quasi economists.

In the polygamous family (for there are many such in Sierra Leone) human slavery by which must be meant, denial of domestic freedom or a curtailment of the woman's domestic right is rampant.

Notwithstanding the present economic pressure brought about by terrible world conditions, Sierra Leone is fully conscious of the church's advocacy of monogamy...sad to state however that christian men put on monogamy as a blind when they really practise polygamy and studiously maintain a harem....where some have not done so for fear of public opinion they have kept a trigly love tryst ... faithlessness ensues and is encouraged resulting in a broken home... divorce!

Among the Muslim community and within the ranks of the Sierra Leone Native, polygamy is encouraged, and in some cases allowed and forms part of a religious or common law as if it were engravened on the hearts of its adherents;....here the woman is held in perpetual servitude; her personal freedom denied if not shamelessly abused.

In higher Muslim circles servitude is minimised and reduced to an inescapable form of obedience; . . .in other words a disguised slavery becomes the modus operandi.—In the Home of the aborigine by virtue of a degenerating custom of domestic marriage in which bride money is paid the woman enters upon a form of disguised slavery; . . . she becomes the acknowledged labour depot,...the farm worker and chattel;...finding her position untenable, she treats with contempt her marital ties; flouts the authority of the husband; disunion arises and the courts are paraded. In most cases the wife runs to seek parental protection which if denied or turned down, the irate husband presses his claims for a return of dowry which in fact tantamounts to redemption from slavery of marriage. . .Inability to perform brings back the disgruntled unfortunate sufferer under the grip of the incensed husband and a worse slavery is recommenced. Visit the Police Courts and Circuit courts; this disguised form of slavery is in evidence sometimes when the magistrate is not favourably inclined to the husband's evidence and orders conjugal freedom to the woman, the excited husband resorts to all foul play, and murder results.

Visit the Native Administration Courts of the Protectorate. Here the woman still is and remains the chattel and a veritable slave of the husband. A slavery disguised under the shadow of "the customs of the people", when for a trivial offence the wife is beaten, roughly handled, left naked, in the open, and hateful woman palavering is precipitated. The question arises: Can the churches cure the Morality of the People? Can Government—the Sierra Leone Government, . . . revise its marital laws with a view of further protecting the woman? Disannulling its strange systems of polygamy and other social vices . . .and thus make virtually effective the abolition proclamation of 1928?—more anon.

Cheapen The Cost Of Education To Parents

Unessential Books And Apparatus Should Be Scrapped

THE cry against the cost of education to parents is widespread. Parents feel that for the privilege of sending their children to school they are being saddled with an expenditure which is far and away beyond anything that one would reasonably expect under the circumstance.

Apart from school fees which have risen within recent years to a prohibitive figure the pockets of parents are taxed to provide a number of books and other apparatus which we consider altogether unnecessary. Taking the school going population throughout the country at 70,000 boys and girls and an average expenditure of £8 a year including school fees, uniforms, other equipments and books per child, parents spend £560,000 a year on primary education. The amount voted by Government for this kind of education this year is only £245,925 less than half the cost to parents. With the great urge for more educational facilities this huge figure will soon approach the million pound mark if the cost is kept up at this level.

On the subject of free primary edcuation much has been said. The official plea for not taking this responsibility is lack of funds. Whether this plea is justified or not the fact remains that we are at the present moment presented with two pictures. One, the mounting cost of education to parents and two, the unwillingess of Government to undertake free primary education because of what it will cost. And the situation promises to develop each way providing a big dividing gap between the two.

We therefore suggest that inasmuch as government is unable for the reasons stated to provide free primary education as is done in every civilised community, it is its duty to see to it that the cost to those who are undertaking this responsibility meanwhile should be lightened.

This is a situation about which every class of the population feels very strongly. At the recent Select Committee on the Estimates both Nana Sir Ofori Atta, Omanhene of Akim Abuakwa and the Omanhene of Assin Attandasu had something to say about this high cost of education to parents. It is time that Government made a move in the matter.

NATIVE DOCTORS MUST BE CONTROLLED

Long ago when European medical aid was not always available it was possible to condone what to many must have even then appeared to be an obnoxious state of affairs. Today when there is modern treatment to be had everywhere in this country the necessity for African native 'doctors' has disappeared. If it is desired to permit them to practise as herbalists their functions must be confined to this branch of the medical profession, and to achieve this effectively legislation must be enacted which will penalise them if they exceed their orbit. At the same time the need for licensing ALL AFRICAN herbalists in this country will readily be appreciated. An announcement stating such licensing to be compulsory should we think, be made by the Medical Department as soon as it is in a position so to do.

MAR 29 1941

Restrictions, as exemplified by the late of Dr Akerele, are imposed on the activities of recognised medical practitioners. It is ten times more necessary to impose restrictions on the activities of unrecognised and dubious native doctors.

THE AFRICAN

The Editor, "Umteteli."

MR. G. L. MANGOALELA, Stellenbosch, writes: Sir,—Rev. S. Tema is to be thanked for his fine exposition of the African confused and confusing social structure as outlined in your issue of August 9.

Long have we awaited the birth of some courageous African minister of religion who would fearlessly tackle the most vital questions in the modern living conditions of Africans. The time has come when our ministers should settle down to attack the root causes of the chaotic position giving rise to the many and various (people don't like the word "sins") ill-practices that we see in Bantu societies; indeed, time has come when our ministers should lay their fingers on those spots where Christian religion or civilisation, as has been presented to them, has thrust the African into difficulties hitherto unknown to him.

No more good purpose could be served by standing in the pulpit—aloof from the people and their problems—to denounce the present generation for their apparent waywardness. The fact is, modern youth is up against real difficulties that call for tactful, patient and sympathetic handling. Indeed, I make bold to say the present generation is by no means worse than any other past generation; on the contrary, their life problems are more urgent and greater, in that they live in a time when the race is undergoing a transition in all spheres of life.

The rev. gentleman has shown us, inter alia, one of the problems touching the life of every family namely: the vacillating policies followed by the various Churches and the State regarding African marriage. In spite of the fact that the traditional lobola custom as practised in the old days is entirely and wholly unsuited to modern conditions, certain classes of people—for personal interests, let it be added—refuse to readjust themselves to conditions of the times and, as a result, expose those they wish to protect to anti-social tendencies.

Marriage is made so difficult that many a good young man and woman are forced—against their best intentions—to follow the easy ways, and hence we see orphanages and reformatories springing up. The custom itself is followed only partially by its own adherents, most of whom do not even understand what it stands for and fail to realise that as an institution it has outlived its day; it is antiquated and open to abuse by the unthinking.

We hope that all African ministers will enthusiastically join Rev. S. Tema in reviewing all these matters affecting their people, and that where Christian teachings have definitely brought chaos, instability, and general vagueness in the traditional Bantu Social structure, they will co-operate to establish some definite well-defined system in keeping with christian standards as well as akin to Bantu social system.

Discrimination For Coloured Men In London Hotels Is Illegal

LONDON (BM).—It will be interesting to coloured peoples to know that it is illegal for British hotels to discriminate against people because of race or colour, for it is notorious that coloured people from various parts of the Empire as well as America, have often been refused accommodation in certain London hotels.

Discussing the question of colour and racial discrimination, Mr Noel Baker, M.P., asked the Home Secretary in the House of Commons, whether he was aware that the management of certain hotels, as for instance, the Anglo-Swiss Hotel, Bournemouth, had issued advertisements announcing that they did not cater for members of the Semitic race; and whether he would take steps to prevent this discrimination among British subjects.

Replying, Mr Herbert Morrison, Socialist Home Secretary, said:

'If any hotel proprietor in this country is guilty of copying Nazi methods in this way, there will, I am sure, be general public reprobation of such action.

"I am advised that an in-keeper is not entitled to discriminate between one person and another if he has accommodation available, and that a traveller who is refused accommodation, except when no accommodation is available, has a right of action for damages against the in keeper."

If what Mr Morrison says is true, then it is all the more surprising that most English hotels refuse accommodation to distinguished Negroes visiting the British capital.

One only has to recall the case of the Mills Brothers, who were turned away from several hotels on their last visit to this city.

In Edinburgh, a number of Negro Bishops attending a religious conference in that city were refused accommodation there.

On that occasion Viscount Simon, then Home Secretary, had to intervene to secure a place for the clergymen to stay.

There has been no issue of denial of civil liberty rights more frequently protested against by coloured people in London, than that of the difficulty of obtaining hotel accommodation.

London is probably the least hospitable place for people of colour, when it comes to finding lodgings.

It is to be hoped that Mr Morrison's observation on this question, will have the desired effect, not only for Jews, but coloured subjects of the King as well.

MEDICAL PRACTITIONER JAILED

A report in the "West African Pilot" states that a Nigerian medical practitioner, Dr John Oni Akerele, has been sentenced to three years imprisonment following his conviction on two counts in connection with the administration of injections on patients, several of whom died. The case is of interest in view of the legal aspect of administration of drugs generally, and in view of the existence of "native" medicine men and doctors particularly. "The Gold Coast Independent" has had occasion to point out the dangers of ignorant African native doctors practising without any form of control. There can be no doubt that these ill gotten te 'doctors' have been responsible for many deaths in the past.

A beneficent educational Scheme for the Country

Achimota Will Now Impart Tuition In Arts And Crafts

THERE is nothing so pleasing to the ears of a progressive country than tidings of progressive developments in its system of education. When a few days ago, the local Press published an advertisement announcing a forth-coming Examination on May 9 for admission to a four years' course in Arts and Crafts those of us who, for some months of sundays nows have been clamouring for the introduction and establishment of such a course were immensely pleased that the hour has now struck for such a long felt want to be supplied. What should increase the delight of the country in this Providential beneficence is the promulgated assurance behind the scheme by which the Department of Education has offered five scholarships to applicants who have completed a Teachers Training Course.

A GREAT INCENTIVE

No incentive could be greater than this for those who have the ambition to pursue and acquire a well grounded industrial education. In fact, the authorities of Achimota and the Department of Education who are responsible for the hatching of this blessing should be assured that the country doffs its hat in very grateful acknowledgement of this scheme. Of course, to a scheme of this kind, cogent suggestions from the public may not fail to prove of great value, and that is why the Editor-in-Chief of the "Daily Echo" has already registered his appreciation, and at the same time offered an interesting suggestion towards widening the scope of the Scheme to take not only the lines of the London Polytechnic, but also to include tuition in Industrial Chemistry.

Let us hope that the beginning which is about to be made with the scheme will be properly done to mark also the beginning of a truly epoch-making development in the educational system of the country.

Registration Of Native Voters

Now that the roll of Native voters in the Cape Province has since been closed on March 15 1941 we feel it necessary to comment on some unsatisfactory aspects of the matter.

On February 1, 1941, the time came for the registration of Native voters in the Cape Province. This was made known in the Government Gazette dated January 10, 1941 in a notice relating to the quinquennial registration of qualified male adult Natives. The notice made known too that Saturday, March 15, 1941 was the closing date for the receipt by Registering Officers of claimants' forms which could be obtained at any Police Station, Electoral Office, Magistrate's Office, or Native Commissioner's Office in the Cape Province.

Anybody who is quite conversant with the cautions, not to say suspicions, and interrogative mind of the Bantu will appreciate the complaint that the people have not been warned early enough about this all too important civic function. The notice was published barely a month before the opening of the roll, and the whole business took just about two months. What then of the characteristic mind and the far-flung habitation of the Bantu people? Even to this day some people, among whom there may be genuine prospective voters, are still inquiring as to what they are required to do. Of course, it is now too late, and they have to wait another five years before they can lodge in their claims as voters.

The registration of Native voters once in every five years is rather awkward and appears irregular considering that there are provincial elections after every three years, which means that for every quinquennial registration there are two provincial elections. To those who fail to register for one reason or other it is, in our opinion, quite unfair that they should be made to miss two provincial elections. Why can't we have biennial registration as is the case with Europeans?

There is also the question of qualified prospective voters from the Cape Province who are workers in the other provinces. These men are property owners and quitrent payers in the Cape Province. They have or rather they should have a claim to registration. As far as we know, no arrangements were made in these other provinces for their registration. We commend this question to the African Voters' Association to take it up with the authorities concerned. In any case the position of these men needs explanation either from the authorities or the African Voters' Association.

For the success, if there be any (there are no official figures published yet), of this last registration, credit is due to the members of the African Voters' Association for their individual efforts in acting as Canvassers and to the Chief Native Commissioner of the Cape Province, Mr. A. L. Barrett, who has now retired, for leaving nothing to chance in the Cape as far as the registration notice is concerned during the very limited time at his disposal.

Activities Of Afrjcans' Parliamentary Representatives

The Parliamentary Representatives of the Africans have been very much concerned to learn, as a result of enquiries made by Mrs Ballinger, M.P. that the Minister of Mines intends to introduce a Miners' Phthisis Bill into Parliament this Session without making any provision in respect of the African workers. This is held by them to be a breach of faith, as they had been given to understand two years ago that, on the next occasion of the introduction of a Miner' Phthisis Bill, the present wholly unsatisfactory provisions in respect of compensation for African workers suffering from silicosis and tuberculosis as a result of their work on the mines would be reviewed and improvements effected. The findings of an Inter-Departmental Committee (Mines and Native Affairs) which reported two years ago on the position of Africans under the Miners Phthisis Act, recommended that benefits should be provided on a graduated basis for sufferers at various stages of silicosis, and that food and other payments in kind be added to the amount of the cash wages reckoned for compensation purposes. The Mining Industry agreed to give voluntary additional benefits until the whole matter were dealt with in an amending Act.

The Parliamentary Representatives interviewed the Minister of Mines (Colonel Stallard) on this subject on February 20, and pressed hard for the inclusion of the African workers in the proposed new Bill.

Colonel Stallard was adamant. He said that he had not the information necessary to enable him to decide what should be done for African workers. The deputation pointed out that the Inter-Departmental Committee had gone into the matter and had made recommendations, but Colonel Stallard said that he wished to have more information. He also said that scarcely anyone had taken advantage of the voluntary benefits offered by the Mining Industry. The Parliamentary Representatives subsquently took up this matter with the Secretary for Native Affairs and were satisfied with the steps which he has now taken to inform those who should have benefited. It was clear to them that the absence of claimants had been due to a weakness in the administrative measures taken.

The Parliamentary Representatives pressed Colonel Stallard again, but he would not agree to alter the present Bill. He indicated however, that he proposed to arrange for a Commission to overhaul the whole of the Miners' Phthisis legislation and organisation and the needs of the African workers would be reviewed then. He was asked to include in the personnel of the Commission a non-official representative of the Native Affairs Department were included.

The deputation asked Colonel Stallard to approach the Chamber of Mines with the request that the improved benefits recommended by the Inter-Departmental Committee be applied pending the further legislation.

The deputation intimated that they would probably find it necessary to oppose the present Bill because it failed to provide for African workers. It was pointed out to him, that if the proposed Workmen's Compensation Bill became law the Workmen's Compensation rates would be higher than the present Miners' Phthisis rates.

Master And Servant

IT has often been said that the African is his own enemy, and many African leaders of the present generation have stressed on the advisability for a mental revolution such as would make the existence of this canker worm to the progress of the African, extinct. While it cannot be said for certain that such efforts have been wholly abortive, it is quite clear that no great success has been achieved in this direction. The African has continued to play the role of hat in-hand Uncle Tomism, to use the American term, and here seems to be no anchorage for him.

In his aviditv for wealth. and to gain the respect or favour of those who may be in authority, he sells his very intimate companion without the least compunction, caring little whether such betrayal is destined to end disastrously for his compatriot, or whether it would ruin him for life. Equity and fair dealing have no meaning for him, and his main desire seems to be that the gospel of live and let live should always remain a matter of sentiment and nothing else.

Such undesirable factors are particularly prevalent among Africans who are supposed to enjoy a measure of popularity in a community. They may be business men with workmen under their control, and the well being of such employees, from the economic standpoint, may depend on them. But rather than endeavour to encourage such workers, they would aim at getting all for themselves to the detriment of their employees. They would insist on efficient service and yet are by no means prepared to lend the necessary encouragement to their staff.

They may request that deposits should be paid by intending applicants before they are assigned to certain posts, only to make use of such deposits to promote the success of their business and forget that those whose money they may have been using to promote such business, have also a right to enjoy life equally. These factors have generally formed the struggle between master and servant, and the Law Courts, on many occasions, have been called upon to intervene in such matters. There can be no doubt, that this state of affairs is certainly undesirable in an enlightened community, and we think the sooner that responsible Africans realise this fact, and try to be sympathetic towards their employees, the better will they be able to make the African nation a factor to be reckoned with, in Twentieth Century progress.

African Church Ordains Six Deacons, And Three Priests

A solemn ordination service took place at the Jehovah Shalom Church (U.N.A.) when Messrs J. M. Olumuyiwa, K. C. Edckpolo, D. Ogunsemi, Joel M. Iyaya, Emanuel Ebisanmi, and William Huga were ordained Deacons.

Reverends J. W. S. Oranta, and R. Ade Ilumoka were admitted into the Priest's Order, while Reverend N. D. Johnson was recognised as a full minister in the United Native African Church.

This event attracted to the church an enormous congregation.

Among the congregation were many church dignitaries who had travelled from different parts of the Mission for the purpose of the ordination.

There were also present the relatives and friends of the ordinands.

General Superintendent of the U.N.A. organisation, Rev. G. A. Oke, officiated, and was assisted by Reverend Superintendents E. Ayo Salu, M. B Newton, Reverends T. O. Eniasoro. U. T. Barber and J. T. Adeoye.

Rev. Superintendent G. A. Oke delivered an impressive sermon in which he urged the ordinands to take up, with fortitude, the responsible position they were about to assume.

Shortly afterwards, the candidates who were led by Rev. U. T. Barber were presented before the officiating priest.

This was followed by the Litany, and other forms of rituals.

Each of the candidates later knelt before the officiating priest and was ordained, and copies of the Holy Bible and New Testaments were presented to the candidates by the General Superintendent.

Afterwards the Worthy President of the U. N. A. Organisation, Brother E. O. Oke, delivered the Licences to the candidates.

The service was brought to a close with the singing of "E Yo Jesu jobs," the Blessing being offered by the General Superintendent.

OUR NATIVE COURTS

Referring to Mr T. E. Sokari's article on "Our Native Courts," published in the issue of March 20 of the "Eastern Nigeria Guardian," I should be grateful for a space in this esteemed Journal to convey my congratulation to him for his acquittal on the charge preferred against him in the Aka Native Court.

I should also like to avail myself of the opportunity of correcting certain improprieties which the spirit of his appeal no doubt portrays.

I must make it perfectly clear from the onset that my rejoinder does not aim at defending or justifying the actions of Court members to the litigants in any particular case, but it does aim at pointing out the naughtiness of his appeal for the condemnation of the Nyenweles.

It also aims at discouraging insults to the Native Authorities.

While it is admittedly true that the actions of the Court members are not beyond criticism, yet I am inclined to view with certain misgivings the appeal of Mr T. E. Sokari for the wholesale condemnation of the Nyenweles as judges of the Ekpeye Clan Courts, simply because he did not obtain from them the judgment he had expected.

Collaboration, if not success, may reasonably be anticipated if an appeal for a general reform is made purely on a constructive policy or in the interest of the public.

Apparently, Mr T. E. Sokari is dissatisfied with the decision of the Nyenweles and his actions in embarking in a subsequent campaign to advocate a revolution which will in effect eliminate wholesale the Nyenweles from the personnel of the Ekpeye Clan Courts, shows nothing short of vindictiveness.

It is highly probable that such an appeal may meet with resentment rather than approbation, amongst reasonable people of Ekpeye on whose behalf or interest the appeal was intended to be made.

Another striking feature in his appeal is the exposition of a gross insult to the traditional Heads and Rulers

It is the insult that has particularly provoked my rejoinder which aims at eradicating the erroneous idea prevailing in the minds of a certain class of educated youngmen, that it is below their dignity to respect their natural Rulers or Chiefs simply because their Rulers or Chiefs cannot read or write as they do.

In his appeal under reference, Mr T.E. Sokari stigmatised the Nyenweles as Petty Village Headman.

I cannot see from where the word petty emanates.

The word Nyenwele, literally means owner of a village or town, or owner of land on which a village or town is situated or, better still, a founder of a village or town.

This class of men holds the highest status amongst their Native communities and by their hereditary rights, are the virtual or natural Heads and Rulers of villages or towns and are men naturally invested with dignity and prestige.

They are not appointed (as the term Headmen may suggest) but are recognised by the Government as the traditional Heads and Rulers.

Above all, every good citizen owns it as a duty to respect the traditional institutions and constitutions of his or her country as long as their ideals are pure and are for the good of the social organisation of the people.

In view of these bare facts, if Mr T. E. Sokari maintains that his natural Heads and Rulers are petty, then he is appallingly petty himself and extremely funny in his ideas and outlooks.

Training Of Natives In Medicine & Dentistry

Funds are to be made available by the South African Native Trust to enable qualified Native students to undertake a course of training in medicine or in dentistry here in the Union of South Africa.

The plan is that for the first year such students will take a course in Science at the South African Native College at Fort Hare, and upon passing satisfactorily in that course will then proceed for further study at the University of the Witwatersrand. The medical students will there take a course extending over five years, and the students of dentistry a course extending over four years.

These facilities have been made possible by reason of the expansion of non-European hospital accommodation on the Witwatersrand, and this has placed the University of the Witwatersrand in a position to offer facilities for the full training of non-European students there in medicine and in dentistry.

The students will, for their clinical training, be admitted to non-European hospitals on the Witwatersrand.

The South African Native Trust is as well giving financial support to the South African Native College at Fort Hare for the employment of the additional staff which will be required for the Science course and for providing the necessary scientific equipment.

The advantages of Native students being afforded facilities for full training of this kind within the Union of South Africa, instead of oversea, are obvious.

Details of the assistance which is thus being made available to Native students, for those courses, are obtainable from the Principal of the South African Native College, Fort Hare, P. O. Alice, C. P. These courses will be made available to students who have passed the Junior Certificate Examination and are prepared thereafter to take the course in medicine or in dentistry. They will thereupon be required to pass the Matriculation Examination, and after that to take up and pass the first year course for the degree of Bachelor of Science at Fort Hare.

Provision is being made by the South African Native Trust for funds for the award of five scholarships on a competitive basis, at the end of the first year Science course. The value of these scholarships will be assessed to cover all necessary expenses but will in no instance exceed £200 per annum, and these will be awarded only after consultation with the University and Native College Authorities.

As a help to candidates for the scholarships, the South African Native Trust will in addition each year award not more than ten bursaries of £45 each per annum, tenable for one year for the first year Science course at Fort Hare. As far as may be, two of these bursaries will be allocated to each of the five areas:

(1) Ciskei.
(2) Natal.
(3) Orange Free State, together with British Bechuanaland and Griqualand West.
(4) Transkei.
(5) Transvaal.

This plan is being put into operation with effect from the current year, 1941.

MR. A. L. RANTSIENG, Kopjes, writes: Sir,—When one read Mr. Mohlamme's letter "Africans" or "Natives," one wondered if he knew what the three words "African," "Native" and "Bantu" mean.

To him it would appears that the Africans are just a newly-born nation and have never had a real standing name. He is bold to condemn one of the wisest resolutions ever passed by the Advisory Board. To him the term "Bantu" is the best and right term to be used. I wonder if he is aware that the term "Bantu" simply means "people." Every nation consists of people. This term does not distinguish us from other nations at all. It is a made up term. He also considers the term "Natives" to be just as good. Are Europeans not Natives of Europe? Are Indians not Natives of India! And so on. Does this term distinguish us from other nations? He condemns himself out of his own mouth when he says that the term "African," is to be condemned only because it is a designation of a continental application, and not of aboriginal inheritance, what an absurdity! Can he give one word that is of more aboriginal inheritance than the word "Africans"? Does he know that we are the only aboriginal inhabitants of Africa and therefore and naturally we are to call ourselves "Africans," the children of Africa, the Black continent?

Europeans so call themselves, because they are the aboriginal inhabitants of Europe, and they are very proud of it. Why should we take the unecessary and senseless trouble of looking for a suitable name when God has given us a good name? Mr. Mohlamme cites an irrelevant and wrong example of Australia is a new country and was so named by the English when they discovered it. The term "Africa" is as old as the Bible. It is not a newly-made up term like Australia.

Then as to Mr. Mohlamme's letter in which he would like us to put him clear about such names as "The African Consolidated Theatres" Surely there is no need to worry about such matters. These theatres have been named after our national name "African." We ought to be proud to see that our name is liked by many people. Mr. Mohlamme also says that those in Europe call themselves Europeans but that in their different Governments would not call themselves so still. This is very true. They would either call themselves English or German according to their own different tribes. In the same way we would surely still call ourselves Basutos or Zulus, all of course depending on the tribe we belong to.

I feel I could do more justice to the subject if we could meet in open debate.

THE STATUS OF ETHIOPIA

JUN 14 1941

The future political status of Ethiopia is of great concern to many quarters. Now that Emperor Haile Selassie is back on the throne, the belief is prevalent in British official circles that "an independent Ethiopia would be a permanent temptation to Italy."

It may well be that the Negus foresaw the possibility of a recurrent Italian invasion when he asked for British assistance and guidance in advance of his resumption of powers. But it is safe to say that Selassie, in making the request, had no intention of surrendering the sovereignty of Ethiopia to Great Britain. What he doubtless meant was that England should be willing to send a commission of experts to aid in the economic reconstruction and political reorganization of the East African empire on a level consistent with its social need and physical security. Such a reorganization would certainly countenance the equipping and modernization of the Ethiopian army a prime necessity.

However, there is a powerful section of British opinion that clings to the view that the best safeguard for Ethiopia is to become a British protectorate. Such an opinion may be indicative of the pattern of action which English diplomacy will follow toward the African empire in the days to come. Should this become a reality, it will not be engendered by fear of another Fascist invasion. With Britain in complete and unchallenged control of all the Italian possessions in East Africa, how could Rome threaten the independence of Haile Selassie's kingdom? It is obvious that an Italian re-invasion of Ethiopia would necessarily involve forcible crossing of British territory. In such a remote eventuality not alone Ethiopia, but Britain as well would be at war with Italy.

In the minds of many Britishers, to restore complete independence to Ethiopia would be offensive to white susceptibilities, particularly in the South African Union. Therefore England feels constrained to translate Haile Selassie's request for "assistance and guidance" as a golden opportunity to do by connivance and treachery what Fascist Italy accomplished by force of arms.

DEC 14 1940

"PROFESSOR Charles Cassal, LL.D., of University College, London in his preface to a book written by A. de Lamartine, entitled 'Toussaint Louverture: A Dramatic Poem' (Longmans, Green & Company: 1875), has the following to say regarding Toussaint:"

"Toussaint was born at San Domingo, in 1743.

"He was of noble, some say of royal descent, and possessed high ability, and even genius.

"He took part in the first insurrection of the Negroes, joined the Spanish Army at San Domingo, rose rapidly from the ranks, and was a Colonel when he heard of the Decree of the 'Convention Nationale' setting all slaves free.

"He at once entered the service of the French as 'General de Brigade' —a step which has been by some called treasonable.

"He obtained the grade of General de Division for taking the town of Cap by storm at the head of 10,000 men, and assisting in driving the English out of the Island.

"His ambition naturally grew with his success, and he soon secured an absolute authority over the coloured people; fought against the French as he had fought against the Spaniards, forced his adversary, General Rigaud, to re-embark, and soon found himself absolute master of the whole of San Domingo.

"He was appointed President for life, and the era of prosperity was beginning at Haiti when Buonaparte, who could suffer no power beside his own, sent that expedition commanded by his brother-in-law, Leclerc, which forms the starting point of the present drama.

"The blacks, under the leadership of Toussaint, made an heroic defence; some 11,000 of their enemies perished, and ultimately the French had to abandon the Colony altogether.

"Before that event, however, Toussaint, having been overcome, was betrayed by his Generals, and even by one of his sons and had to submit.

"The conditions imposed upon him were honourable enough, but he was treacherously led into a snare, arrested and sent with his family to France.

"Napoleon had the meanness to interrogate him as to where he had hidden his treasures!

" 'My loss is something more than money,' was the answer of Toussaint.

"He was imprisoned first in the 'Temple,' and soon after in the fortress of Joux, where he was frozen to death in 1803.

"Some say he shared the fate of Pichegrue, Areda, Cerrachi, and others and was murdered in his prison.

"Whatever may be said of that truly extraordinary man, it cannot be denied that his was a lofty and powerful mind.

"His ability for Government was admirable; his system, which consisted in gaining ascendancy over the whites by craft, and ruling the blacks by the strength of his mind, was invariably successful, being based upon a profound knowledge of the two races.

"In his long and strangely eventful career, there are certainly acts of treachery, but, in this, he has done nothing more than imitate Napoleon.

"Everything shows, that had he succeeded in establishing his authority on a durable basis, he would have secured the prosperity of the Colony."

Sir Spencer Saint John, K. C. M. G., formerly British Minister Resident and Consul General to Haiti, and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Mexico, is regarded by an Afra-merican historian as "a merciless critic and detractor of Haiti."

Yet he pays a most remarkable tribute to this African Soldier-Statesman in his book entitled "Haiti: 'The Black Republic' (New York 1889), as follows:

"Amid the many heroes whose actions the Haitians love to commemorate, Toussaint L'Ouverture does not hold a high rank; and yet the conduct of this black was so remarkable as almost to confound those who declare the Negro an inferior creature incapable of rising to genius.

"History, wearied with dwelling on the petty passions of the other founders of Haitian independence, may well turn to the one grand figure of this cruel war.

"Toussaint was born on the Breda Estate in the Northern Department, and was a slave from birth.

"His grandfather was an African prince.....

"There is no doubt of the intelligence and energy of the man.

"Though but a puny child, by constant exercise and a vigorous will he became as wiry and active as any of his companions, and, moreover, gave up much of his leisure time to study.....

"He was evidently trusted and kindly treated by his master's agent, who gave him charge of the sugar mills.

"There is an accusation constantly brought against Toussaint, that of being a religious hypocrite, but his early life shows that it is unfounded.

"Whilst still a slave, his principles would not allow him to follow the custom of his companions and live in concubinage; he determined to marry, though the woman he chose had already an illegitimate son named Placide, whom he adopted.

"It is pleasing to read of the happy domestic life of Toussaint, and it is another proof of that affectionate disposition which made those who served him devoted to him.

"When the insurrection broke out in the Northern Province, Toussaint remained faithful to his master, and prevented any destruction on the estate; but finding ultimately that he could not stem the tide, he sent his master's family for safety into Cap Haitien, and joined the insurgents.

"He was at first appointed Surgeon to the Army, as among his other accomplishments was a knowledge of simples, which had given him great influence on the estate, and was now to do so in the insurgent forces.

"He liked this employment.....

"We have all heard or read something of Toussiant L'Ouverture, and been taught to think well of him.

"I was therefore the more surprised, on my arrival at Port-au-Prince, to hear his memory so depreciated.

"I do not remember any Haitian having voluntarily spoken of him, though they never wearied of talking of Dessalines, Christophe, and Rigaud.

DEC 14 1940

"I at first thought that Toussaint's never having necessarily shed the blood of the whites, whilst the others may be said to have rejoiced at the sight of it, was one of the chief causes; but the real reason why the historians and biographers of Haiti would lower Toussaint's memory is the energy with which he acted against the rebellious mulattoes, and his firm determination that all colour should be equally respected by the law, and that all should have equal rights.

Discord In South Africa

ALL IS NOT WELL in the South African Union, according to reports reaching here. There is a strong pro-Nazi sentiment among the Boers, those militant inhabitants of Dutch ancestry, who form a large percentage of the South African population. Ever since their defeat by the British many years ago, the Boers have been more or less resentful, and now they are openly opposed to the participation of the South African Union in the war against Germany.

So far, the British population in the South African Union is slightly in the majority and they ar ecooperating with England in the fight against Hitlerism, so are many of the Negro natives.

Negro natives in the South African Union suffer many restrictions, both at the hands of the British and the Boers, but the latter are more intolerant toward the Negroes than are the British.

The Boers are for outright enslavement of the blacks, and in order to carry out this policy they have previously sought to form themselves into a separate government, but this plan failed, due to the opposition of the British.

During the present crisis, this is an unhealthy condition for the South African Union and open strife between the Boers and the British may eventually flare up again, with the issue of slavery involved.

Keep To The African Ways

By Peter Mosebi

Most Africans are now so used to European food that they forget or have forgotten that even Africans are able to make tasty meals of an entirely African type or origin. Before Africans became so "European minded," they were a people of high physical culture and good health. They owed this to the mealie or corn meal porridge supplemented by a variety of healthy wild vegetable foods.

Porridge or African bread were usually made from mealie or corn-meal. The mealies or corn were first soaked in water for a day or night. When the mealie is soft it is then ground by women and the meal is sifted out of all the chaff. A pot,—usually a big one,—is put on the fire until the water in it boils and some meal is added. The stirring is done after the meal has cooked for a while. When the porridge is ready, it is made into big balls and stored away in baskets. At each meal-time the women break off some pieces of the bread or porridge and mix it with fresh or liquid milk or Amasi. This is the African's staple food.

A detribalised or urbanised section of the Bantu race depends on buying meat from butchers but one who is still African by custom has got to hunt for spring-hares, hares, squirrels, Rock-rabbits, and birds for his meat; but there are substitutes where meat of wild animals is unobtainable. Roots of certain bushes were used. These are properly cooked and spiced with certain powders and salt. These are used in conjunction with the porridge. In order to vary the food, the monkey-nuts were ground and mixed with mealie meal to make a very tasty dish of porridge. Nuts of Morula tree fruit were ground and mixed with samp. All these used to form a good meal and a healthy diet.

Do you attach any importance to the names you give your children? We hear so many silly, foolish names these days among Africans who think that the aping of the European name is so much better than sticking to those used among their own people for hundreds of years. Yet actually there is no finer and more suitable way of naming an African than by using those names belonging to the race, and which are beautiful both in sound and meaning.

Names have great importance for their owners, in any work they may choose to do. Employers are often turned away from engaging a person who foolishly adopts a quite foreign and "high-sounding" name, whereas if that person bore a name that belonged to his own race he would receive better attention and greater respect.

People with awkward names are they realise that otherwise they would make little progress in life. Take Adolf Hitler, for instance. He changed his name from Schuecklgruber to Hitler! It was just as well he did, for can you imagine hundreds of people standing at attention with their arms raise in the Nazi salute to cry "Heil Schuecklgruber!" (Perhaps, considering how such a name might have discouraged him from climbing the ladder of fame, it is a pity he did change his name!)

Lenin, who found the Soviet Republic in Russia, also changed his name from Ulianov, while Stalin, the present dictator of that country, chose to be called Stalin instead of his real name Djugashvilli. In Hollywood, too, it is customary for the actors to change to names that would be more suitable for screen work, for naturally a plain "Mary Jane" or "John Smith" would not seem nearly as attractive to the romantic-minded public.

So consider when you name your next child. He or she is destined for life as an African and not as a European, and even if the child makes a mark in the world as a great person, a European name would still prove unsuitable. Keep

Cape African Congress

Resolutions Passed

AT the annual conference of the Cape African Congress the following resolutions were passed:—

(1) That owing to the rise in the cost of living in the Union due largely to the present world crisis, this conference humbly appeals to the Honourable the Minister to consider the possibility of approaching public bodies viz., Chambers of Commerce and Industries, as well as the Mining authorities of the country, with a view to improving the wage rates of African workers in proportion to the existing standard of living.

(2) That whilst this conference appreciates the steps taken by the Government in preventing the spread of tuberculosis among Africans in rural areas, it nevertheless feels that in view of the light of scientific evidence the Government should redouble its efforts to meet the alarming situation.

(3) This conference associates itself with the resolution passed by the Cape Provincial Council last year in regard to the hospitalisation of Africans in Reserves and requests the mining authorities to consider the desirability of co-operating with the Government in making it possible for the suggested levy of £1 for every African labourer recruited in the Cape to be utilised for such medical service.

4) That the Cape African Congress respectfully requests the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister to approach the Department of Native Affairs and the local authorities of Cape Town and other centres to consider the immediate necessity of the withdrawal or suspension of the regulations framed under the provisions of the Native Laws Amendment Act restricting free movement of the African within the urban area of Cape Town and other centres. In the opinion of this conference these regulations have outlived their usefulness in that unemployment in Cape Town has ceased as a result of the war.

(5) This conference strongly feels that the time has come for reversing the present policy of the local authorities in restricting the purchasing of free landed property in urban areas of the Union, and solemnly requests the Prime Minister to use his influence and to intervene with the object of bringing about an amelioration of the present conditionts.

(6) The conference welcomes the steps taken by the Government in creating a permanent body to look after the welfars of European, Coloured and Indian volunteers on active service after the war and requests an open declaration of the Government's policy with regard to African returned soldiers in this connection.

(7) This conference recommends that the National Executive of the African National Congress should consider the urgent necessity of providing adequate machinery for the organisation of our youth in all scopes of social activities in the best interests of the African nation.

This conference places on record its sincere appreciation to the Cape Provincial Council for the keen and generous manner in which it has dealt with questions affecting the welfare of the African people of the Cape socially and educationally and further learns with deep regret of the illness of His Honour the Administrator, Captain F. A. Joubert, and prays for his speedy recovery.

This Congress desires to place on record its deep appreciation of the services rendered by the Parliamentary Representatives with particular reference to Senator C. H. Malcomess for his indefatigable efforts in the service of the Africans in the Cape, particularly in the erection of Secondary Schools in the various centres of urban areas.

That Congress requests the Government to recognise the existing social organisations among the Africans with the object of extending such service throughout the country.

Arming Of Natives

AUG 16 1941

Colonel Deneys Reitz is to be warmly congratulated, says the "Daily Dispatch" on the expression of his view that Union Natives should be allowed to fight for freedom and for the safety and security of their country. In an interview in Durban the Minister of Native Affairs said: "Recruiting among the Natives is going very badly, but that is understandable. My personal opinion is that South Africa is foolish not to allow Native soldiers to be armed for service in the North. Parliament does not allow Natives to be armed, but if the Natives were promised arms on reaching the front, recruiting would be brisk." Colonel Reitz was speaking no more than the truth when he added: "I feel that we are deliberately depriving ourselves of fighting material." That Black troops led by White officers, have all the qualities of first-class fighting men—courage, bravery, resourcefulness and endurance—has been demonstrated in this and the last war by the King's African Rifles and the regiments from the West Coast. There are, in fact, few smarter or better disciplined regiments anywhere than the K.A.R., but there is every reason to believe that the Zulus, Basutos and Bantus of South Africa could provide many battalions of men who would equal the King's African Rifles in smartness and efficiency in the field. In fact if full use was made of African manpower in the Union and adjoining Protectorates for war purposes, not only would recruiting be brisk, as Colonel Reitz suggests, but the position of the Allies in Egypt, Libya and the Middle East would be such that offensive measures against the Axis could be contemplated and planned. Furthermore, the resultant increase in the size of South Africa's army would lead to a wider and more rapid expansion of the industrial war effort, with a corresponding increase in the use of African and European labour, for the benefit not only of South Africa but of the Empire as a whole.

As Colonel Reitz said, the Union Parliament does not allow Natives to bear arms, but there could be no harm in the Minister appealing to Parliament to give the necessary consent. In fact, we would urge upon him to do so. The Opposition will raise all the well-known and predictable objections, but these are extraordinary times. South Africa is taking part in a "total" war against an enemy bent on the destruction of all freedom and liberty and the domination and despoliation of all countries, and therefore South Africa is entitled to ask Parliament to adopt unusual measures to make sure of victory. And after all, is it not a right possessed by every human being to fight in defence of his country and his ideals and principles? We do not doubt that the Nationalists would attempt to make capital out of the suggestion that Natives be trained and equipped to take part in the war as combatants, but is the country to be ruled by the Opposition? Is fear of Opposition criticism for ever to hamper our effort? How much longer is the tail to be allowed to wag the dog?

Give Africans Outlet

"The European population will have to wake up sooner or later to the fact that the Native must be given an outlet for skilled work," said Mr. Graham Ballenden, manager of the Johannesburg Municipal Department of Non-European Affairs.

The minimum income needed by a Native family living in a location in Johannesburg was £6-10s. a month.

"All the palliatives we can now offer will not put the position right until the Native can earn whatever he is capable of earning," Mr. Ballenden said.

The conditions under which the Native lived created the unreliability which was a bugbear to employers, but this would rectify itself.

The municipal policy was to go on building houses, as funds became available, until saturation point was reached. The building of flats was not contemplated since flats cost more to build per unit than cottages, and the development of Natives did not equip them for flat life.

It was proposed that Native residents in municipal cottages should be allowed to go on living rent free in their cottages when they became too old to work.

It was hoped to establish location markets for vegetable, grain and other commodities.

OCT 18 1941

In reply to the chairman, Mr. D. L. Smit (Secretary for Native Affairs), Mr. Ballenden said he believed there were several thousand Natives in Johannesburg who could buy their own houses, but there was no land available for them.

Dr. A. W. Wilkie, Principal of Lovedale, said that throughout the 100 years of Lovedale's existence certain fundamental principles had always been accepted and had determined the whole policy of Lovedale as a Christian missionary educational institution.

Wishing Lovedale "many happy returns of its notable birth," the Rev. J. Bruce Gardiner on behalf of the Moderator of the Church of Scotland said the Scottish Church had always regarded Lovedale with special pride—the pride of the mothtr in the child of her the mother in the child of her affection.

Representing the London Missionary Society, the Rev. A. J. Haile recalled that Dr. John Love, after whom Lovedale was named, was the first secretary of the London Missionary Society, and that he took an important part in the formation of the Glasgow Missionary Society. The London Missionary Society, he said, greeted Lovedale on its centenary, and praised God for the memory of Dr. John Love.

Italian Police Lieutenant Is Hanged For Killing Ethiopians

ADDIS ABABA (BM).—The first murder trial held here under British military jurisdiction resulted in death sentence on an Italian Police Lieutenant, Vengeruzo Clarizeo.

His crime was described as one of unspeakable brutality.

On the night that Addis Ababa fell to the British Imperial Forces and Abyssinian Patriots, Clarizeo, among the last Fascist officers to remain in the capital was still commanding a posse of about 40 Italian Police patrolling the segregated Abyssinian Native quarter.

He found a crowd of young Abyssinians in and around a Native bar at 7 o'clock and wanted to know why they were not observing the curfew which made it illegal for an African to be out of his house after that hour.

The men told him that Mussolini was no longer their boss and that they were now free citizens in their own country.

The Officer then ordered his men to open fire on the crowd with Tommy guns.

In a minute or two of fierce volleying, seven Abyssinians were killed and 14 wounded.

Clarizeo, in defence, challenged the British military jurisdiction in Addis Ababa on the date of the shooting, and also claimed that he was obeying superior orders to shoot all Africans disobeying the curfew, but brought no evidence to prove this.

He was found guilty and sentenced to death.

Within three days, a young Officer raised an Army of 2,000 Abyssinian Patriots and launched it against the Italians.

The Officer, states a cable from military headquarters in Nairobi, went from here, 100 miles to the south-west, to see three friendly Chiefs.

"I sent our runners to announce my coming," he said, "and people just flocked together.

"By 11 the next morning, about 600 had gathered, and I doled out my 300 rifles.

"There was quite a fight for the last few.

"We started off at 1 p.m., and the army grew like a snowball.

"Horsemen came riding full tilt at us, leaped from their saddles, and jerked the horses to a stop.

"Then they bowed to the ground and joined in the march."

With this improvised force, the Italians were driven from their stronghold and completely routed.

Our Ladies And Marriage

Dear Editress,

Many of our women, spinsters and the like put their great importance in clothes and other cheap decorations of the cardinal point opposite the East. Yes, in this time of light, one has to move with fashions. Our African women have to look well, but they have to be careful not to over-decorate themselves. We sometimes meet ladies with red nails, false hair, painted eye-brows, painted cheeks; powdered black or white faces or tomatoe or blood colour lips.

These make our African ladies very foreign and ridiculous to the eyes of the cultured, educated good-mannered man. How can they expect a good husband? How can they expect to be respected and admired by people who would make good men for them. That is why low class bachelors like to introduce themselves and decide for the so-called morden marriages of the kitchens. These can be avoided. Be natural. Don't copy or mimic some Europeans. Be African ladies of clean healthy manners.

Some African ladies talk too much in the buses, socials and in the streets not in the locations but in towns, suburbs and cities. Shouting to the top of their voices. They should speak with reluctance and reticence. Don't allow everybody to talk to you or introduce himself to you. Respect yourselves. Have virtues. Let gentlemen know that you are ladies of the race. Your very intergrity should recommend respect. They must be proud of you.

THIS WEEK'S THOUGHT

More troubles should be told to the authorities instead of the neighbours.

There's nothing so disgusting as meeting a young lady who is like a parrot or a vain jackdaw. Some go as far as advertising themselves in the public places. Sometimes even washing their home linen in public. Does that auger well for the future of the African women world? Modernism cannot be acquired foolishly. Select good things.

It has been said time and again that African men are wolves-in-sheep's skin. What about our ladies? They expect to get a good husband while they do not wish to improve themselves; but to decorate themselves and invite men to make proposals.

Every race has to advance on the merit of its women folk.

Our African ladies shall one day be ideal people worth-while for Ideal marriages.

High Courage Of African Troops Is Paid Tribute

LONDON—(ANP)—When a Negro private in the Gold Coast regiment at El Wak during the Abyssinian campaign was ordered to take cover lest he be wounded, he laughed and said, "But I'm wounded already."

That is the kind of incident Lieut. Gen. Alan Gordon Cunningham referred to in recent lauding the colored troops he has been commanding in East Africa. Gen. Cunningham said:

"Strange new weapons and unbelievable hardships in unaccustomed climate were faced with steadfastness and never faltering loyalty. In every situation they distinguished themselves. Their spirit, efficiency, burning patriotism and high courage were admired and envied by all."

BORE BRUNT OF FIGHT

The King's African Rifles, who evacuated British Somaliland with the Northern Rhodesian regiment and the Somaliland Camel corps bore the brunt of the desert campaign.

For five days one company of the K.A.R. held a Kenya border post at Moyale against an Italian brigade, which had artillery support, and withdrew only when water gave out. The same regiment captured Afmade—first important objective—when British Somaliland was invaded. They advanced so rapidly that the Italians left Kismayu without a fight.

Last February, across the Juba river, the King's African Rifles hacked a road through dense and featureless bush country under constant bombing, so that a motorized column could pass through to block the enemy's line of retreat 18 miles from Gelib. It was the same regiment which won the victories of Todenyand and Namaraputh, and at Morea set free 179 captured British sailors. They fought without a break ever since Addis Ababa, Abyssinian capital, was taken.

BEAT BACK ITALIANS

Another Negro regiment which helped in the invasion of Somaliland was the Royal West African Frontier force, made up of Nigerians. They lightened the British advance along the coast and took Brava Merca and then the capital Mogadiscio. In four days they covered 350 miles to throw back the Italian infantry and native troops forced to fight with the Fascists.

After Mogadiscio they made the record-breaking advance to Diredawa. Indeed, from Mogadiscia to Harar they took only 30 days to do 1,054 miles. Wet, cold high lands to which they were not accustomed did not dampen their zeal.

There were also the Gold Coast troops from West Africa, to which the wounded private belonged. They won complete ascendancy over the Italians in both Kenya and Somaliland. Their most severe engagement was at Wadara, the decisive battle in the southern hall of the "Battle of the Lakes."

Before all these men fought against the Axis there was a Fascist viceroy in Addis Ababa. They were still fighting when Haile Selassie Conquering Lion of Judah, King of Kings, Elect of God, Emperor of Ethiopia, came into his own again.

SLAVES IN ETHIOPIA EMANCIPATED

A NEWS STORY from London, reports that Emperor Haile Selassie has recently issued an imperial decree abolishing slavery and serfdom from his realm. Accompanying the law abolishing the legal status of slavery, Haile Selassie has ordered the reform of the "Gabor" system. In the future all "Gabars," or serfs, must be paid. Whereas, formerly they tilled the land of their feudal masters without payment, reeceiving a part of the crop for service rendered.

It may be news to many people that chattel slavery still exists in Africa, especially in Ethiopia, in the oldest Negro government in the world. But it is a fact, nevertheless that instead of decreasing in the past half-century, slavery, actually increased, especially in those countries that are mandates of European nations. With Hitler already conqueror of half of Europe, it looks like slavery for many white races is not yet over.

Emperor Haile Selassie's recent experience with the Italians, it seems, caused him to change his ideas about human bondage. His four years of exile in the British Isles must have caused him to realize what Lincoln learned a hundred years before that slavery is degrading not alone to those who are enslaved but also to all who are a part of such a system, the masters as well.

To this extent, at least, the present war in Africa is serving a good purpose.

Education On Rise In So. Africa

By JOHN W. SLAMAT

BRITSTOWN, C.P., South Africa June 27—Colored education has made enormous strides, especially in the Cape Province, said C. R. Rhoda in his presidential address at the opening of the twenty-ninth annual conference of the Teachers league of South Africa at Port Elizabeth. In spite of no compulsory education for their children, average attendance now exceeds 85 per cent. There still remained room for improvement, however.

One thing they regretted was the tendency on the part of a certain section of the community to deprive colored children of the rights of entry into skilled occupations formerly open to them.

In South Africa there were too many who were in the "ditch of ignorance and poverty." To a large degree they were helpless. They must be helped and taught until they become an asset to society.

"We shall have to try to teach our pupils," President Rhoda said, "that although each of them is an end in himself, with a personality which is one of the ultimate sacred things in life, yet they live in a world in which co-operation and co-ordinated effort, not only within any nation, but on a world-wide basis, have become essential for tolerable survival of the human species."

The league was looking forward to the day when the present education subsidy of the colored child would be at least doubled.

Non-European United Front

REGARDED AS UNITED BLUFF

Sir,

I wish to warn my people of the danger of this so—called Non—European United Front.

The Bantu people of South Africa have a long history of hardships under repressive laws. From Union right up to this day, they have been fighting a losing battle against discriminative statutes of all sorts.

For the first time in the history of Bantudom a large scale attempt at unity was made in 1912 when the Congress was founded. The failure of Congress in most cases has been attributable to human factors which as time goes on will inevitably be removed. The Congress still forges ahead with bright future prospects under the leadership of Dr. A. B. Xuma and others. Perhaps the biggest attempt yet made was when African leaders met at Bloemfontein to protest against the passing of the Native Bills. That was a historic date. Never before had the Bantu shown such encouraging possibilities of unity. Human factors again almost shattered the big hopes placed in the All African Convention.

However the important thing here is not that this or the other attempt collapsed or almost collapsed at the altar of tribal or personal jealousies, but that history has been made and another leaf turned in the annals of Bantu political experience. The Bantu are making their own history. They are learning by the mistakes they themselves have made.

Here today we are invited to join the Non-European United Front. By Non-European I suppose the Bantu, Indians, Chinese, Malays and Coloureds are meant. If ever a large scale piece of bluff was conceived by man, this is one. During the tense days of the Native Bills, I still remember how curiously silent the Coloured leaders were on the matter of the inter-racial relations. Mr. A. M. Jabavu, Editor of the Bantu Opinion (Imvo) drew attention to the fact about the position of the Coloured peoples in relation to the African political struggle in the sub continent.

At the time, of course, it was the safer thing for them to do, since they had been given an assurance that their rights would not be interfered with. In fact one was led to the belief that a "new era" where they would have the same rights as Europeans was dawning for them. But what was their consternation when not so long ago the Nationalist Party agitated for their segregation? Really and truly, as far as I am coucerned, it is only then for the first time that I heard of a Non-European United Front. When we went to Bloemfontein the Coloured leaders were silent.

Then we have our Indian friends. At the time of the Native Bills, one prominent Indian warned his fellowmen not to throw in their lot with the Natives as they would stand to lose by such an action. That was quite correct, because our interests are not identical—at least they were not until the Asiatic Land Bill loomed ominously in the Indians' political horizon.

The United Front became a political cry. It was preached through press and platform. Then lastly came Dr. Dadoo—from where? I don't know. I personally had never heard of him before—not in Bantu circles or Bantu affairs at any rate. Dr. Dadoo came into the limelight with rapidity. He was hero worshipped out of a coach and carried shoulder high down a street.

But what is the point in all this? I still assert that the gulf between the Indian and Coloured on the one hand and the African on the other is unbridgeable at present. It is the former people who are not and would not be prepared to meet the Native on a common platform. As long as the tide of events turns against them they are prepared to create a bogey by threatening to co-operate with us by using us as tools to be plain. But even so, they take care to maintain the social distance so that when the storm is over they can safely and easily withdraw into their shells and play "Euro" again.

"East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet"

For the Communists of course such fronts are the "Thing." We should never lose sight of the Communist hope for a world commune. The Communists are trying frantically to unite, as they say, the proletarians of all Nations a very unpractical nonsense in South Africa. It is thus net difficult to imagine the United Front being used as a vehicle for the conveyance and dissemination of Communist propaganda which is a foreign body in this country.

SOUTH AFRICA M P'S SAME AS SOUTHERN BOYS

CAPETOWN, South Africa, Oct. 16—(Delayed ANP correspondence)—Despite what one hears of mistreatment of Negroes in the southern part of the United States, it pales into insignificance usually when contrasted with the treatment which Africans and the so-called non-Europeans, half-breed offspring of whites and blacks, receive in this British outpost of South Africa. Tales of activity of military police recently in North Carolina find a ready echo in this country.

At Martizburg near here recently, the air force put on a show. Naturally the whites, English and Dutch Boers and their descendants went to the event which was held on the Oribi flats, a wide open space. Many natives and colored persons went also. These latter stood at some distance, A. Burgess, an eyewitness reports:

"Even as the mayor spoke fine words, a few yards away military police and members of the South African police assaulted and kicked Africans, East Indians and colored people deriding their presence. Even respectful women and girls were assaulted. Members of the Indian and Maloy corps who are not permitted to bear arms but are similar to your labor battalions in the United States were booted, kicked and chased away notwithstanding the fact that they were wearing the King's uniform. The colored and native populations have contributed generously to war funds but there is growing tension as commentators suggest that the English and Dutch here can be only a little worse than Hitler."

Higher Posts For Africans In Native Areas

Speaking at the centenary celebrations at Lovedale, this week, the Minister of Native Affairs, Colonel Deneys Reitz, announced, that the Government had decided that an opportunity should be given in the civil service for the employment in Native areas of Africans in hitherto been available to them. greater responsibility than had posts of higher grades and of

On behalf of the Union Government, Colonel Reitz congratulated Lovedale on "its century of achievement." Lovedale, he said, had played and was destined to play a great part in the future of South Africa, in dealing with relationships between Europeans and Natives.

Men of every race and colour in South Africa must work together, otherwise the country would be involved in ruin. The section of the people which was unfortunately taking a narrow stand, and who were showing hate and prejudice towards the Native, would pay dearly for their actions. Co-operation was urgently needed. Experience was, however, that when most Europeans talked about co-operation, the Native got the wrong end of the stick.

In examining the question of race relationships, however, it must be remembered that there seemed to be a curse on mankind, and nationalism was being overdone throughout the world, said Colonel Reitz. In Europe—the cradle of civilisation—10,000,000 men were slaughtering each other, and throughout the world hate, narrowness and prejudice prevailed, and South Africa had had experience of it for more than a century.

"You cannot expect to solve race relations in one night," said Colonel Reitz. "It is going to take a very long time to break down prejudice against race and colour."

The picture was gloomy, but one of the bright flashes which appeared on the horizon was the existence of such an establishment as Lovedale.

The men who were conducting Lovedale to-day were torch-bearers, and were doing the right thing towards attaining the right ideal, and were striving after justice for Natives.

CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION

Dr. A. W. Wilkie, Principal of Lovedale, said that throughout the 100 years of Lovedale's existence, certain fundamental principles had always been accepted and had determined the whole policy of Lovedale as a Christian missionary educational institution.

Wishing Lovedale "many happy returns of its notable birth," the Rev. J. Bruce Gardiner on behalf of the Moderator of the Church of Scotland said the Scottish Church had always regarded Lovedale with special pride—the pride of the mothtr in the child of her the mother in the child of her affection.

Representing the London Missionary Society, the Rev. A. J. Haile recalled that Dr. John Love, after whom Lovedale was named, was the first secretary of the London Missionary Society, and that he took an important part in the formation of the Glasgow Missionary Society. The London Missionary Society, he said, greeted Lovedale on its centenary, and praised God for the memory of Dr. John Love.

MEDICAL STUDENTS

Colonel Reitz said that the South African Native Trust was making funds available, by means of which promising students might be provided with bursaries, would enable them to take their first year medical training at Fort Hare, and then go to the Witwatersrand University, which

LONDON—The black populations in the French Colonial Empire who, since the revolution of 1789, enjoyed political equality with the whites, are now disfranchised. Under the new constitution, which has converted democratic France into a full-fledged fascist state pledged to support Hitler's "New Order," all Negroes will now be considered subjects of Vichy.

Senegal in West Africa, Guadeloupe and Martinique in the West Indies, and French Guiana on the mainland of South America, will no longer be represented by Negro deputies in the French Parliament.

The present black representatives, M. Galandou-Diouff, the Negro deputy from Dakar; M. Gratien Candance, the scholarly black deputy from Guadeloupe, and M. Monoville from Guiana, as well as the mulatto senator, M. Henri Lemery, have all been expelled.

At the time when France collapsed, and the Bordeaux junta was negotiating to hand over parts of the colonies to appease Hitler and Mussolini, these men refused to expose intrigues of Petain and Laval. They denounced M. Felix Eboue, the Negro Governor-General of French Equatorial Africa for continuing the struggle on the side of General de Gaulle. As a reward, Petain promised them high office under the new government setup at Vichy following the signing of the armistice.

M. Lemery was made Minister for the Colonies and given the task to recover the Equatorial territories which Governor Eboue detached from Vichy control and placed under the Free French movement. Lemery failed to undermine the influence of Eboue among the Africans and was dismissed from office. Later it was reported that he was placed under arrest, but this was denied by Vichy spokesmen, who, however, confirmed his dismissal from the head of the Colonial Ministry.

The fate of the other colored deputies is unknown. One thing is certain, their citizenship and parliamentary privileges have been revoked and under the new regime former deputies will receive no salary or pension.

Colonials living in territories still under Vichy control will be governed in future by officials directly responsible to Admiral Darlan, who supersedes General Weygand as Vichy "boss" over French Africa.

Native chiefs will be used as agents in the villages to impose the orders of the Vichy officials. They will collect the taxes out of which they will receive a commission in lieu of salary. Recruiting forced labor for military purposes will also be assigned to the chiefs. Already thousands of natives have been rounded up and set to work on fortifications at Dakar under German engineers. It is expected that Hitler will take over this naval base as soon as the work has been completed.

"Crown Colonist" Condemns The Use Of "Nigger" Epithet

LONDON (BM).—"Italy's African Empire has been finally smashed — and a vital part of the smashing has been done by Britain's African Empire," says the current issue of "Crown Colonist" semi-official organ of the British Colonial Office, commenting on the Abyssinian campaign.

From every quarter of the African continent men of a score of races, but all of them British Empire citizens, have travelled vast distances by land, sea and air to join battle with the Italians.

African soldiers from the various territories of East Africa and from the Gold Coast, Nigeria, and other parts of West Africa, have fought side by side — men who normally have lived and died a continent's width apart have learned a new comradeship.

African troops had brilliant successes at Gambela, and in the fierce action at Marda Pass, West Africans bravely stormed strong positions under heavy fire

Somalis from British Somaliland, the most eastern land of Africa, were joined in the Somaliland Camel Corps (mechanised) by men from Nyasaland, and these fine troops fought valiantly in Kenya.

From the centre of Africa came units of the Sudan Defence Corps, striking east and taking part in the capture of Gallabat and in other successful action.

Pointing out that the defence of the Empire depends upon the loyalty and support of the coloured races, the "Crown Colonist" appeals to white people in England to drop the popular use of the term "nigger" when referring to Africans and peoples of African descent.

"Let all who speak the English tongue mark the obsequies of the word 'nigger.'

"Too long current in vulgar speech and story-writers' oaths, an uncalled-for insult to the Negro race, it was coined out of contempt and has persisted only by the usage of the ill-natured and the ignorant.

"It is unworthy of the language we cherish and, because it implies disparagement, is wholly contrary to the spirit of mutual respect which is the essential basis of the community of the British peoples.

"Now the term has been indicted in the House of Commons, the guardian of the rights and liberties not only of Britons but also of every race and people in the Dependencies of the Crown.

"There it has been condemned as offensive to the black and coloured races, many of whom are our fellow-citizens.

"Consequently, it is deserving of banishment from print and broadcast speech.

"Let it never more be heard among us; prevent our children learning it; leave it to perish in the purgatorial fires which shall consume all pretences of race superiority."

While the coloured races of the Empire will welcome the sentiments expressed by so important an organ of British opinion, it is necessary to point out that among the chief offenders are to be found leaders of the British nation.

For example, just recently Mr Beverley Baxter, Tory M.P. and leading Conservative Newspaper columnist, described the West Indian people as "niggers" when Mr R. Stokes, Labour M.P. raised the question of the leasing of bases to the U.S. without consulting the Natives of the islands.

Mr Baxter got up and shouted that Parliament had no time for discussing "nigger problems" and he was not censured by the speaker.

European farmers suffer from a shortage of farm labourers

Farmers do not improve wages, living conditions and housing.

During the discussion at the congress of the Free State Agricultural Union on the 21st. August 1941, on the Native Farm Labour a number of delegates stated that the position was becoming very acute and that it was becoming very difficult to persuade Natives to accept work on farms or to retain farm hands.

They contented that the fault lay to a large extent with municipalities which took little or no steps to weed out vagrants and loafers in the urban locations. They, therefore, passed this motion that congress requests the Government to give serious consideration to the question of farm labour and urges that measures should be adopted for supplying farmers with labour; further that all local authorities should be compelled to enforce the existing Native law strictly.

These European farmers complain that they suffer from a shortage of farm labourers. It is fair to point out that the farmers themselves are to blame because they do not improve wages, living conditions, and housing. Under such circumstances how could they expect Natives, human as they are, to subsist on mealie pap and separated milk day in and day out, when such foodstuffs have not the nutritious elements necessary to sustain a body to provide efficient and better service. It may be possible that most of the farmers who raise a cry about labour shortage are the ones who are harsh and void of human feeling to the inarticulate and suffering Natives who to escape from the torments of some of the farms flee to the urban areas.

They endeavour to coerce the poor Africans, also sons of God, to surrender their labour for nothing. Slavery which was abolished in the British Empire on moral and humanitarian grounds in 1834, they desire to practise openly. They should first improve the farms labour conditions.

Dual Representation By Bantu School Inspectors

Editor,

Teachers in Bantu Government Schools probably read the last minutes of the Native Education Advisory Board with some hopes for the solution of their problems. That the Board is contemplating a representation of Government Schools by Inspectors is enough to warrant an unopposed Society of Government Bantu School Teachers to work hand in hand with the Inspectors who will represent the Government Schools.

Narrow-minded teachers will exclaim "Disunity! Divided we fall, United we stand!" Geometrically speaking, the N.B.T.U. which is the mouth-piece of Bantu Teachers is a triangle. Bantu Teachers in Government Schools, while doing all in their power to support the N.B.T.U. and its District Branches which are catering for the communities and the teachers, shoud have a society where problems peculiar to Government Schools can be satisfactorily boiled down and flavoured. This will of course be another triangle. Two triangles make a four square figure, hence the necessity of a four-square representation in the Native Education Advisory Board.

How can Government School Teachers have a society of their own and yet support the N.B.T.U.? How can this society work without embarrasing teachers in either type of schools i.e. Government Schools and Government Aided Schools? There is only one way out in the mind of the writer. Here it is: Head Teachers of Government Shools should organise themselves into a Union for the purpose of working hand in hand with the Inspectors who directly and indirectly represent them in the Department of Native Education.

My Experiences In The U.S.A.

NEW ORLEANS.

Still in the Jim Crow coach we made for New Orleans which we were all anxious to see because of the historical romance that surrounds this old American city. As soon as we came off the railway station our white colleagues just crossed the street and found a good place to eat. We two had to find a coloured restaurant, and that meant looking around. We walked along one side of the street until we saw a little further on the place we wanted, but as we crossed the lines of the street car (tram) we faced and came nearer a white restaurant; we knew that, because it was marked: "for whites only." In front of the door there was a whiteman standing and gazing at us with a very forbidding frown. I suppose he must have thought that we were coming to enter the restaurant. On reaching the pavement we proceeded straight on to the coloured hotel.

We did a little sight-seeing in New Orleans and I just caught a glimpse of the mighty Mississippi that keeps rolling along. I also noticed that most of the Negroes were segregated to a residential area across the railway track where road and sanitary conditions were certainly deplorable. That was sober fact. The next day we began our long journey to the South Western States where we were to study the position of the Red Indians. We went through Texas where just a week before us the wife of the late Major Moton Ex-Principal of Tuskegee Institute had been forced out of the 1st class seat!

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF COLOUR.

I have not space to tell you how we were refused food in a certain hotel in the country, and how we were refused sleeping accommodation at a certain Y.M.C.A., which was partly financed by the local Negroes! Our white friends called this Y.M.C.A., not the Young Men's Christian Association but the Young Men's Caucasian Association. Social justice was done to us at Los Angeles where the European Y.M.C.A. gladly took us all in.

Well now I have cited several instances where mere colour called forth immediately certain types of reactions. All these various ways of behaviour on the part of the whitemen depend on the recognition of colour or skin pigmentation on the face of some people. Take away that colour and the behaviour of the same whiteman, may be, to the same personality will be different. But the colour cannot be taken away and perhaps it was the pathos of that unalterable fact that made the Negro boy sing:

"Coon, coon, coon, I wish my color was white,
I wish I was a whiteman, coon, coon, coon"

Colour is God-given but man has debased His gift and made it a badge of discrimination and inferiority. Thus the Blackman, to his dying days, carries a permanent mark of his social status.

'What About Abyssinia' Big News in London Circles

NOV 29 1941

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

Every Negro should note with concern the situation of Abyssinia which is manifestly one for serious thought. In the gravity of present world events, it is shameful to witness the deadlock in the restoration of Ethiopian independence which is long overdue.

The British Government is utterly inscrutable; what wretched dilettante business it all is!

The King's speech in the House of Lords with his reference to Abyssinia is very heartening, judging from the importance of the occasion. But it is only a restatement and certainly does not clarify the issue involved.

Since the last war, there have been an innumerable amount of world conferences presided over by statesmen of encyclopedical knowledge. What have they solved? Nothing! Why? Because they were not truthful unto themselves. Look at the Kellogg Pact, which was signed in August, 1928. The world rejoiced exceedingly at the triumph of it because the nations of the world had joined in a solemn declaration that they would never make war an instrument of national policy.

Mussolini described the pact as 'sublime," even "transcendental." Japan declared herself proud to be among the first to accept "this simple and magnanimous treaty." Yet already Japan was preparing to exude her filthy slime like a python to swallow the "wretched goat," Manchukuo. The British Government likewise was making preparations for the sale of Ethiopia in order to buy Mussolini, the brutal and greedy imperialist, the tyrant who massacred the Abyssinians afterwards.

Just pause for one moment and study the condition of mankind

today which was brought about by these wise statesmen. They shout great words but utterly belied by portentous events. Today the Kellogg Pact is not even a memory.

Mr. Churchill Speaks

In one of Mr. Churchill's great rheorical recitals, he described the present struggle as a "forward march of the common people in all the lands towards their just and true inheritance."

I lay no claim to the predictive function of a prophet, but it can be seen clearly that Mr. Churchill's statement was designed for white people and not for colored. The same must be said about the Atlantic Charter, which is like the flimsy fortification of a cobweb.

The outlook of the future seems to be a gloomy consolation for Negroes. The outspoken views and fearless criticisms of the "Manchester Guardian, concerning the British Government's attitude towards Abyssinia, are competent evidence which points to the true facts in the Abyssinian situation.

I reproduce here a recent article in the leader column of the "Manchester Guardian," entitled "Ethiopia:"

"The Emperor of Ethiopia returned to his capital in May. The innocent onlooker thought that after this all would be well. He imagined that the Emperor was already as good as recognized as lawful sovereign of his country and that, apart from the inevitable but slight and temporary pains of transition, he would soon be functioning again as ruler of an independent State. This idea was fostered by the admirable message which Mr. Churchill addressed to him as the first 'lawful sovereign' to return to the country from which he had been driven. But unfortunately, this innocent idea is a delusion. Six months after the Emperor's return, which was regarded by the people of Great Britain as the belated redress of a discreditable surrender, Ethiopia is still administered as 'enemy occupied territory,' our recognition of the Italian conquest has not been formally recognized as de jure sovereign. He is, in consequence, not allowed by us to exercise the rights of a sovereign in undoing the acts by which Italy disposed of Ethiopian rights and property during the occupation. Mr. Eden, on October 1, stoutly repudiated the suggestion that we had any idea of making a 'protectorate' of Ethiopia. Of course not, but both the suggestion and the denial are too general to take us anywhere. Mr. Sandys, who represents the War Office—a very powerful military body which is presumably in charge of Ethiopia as an economy occupied territory—pronounced in the Commons on the Emperor's right to terminate the leases given to Italians in Ethiopia by the Italian Government—leases, that is, of Ethiopian property. He said that the Emperor would 'be in a position" to deal with these leases as soon as the agreement now being discussed between him and our Government has been signed. It is now six months since the Emperor returned. Why is this delay? And what is our title to impose this condition on the Emperor.

British and Abyssinia

"The act by which the British Government of the day recognized the Italian conquest of Abyssinia was bad morals, bad law, and, if anyone is interested in the lower politics, bad bargaining. Selling Ethiopia, in order to buy Mussolini, we were ourselves sold; there can be no opinion about which there would be greater agreement among us. It was, therefore, a duty with the least possible delay to clear our conscience, to repudiate our offense against international morals and law, to go back on our own act, and to recognize the Emperor for what he was and is—the rightful sovereign. Of course, there had to be some period of transition; there had to be arrangements between him and us by which we should help him to defend the country (which he and his people had helped us to regain from Italy), to maintain order, and to put it firmly on the road to peaceful and orderly development. But there is no reason at all to believe that the Emperor, his sovereignty being formally restored (and he thereby being strengthened against the difficult elements among his people), would be unwilling sincerely to give us that cooperation, both in military and in political questions, which is incumbent on both sides. What would be frankly intolerable to public opinion in this country is any suggestion, from whatever quarter in or out of the Government it might come that we should go on treating the Ethiopian State as an enemy occupied territory, that we should regard it as a continuing province for the activities of the War Office, or that we should treat the Ethiopian people as other than the independent masters of their country, a people with whom we intend to be on terms not of a military tutelage but of friendship and alliance.

"How deep is the pit into which we have fallen—unless the Government acts in the plain sense of Mr. Churchill's May message to the Emperor as 'lawful sovereign' —may be seen from Mr. Sandy's reply about the Italian leases. (Why, by the way, should the War Office answer about a political agreement between Britain and Ethiopia?)

"The Emperor, says this War Office representative, connot cancel leases until he has made an agreement with us about 'a large number of complicated matters.' But why not? Ethiopia, herself, never recognized Italy's right; for her these Italian-made concessions lack all validity. Nor did international law and morals ever recognize the conquest. We did, and now we claim that because we helped Ethiopia in the field we have the right, until she has privately agreed with us, to stop her from abolishing illegal contracts based on a short-lived occupation by a fugitive conqueror. Professor Berriedale Keith argues powerfully in 'Ethiopia News' that the concessions lost all validity, legal no less than moral, as soon as the emperor was de facto restored. In any event, it is not for us, who played so sorry a part in confirming Italy's destruction of Ethiopia's rights, now to hamper the Ethiopians in getting them back. Nor can we be deflected from our obligations by any suggestion that we should delay Ethiopia's recovery of full independence in order to connect its economy more closely with that of the neighboring British territories or that, for this purpose, we should try to retain in Ethiopia the Italian civilians of whom she desires to be rid. For some unhappy years our policy was as shameful as it was inefficient. Now is the time to give Ethiopia what we owe to her and also to ourselves."

Equal Rights For Non-Europeans

The Rev. Bernard Sigamoney the well-known Indian minister of the Church of England, will place a motion before the twentieth diocesan synod of the diocese of Johannesburg, which meets in the large hall of Darragh House on Monday, October 20 urging "that this Synod, recognising the sacrifices made and services rendered by the non-Europeans to the cause of Democracy and in defending South Africa and other parts of the world, hereby pledges itself to agitate and educate public opinion for the removal of all legislative restrictions which to-day bar the non-Europeans from enjoying full citizenship."

Mr. Sigamoney's motion for full citizenship for non-Europeans will further ask that a committee be formed to seek the co-operation of other dioceses and public bodies for the furthering of this object.

In a second motion he asks "that no new social order be countenanced until the majority of the inhabitants of this country be given a say in the administration on equal basis with the minority."

Several other motions touch the non-European community. The Rev. H. S. Ram will move "that every European parish be linked up with a non-European parish, preferably one in close proximity, for the purpose of fraternal and practical interest."

Motions with a more general implication urge that the present structure of society should be so modified as to give to each individual the fullest opportunity and help to enable him to become what God intended him to be: that agriculture, industry, commerce and the professional services should be organised to provide every individual, without distinction of race, colour or professed beliefs, adequate covering, shelter, medical care and education.

COLOURED RACES AND THEIR PLACE IN THE COMING WORLD ORDER.

The operation and effective prosecution of the war have elicited the interest and practical co-operation of every section of mankind outside Nazis Germany and Facist Italy with their coteries of hangers on, that there arises justification to the question asked by such section of those on the side of the Allies what is their aim in participating in the struggle? It is a natural question in view of the terrible dislocation the war has already brought about and the destruction which has become the boast and abnormal aspiration [illegible] Hitler has already poisoned things; the chain of thought which marks the relation between one stock of mankind and another. The question of the superiority of one Race over all others have never been promulgated with such virulence, deliberated intolerance and costly prodigality of human lives, and other valuable resources as what the exigencies of this deadly struggle has imposed on the world. It would be impossible to assess the output of human lives, and financial outlay this insensate act of tomfoolery would be costing the world on both sides before victory is won. The conception is simply staggering and could tax every effort of the future historian to present such acts of sheer folly with any sense of fitness. And yet in spite of whatever the conviction may be as to the want of reasonable justification for the unnecessary outlay the war has invoked, the pressing liberation and freedom, the speedy releasing of once free nations but now under rigorous domination of brutal and ruthless Nazi Germany. This project has given a new shade of vision to whatever may be the means of securing that liberation. This attitude of the Government in her avowed determination not to bring the war to an end until the entire and absolute destruction of that evil thing, which has cost the world much inexpressible outlay on every side, becomes a reasonable proposition and the only goal the attainment of which would justify the unprecedented output of men and means which have been so lavishly thrown on the Altar of Democractic Crusading. It is freedom we have lived for; if we have agreed to suffer all restriction, losses and privation; for it, would we spend our all so that the way may be made safe to live as it may appear desirable to us. It becomes a double liability of sacred responsibility on the part of our European Rulers to make special exercise of their sense of responsibility in recognizing the claims of coloured people to the enjoyment of their fullest liberty and the enjoyment of the result of the attainment of victory with the

Opening Of Hofmeyr School Of Social Work

Big Gathering At Rand University

IT was an inspiring scene on Wednesday afternoon at the Johannesburg University, when Mr. J H. Hofmeyr, Minister of Finance and Education presided at the meeting—which stood for the beginning of a great social experiment—the opening of the Jan H. Hofmeyr School of Social Work. Many leading figures were present.

MR. HOFMEYR explained that the Y.M.C.A. had launched this undertaking. During the last two years the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. had been re-established. In that period the Association had put to its credit two important achievements. One of these was the work being done for the troops of all races and the other was this social work.

"The war must eventually come to an end so that the one undertaking is transient," said Mr. Hofmeyr. "This school, however, is of a permanent nature and must outlive the war by many years and will serve generations yet to come.

"Right from the outset the new National Council of the Y.M.C.A. felt that the important part of this work should be for the non-Europeans of this country and this school is the outcome of that desire."

The Minister said that he was very glad that this function could take place within the precincts of the University of the Witwatersrand with which he had been connected one way and another over a considerable period. He was not there that day as Chancellor but he knew that he was speaking for the University in welcoming them all and expressing pleasure that the University should have been chosen as the place where this institution should have come into being. The University staff expressed its willingness to co-operate in the maintenance of this institution.

UNIVERSITY'S PART

"As you know this University has not been behindhand in seeking to further the interests of non-Europeans" said Mr. Hofmeyr. "It has refused to limit the conception of its functions. Only recently I was present at the Alexandra Health Clinic, an important development in which the University of to-day is taking a very important part.

"More recently still this University has thrown open its doors to non-European students in medicine and dentistry, making it possible for the first time for Natives to take the full course in either of these professions."

Mr. Hofmeyr said that he regarded the University as an institution which could do more than any other institution to enable the Witwatersrand to fulfil its destiny. Had there been no mining industry, there would not have been any University of the Witwatersrand. Similarly, had there been no mining industry they would not have had this school of social work.

"The biggest single factor in creating a permanent urban Native population has been the development of the mining industry and its subsidiary activities which have grown around it," said the Minister. The mines had brought into being a permanent urban Native population.

The school now launched would train social workers and they would have to apply themselves to social problems among the non-Europeans. The wage level of the permanent non-European population was low and that was the cause to a large extent of these social problems.

SENATOR RHEINALLT JONES'

Senator Rheinallt Jones delivered the inaugural address of the opening of the Jan Hofmeyr School of Social Work. He described the profound changes which had been taking place in South Africa during the past few years. They were of various kinds he said:

(a) Changes caused in social and economic conditions by the migration of large sections of the European and non-European populations into urban areas, as the result of which the proportion of urban to rural population had grown considerably.

The rural peoples of all races who came to urban areas, often had difficulty in adapting themselves to the new conditions. They had to acquire a new outlook and to learn to live in town conditions. For example, they had to learn sanitation. They had to learn to live with people different from themselves. Their skilled knowledge of work on the farms was of little use to them in the towns, where they took rank as unskilled.

The Senator dealt with wage difficulties and poverty. His address proved most interesting: but space does not permit of our incorporating it in this issue.

It is hoped to reproduce it more fully in next week's issue, as well as an enlarged reference to the address of the Rev. Ray E. Phillips.

Dr. Ray E. Phillips, the Director of the School, outlined the work to be undertaken and asked a number of Natives, who had been accepted as students, to take the front seats in the hall so that audience could see them.

THE BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

JAN 25 1941

8—LAND (BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

If you talk to any European on what he calls "the Native question", the chances are three to one that he will tell you he is in favour of "segregation." What segregation means is not easy to define. To some people it is simply a polite term for domination. For others it represents a genuine philosophy of the colour bar, applied as rigidly as possible. Strictly speaking, however, it should be used, and has most frequently been used by serious writers, to describe a land policy. We understand by segregation, in land matters, that the races are not given the right to buy freely, but that certain areas are earmarked for the Bantu and others for Europeans, with the object of preventing undue racial conflict and friction.

There are two tempting roads down which our feet might stray if we let them. The one is the road of history, when we might describe the evolution of this policy, with the Land Act of 1913 as its main historical landmark. The other road is to argue the pros and cons of this segregation regarding land, about which we may simply say here that while to many of us it seems unjust, and also unwise, to impose a rigid segregation preventing people from buying land where both sides are satisfied with the transaction, yet we must confess that it would be difficult for the less developed tribal sections of the Bantu to retain their land unless their exclusive right to it were protected by law. Turning resolutely from these two paths, however, we shall follow the strait and narrow way of simply describing the land situation as it is.

Land in South Africa may be divided, for our purposes, into four main categories, namely (i) scheduled Native areas; (ii) released areas; (iii) Native-owned land outside scheduled and rleeased areas; (iv) purely European areas. The fourth is of course much the largest of the groups.

1. SCHEDULED NATIVE AREAS: These areas are those which were in Native possession in 1913, and listed as such in the Schedule to the Natives Land Act of that year. They mostly consist of tribal locations and Reserves, but they include also the Mission Reserves in Natal, and a number of privately-owned Bantu farms and settlements, which are not actually tribal reserves, but which are protected on the same lines as tribal reserves.

2. RELEASED AREAS: These areas, comprising altogether some 28,000 square miles, were recognised and defined by the Natives Land Amendment Act of 1936. In these areas Bantu and Europeans may both acquire rights to land. An African wishing to buy land in such an area, and being able to put down the money for it, does not require any special permission of the Government for the transaction. The South African Native Trust, which is the Government acting under a different name and in a special capacity, has been buying land in and adjoining these areas, and has up to the time of writing spent nearly five million pounds in doing so. Note that the Trust may buy land adjoining released areas, but individual Africans need special permission to do this. It is only within released areas that he can buy without permission.

Progressive Bantu farmers would very much like to have better facilities for acquiring individual title to land. They would like the Trust to follow one or both of two courses. The first course is that the Trust, having bought land, should break it up and sell it in individual plots. The other is that the Government should assist the Bantu purchasers of land by loans in the same way that the Land Bank assists Europeans. Provision is made for this under the law, but it has only been done in a small number of cases. None the less, individual Africans who have some money, and find themselves in a position where they could buy land if they had more money, should try applying for a loan of this kind. Applications are made through the local Native Commissioner, and there is an increasing tendency to treat them sympathetically if the aplicant is a man of any substance, or known as a progressive farmer. The areas purchased are being used at present as a supplement to tribal reserves under progressive agricultural management, subject to the payment of an annual rent and the acceptance of certain restrictions, for example on the number of stock owned. These restrictions, though necessary, are not popular with the Bantu.

3. NATIVE-OWNED LAND OUTSIDE SCHEDULED AND RELEASED AREAS: There are still a good many Native-owned farms and settlements outside the released areas. In some cases these are entirely surrounded by a European area, and are sometimes referred to as "black islands". An Act of 1939 gives the Government power to compel people to remove from these "black islands", in which case they would be given the choice between adequate monetary compensation and the offer in exchange of land of equal value. So far this Act has remained a dead letter, and the probability is that it will be used very sparingly. The Government has the right to expropriate "white islands" in Bantu areas, but the situation is not quite as fair as it sounds, because few governments would do this, while it would not be so difficult for a Government to expropriate "black islands".

The cry of the Bantu for more land continues to be an instant one. The day must surely come when individual Bantu will have to be given the right to purchase outside the released areas. In the meantime, the Government on its side should do more to help the Bantu to acquire land inside released areas, while on the Bantu side much has to be done to learn the right use of land, so as to make one morgen produce, under modern methods, as much as four morgen produced under the old, antiquated methods which are still used in so many areas. But this question of the agricultural development and proper use of the land must remain to be considered in our next article.

QUESTIONS:

1. Would you favour (a) a tribe (b) individuals in a tribe having the right to sell or mortgage tribal land? If not, why not?

2. The Government prohibits syndicates of more than six Natives from acquiring land without its special permission. What do you think are the reasons for this restriction? Do you favour it?

DR. TOBIAS BLASTS DUAL CITIZENSHIP AS UNDEMOCRATIC

MAR 1 1941

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Declaring that "America is stupid and short-sighted to think that it can wage successful warfare against undemocratic ideologies and practices in Europe and the Far East without doing anything about similar ideologies and practices at home," Dr. Channing H. Tobias, senior secretary for colored work of the Y.M.C.A., and a member of the Selective Service Advisory Committee, outlined a three-point program for the Negro's battle against defense discrimination at the 30th annual meeting of the National Urban League, held here last week.

"America has not yet included in its defense considerations the abolition of double standards of citizenship," Dr. Tobias said. "And the cold fact is that there is no indicated intention on the part of government or industry to consider the Negro as an important factor in the defense program."

The first for such integration must proceed along three principal fronts, he declared. First, Negroes must win "citizenship rights" to participate in the service training programs along with all other racial groups. Second, they must look to the conservation of their morale through the church and such welfare movements as the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., the Salvation Army, and others. And third—"and most important of all"—they must secure industrial opportunities in defense work.

NEW BOARD MEMBERS ELECTED

Four new members were elected to the Urban Leagues' executive board at the meeting. They were: Judge Myles A. Paige of the Court of Special Sessions of New York City, Mrs. Regina M. Andrews, New York City librarian; Bishop William Scarlett of St. Louis, Mo., and President Frank P. Graham of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N.C.

The executive board elected the following officers for a term of one year: L. Hollingsworth Wood, president; C. C. Spaulding, Lloyd Garrison, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, E. P. Roberts and William H. Baldwin, vice-presidents; Lyles A. Paige, secretary; Charles Poletti, treasurer; and Regina M. Andrews, assistant treasurer.

Re-elected as members of the executive board were: M. O. Bousfield, Pearl S. Buck, Nannie H. Burroughs, Caroline B. Chapin, Hubert T. Delaney, John W. Davis, Fred R. Moore, A. Clayton Powell Sr., Mrs. Alfred H. Schoellkopf, Graham R. Taylor and Paul R. Williams.

Negley Farson's Survey on What Is Happening In Africa Is Fine Job of Reporting

BEHIND GOD'S BACK, by Negley Farson. Harcourt, Brace and Company, New York. 555 pp., $3.50.

Because of the important role Africa is playing and will continue to play in the war, this big new book by the old "transgressor," Negley Farson, is highly important to the student of current events.

A year before the outbreak of hostilities Farson went to Africa, where he spent seven months gathering material for the book, which is a wonderfully informative account of modern Africa and its problems.

"Nobody knows what happens to us down here . . . behind God's back," an elephant hunter in Southern Tanganyika told Farson, hence the book's title. But Farson found out what is happening in Africa and his report is likely to remove that "darkest Africa" impression left in the minds of most readers who know the continent almost wholly through the eyes of the late Henry M. Stanley.

Mr. Farson went first to Southwest Africa, a former German colony, and there he found the Nazis most active, as they are everywhere. He found throughout Africa [one senses that he is tremendously pro - British] that the natives dread the possible return of German rule, much preferring the policies and treatment of the British to any other government.

From Southwest Africa he moved into South Africa, where he talked with the leading political figures, as he did in each of the lands he visited. He interviewed the German fuhrers in each of the mandates and drove hundreds of miles to live in German colonies that are dotted over Africa.

His travels carried him through Tanganyika, which he describes as the finest place in Africa for the white man; Kenya, Uganda, the Belgian Congo, French Equatorial Africa, the Cameroons and the Gold Coast.

Farson's sole companion on this trip was his wife, to whom he dedicates the book as "she was better than any man."

BEHIND GOD'S BACK is a deeply satisfying book, a fine piece of reporting and a brilliant job of writing. It is probably the best work Farson has produced.

Public Health In Lagos

THE last report on public health in Lagos shows that birth rate is 29.6 per 1,000 population, death rate 15.8 per 1,000 and infantile mortality rate 115.2 per 1,000 births. Under the heading for principal causes of deaths at all ages, the following figures have been given:

Measles, one; whooping cough, one; dysentery, two; tuberculosis: (a) respiratory, 11; (b) disseminated, three; malaria, 17; malignant diseases, two; cerebral haemorrhage, three; infantile convulsions, nine; heart diseases, 12; bronchitis, seven; pneumonia 34; pleurisy, four; diarrhoea and enteritis, 14; hernia, three; nephritis, six; congenital debility, 13, premature birth, five; accidental drowning, two; cause of death ill-defined, 11.

It could be seen from this report and the weekly rate that an alarming figure is presented. Expectations of life in the Colony of Lagos, at least among the masses and slum inhabitants, are not a happy affair. The Health Department is not by any means idle about it, but we have before us a serious reason why we must salvage the masses in spite of the war.

We have many great evils to tackle among which are the slums, low standard of living and insufficient medical attention. The African Hospital is most inadequate to meet the need in Lagos as well as that of the adjoining towns. We must do something to save the people.

Husband Is Arrested After Coroner's Inquest On His Wife

The final hearing was concluded at the Ebute Metta Court in the inquest on the body of Madam Iyabo Adebowun who died on July 20 a few hours after the delivery of a baby boy at Adana Village, Suru Lere, and a verdict of death due to natural causes but was attributable to and accelerated by the culpable act of negligence on the part of the husband, Mr Benjamin Coker, was returned.

Benjamin Coker who gave evidence in the Court was immediately served with a warrant of arrest, conducted to the dock and after being informed of his offence was granted bail in a surety of £25 and another £25 in his own recognisance.

Mr Coker, in his evidence, stated that he was the husband of the deceased and they lived in the same house at Adana Village before her death, when he left for Abeokuta where he now lived.

He was present during the travail of the deceased and at 12 o'clock mid-night, she complained of stomach trouble.

At her consent, he brought her friends to look after her and ten minutes later she gave birth to a baby boy but all attempts to discharge the after birth failed.

He brought some Native doctors who made fruitless efforts up to 3 a.m. after which he cycled down to Lagos to arrange for a taxi to convey her to the African Hospital but he was not successful.

At 5 a.m., he went to the African Hospital but was directed to Tinubu Central Station and on arrival he did not knew to whom application should be made to obtain an ambulance, and he returned home to find that his wife had died and alone with the new baby in the room.

He reported this to the Health Office and also added that he could not give positive opinion about the babe as he had ceased crying and showed no sign of presence of life until he got home and met a Medical Officer, who cut the umbilical cord; the child then cried.

He said that the child was still living.

He said he had no money to engage the services of a Medical Officer and when the deceased delivered her two other living children, he treated her himself.

The jurors retired and on resumption said that they agreed with the evidence of the Medical Officer, Dr Isaac Ladipo Oluwole, and verdict was returned respecting the negligent act of the husband which ultimately hastened the death of his wife.

He was arrested and bail was granted pending trial.

Drumming Baptist

For years the doomful sound of drumming in the Congo night struck white men weak with fright. Black tribesmen, pounding out an ominous drum language of their own, threatened death to pale interlopers.

Of late the white man's telephone has made many tribesmen lose respect for their ancient art of drum conversation. They have forgotten their drum vocabulary, the drum names given them at birth.

From Stanleyville, Belgian Congo, Chicago *Daily News*man George Weller last week told how a young British Baptist missionary had gone so far native as to revive drum talking. John Carrington, 29, learned the drum tongue from a tattooed old drum master, Lifindiki Tuaytolo, freely translated as Quarrelsome Smith. Missionary Carrington and Quarrelsome Smith taught young tribesmen how to converse with a two-toned hollowed wood drum.

Newsman Weller stood near by when Drummer Carrington spotted a hippopotamus' nose above the muddy Congo waters, banged out the suggestion that surrounding tribesmen kill the beast. They whammed the reply: "We cannot overpower majesty of his jaws." When storm clouds rose, Carrington socked out: "Bad man, son of disease, is coming down upon clods of earth." Tribesmen began closing the doors of the wicker huts.

Newsman Weller guessed that Drummer Carrington's enthusiasm might preserve drum talking for at least a few more years in the Stanleyville neighborhood. But even in Africa change is inevitable. Today, when Quarrelsome Smith wishes to refer with his drums to a white man, he politely beats: "White man spirit from the forest." In his youth he would have walloped: "Death on the river."

A Message Of Hope

The striking tribute paid by the Prime Minister, Field-Marshal Smuts, to the African forces in his broadcast last week has sent a thrill of hope throughout the length and breadth of Africa. For in this tribute he included African and Coloured soldiers who shared in the historic destruction of Mussolini's East African empire. The part which is being played by Non-Europeans in this titanic struggle against the forces of Nazi tyranny is not being given sufficient publicity in the European Press and, therefore, very few people know of the efforts and the sacrifices that are being made. General Smuts has, therefore, rendered Africa a great service by revealing the fact that Non-European soldiers shared with their white comrades in arms the glory of being the first to give the first great knock in this war to the solid Axis front.

There can be no doubt that in West Africa, where the South African white man is disliked for his race and colour prejudice, General Smuts's praise of the black troops which took part in the East African campaign has given a sigh of relief and a thrill of hope that white South Africa is after all gradually outgrowing its traditional attitude to the African. It will be remembered that West African troops and the King's African Rifles played no mean role in driving the Italians out of Somaliland and Abyssinia. They participated in the historic drive from the borders of Kenya to Addis Ababa. Indeed they were the first to enter Mogadishu, the capital of Italian Somaliland, and they took part in the fight at Diredawa, Awash River and Addis Ababa.

The acknowledgement by General Smuts of their valour and gallantry will go a long way to create a better feeling between white and black in Africa and thus pave the way to interracial co-operation even in time of peace. It is no exaggeration to aver that General Smuts has shown some real greatness of heart which will attract in its turn a genuine spirit of co-operation from our side.

To-day, white and non-white inhabitants of this continent are working and fighting together for the defence of Africa's freedom against Hitler's greed for world domination and the tyranny of his system of government. This co-operative action has demonstrated to the outside world the fact that Africans of all races and colours are united in their efforts to drive Nazism and Facism out of Africa, because under these systems there can be no hope for this continent and its inhabitants who, for nearly a century, have been developing a peaceful life that is destined to enable Africa to play her part in the drama of human development and civilisation. These co-operative efforts of the peoples of Africa against the common enemy are paving the way for a spirit of friendliness which is essential for the creation of a new Africa after this devastating war—an Africa in which every race shall enjoy the fruits of its labour and have the opportunity to develop its life for the benefit not only of itself but also of humanity as a whole.

Africans are not only proud of the achievement of the men of their race in this murderous war of Hitler but also of the recognition of that achievement by Africa's leading statesman. They feel that this recognition augurs well for the future, and that it will facilitate the recruitment of more Africans for military service anywhere in Africa and in the Middle East. "From Abyssinia", says General Smuts "the scene has now shifted to North Africa, and there to-day the largest forces which South Africa has ever sent to a war front, face the formidable foe." There can be no doubt that African troops will be required in this theatre of war.

Recently the Minister of Native Affairs announced that the Government wanted 40.000 more Africans for military service, and we hope that this appeal has not fallen on deaf ears. This war is not a white man's war; it is a war in which all the races of mankind are involved. It is Hitler's war against freedom of speech, of thought and of action and against human progress and development. That being the case, the Africans are bound in their own interests to take a stand on the side of those who have arrayed themselves against the forces of Hitlerism. Let us not be deceived; there is no room for the Africans within Hitler's system of government except that of servitude. While we are proud of what African soldiers have done so far, let us not rest on their laurels. Let us redouble our efforts to swell the efforts of those who have dedicated their lives for the fight for freedom.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 20, 1941.

Not Playing the Game

NOV 2 0 1941

On the occasion of the opening of the new Bantu Social Centre in Durban last Saturday Col. Deneys Reitz in his opening speech outlined the Government's policy for the future of Bantudom in these words: "We feel that to have a depressed class is a weakness in any nation. It is a difficult problem, and I am not prophesying any tangible results, but we are hoping that there will be very useful results from the commission's appointment."

It is assuring to that section of the Union's population to which we belong to know that there is a growing number of the members of the dominant race in this country who have a broader vision of the relations that must ultimately exist between Black and White. These realise that the African too must share in the wealth that he daily toils to make for South Africa.

This group of South Africans is realizing the fact that Europeans have a responsibility to the African which they have not faithfully discharged. It may not be generally known that as the result of the many handicaps specially designed to thwart the progress of the Bantu, there has been engendered in numbers of the latter an erratic determination to calm their consciences that if they rob a member of the European race they are not committing a misdemeanour. It would appear that a certain percentage of thefts in most urban areas shows that these are committed as much to make a means of satisfying hunger or want as to repay the White man for his determination to deny them the right to opportunity and for his insisting on the Africans remaining always the children of Gibeon to the present-day "Israelites."

This complex is most unfortunate and undesirable as it is never likely to make of our people a respectable race. Wealth acquired unjustly may one day take wings and fly away to the misery of the one who committed the theft.

History fully proves that to have a depressed class has not made the depressors themselves happy and that not until a reformation has taken the place of oppression, has any country lived a peaceful life—where wrongs to the oppressed had been removed.

The hope expressed by the Minister shows that there is a growing number of European citizens who feel that they have not played the game with the African in this country. The African has been neglected in the matters of education, remuneration for labour done and health. He is now on the way to be classed as a dying race. The blame for all this is naturally laid on those who exercise lordship over the submerged section of the population.

However, it is not yet too late. If the number of citizens similarly minded as our present Minister be increased the situation may yet be retrieved and the Bantu race preserved from further deterioration and decimation. But the root of all this is the ruinous superiority-complex which would have all the good things of a country reserved only for the powerful in money and arms and thus stifle all attempts at self-improvement by the oppressed.

AFRICAN CHILD WELFARE

African Child Welfare and Benevolent Society

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT, 13th, NOV. 1940.

DEC 14 1940

In submitting the first annual report of the Society, your officers record with pleasure a year of excellent progress and satisfactory achievements.

The Society came into being on the 31st October, 1939 after an amount of preliminary work through the Press and Meetings at Schauder Township, Korsten and New Brighton, which served to rouse the interest of the African people in the need for social welfare organization.

The year has been fraught with all the difficulties which usually confront the establishment of social organizations, and the members will agree that the African community in particular, which has not an appreciation of the benefits of organized societies catering for their welfare, is perhaps the most difficult of all fields to organize.

Early in the year your Society succeeded in having well organized branches operating in Schauder Township and New Brighton, and the combined efforts of these branches together with your general committee resulted in obtaining from the Port Elizabeth City Council a rent-free cottage at New Brighton and Schauder Township, for the purpose of establishing children's creches. The establishment of these creeches called for a numerous amount of organization work, the soliciting of public support and much personal sacrifices on the part of branch committee members. The existence of the children's creeches now filling a very urgent social need in the way of offering health and uplifting care to an average of twenty children daily is the best reward which your Society officers desire as a result of their self sacrificing efforts.

The establishment of these creches has succeeded in proving the worth of the Society beyond dispute and has served as an indication of how much valuable service to the African people can be left undone, unless the African people organize to give themselves social welfare benefits. Your officers feel that the result of the past year's activities that there is valuable work that can be done.

During the second half of the year under review, your officers felt it was desirable to establish the Society's organization on a sound businesslike basis, and members will be pleased to know that through the influence of Mr J. Boss, an anonymous donor has presented an office in the heart of North End for one year, rent free, and as Mr Boss has kindly consent to equip this office, we have the important matter of the Society's headquarters now established. This important step now enables us to develop an office complete with official records of all our activities, and providing a central place from which we can administer the central of the creches and attend to the interests of the community in investigating and helping them to obtain a social service in keeping with the objects of the Society.

The Constitution that is before you for acceptance, will ensure the control of the Society's affairs along the lines of sound government, and standing orders will be introduced as the occasion demands to ensure sound control of all meetings of the Society. We are therefore pleased to record that during this past year we have succeeded in soundly establishing the Society as a necessary part of the social welfare of the African Community. We have created Society headquarters with a sound business organization to control our affairs and we have shown our practical value to the community in the establishment of two children's creches.

Special thanks are due to Senator Malcomess for material assistance given by collecting £10 from Ohlaver's Trust and Assurance Co., £10 from the N.R.C., £50 from the Board of deferred Pay Control, Mr J. Neil Boss for £10 subscribed to our vegetable fund as well as supplying the creche with six gallons of milk per week. Mr D. R. Samuel for devoting much time and thought towards straightening the finance of the Society and getting it under perfect management, and Mrs J. B. Wright for invaluable supervision and guidance at the creches, the M. O. H and his staff for medical advice of the Creches. P.E. Municipality for cottages granted rent free and the Superintendant of New Brighton for assistance given during times of functions.

We look back over the year with the feeling that there has been much to do and realise that there is still more to be done. We feel that a satisfactory year's progress can be recorded and although we have had many set backs through opposition to the aims and objects of the Society, we feel that much of this is due to misunderstanding which recent months have helped to remove and we believe that the stage is now set for an excellent year's work.

We want a definite membership enrolment of creches truly indicative of the interest of the African people, and armed with this, there is no reason why the Society should not venture out this year on what might prove to be one of the most outstanding pioneering efforts in the interest of the uplifting of the African community.

There is much valuable legislation from which the African people might draw many real benefits and your officers are confident that the income derived from various subsidies and assistance obtained from the Department of Social Welfare for meeting the needs of distressed families, will be possible in the very near future.

There is a crying need for establishing sound social welfare centres in our peoples townshih areas, and at an early date your Society should have before it a complete programme of forward movements with which to solicit the active co-operation of all members of the Society.

F. S. K. THAELE.

Licensing African Native Doctors

Recognition To Be Given To Herbalsts Assocation

A SOCIETY of which not enough is known is the Herbalists Association established several years ago and of which the late Sidney S. Hayford was the Secretary The society published an important book showing the many practical uses of African herbs and leaves and urged that more extensive use should be made of them. NOV 30 1940

The Association however has set itself a wider task than this: It is the attempt to bring together and regulate the activities of the African "native doctors" in this country. It is a well known fact that among this section there are many quacks who do more harm than good. Some have a slight knowledge of herbs but the majority fool themselves and their patients into believing they know everything. The result is that human life is endangered, sometimes seriously so, when it could just as easily be preserved.

PRESERVING HUMAN LIFE

When we consider how careful Governments here and elsewhere, are about the activities of members of the regular medical profession, it is all the more surprising that this "unlicensed ...tion who minister to the public health should be allowed to carry on their activities without any supervision whatsoever

The first step to supervise African native practitioners is to give recognition to the Herbalists Association. As we recognise the evil medicinal practices in currenc, so must we recognise the remedy. We understand that the joint Provincial Councils of Chiefs proposes to do so, and we trust that something concrete will materialise early.

SORTING GOOD FROM THE INDIFFERENT

First of all it is essential to put a large scale sorting process in operation. The qualifications of the various herbalists in each district should be examined by the chiefs or subchiefs concerned with the aid of members of the Herbalists Association and the real "doctors" sorted from the obvious quacks. Licences should then be granted to the proficient herbalists.

The next measure which suggests itself is the enactment of legislation prohibiting the practising of persons not in possession of an official herbalists licence. It would be necessary to solicit the help of Government in this connection but the Provincial Councils should not have much difficulty in getting Government's approval of the legislation. NOV 30 1940

It must be borne in mind that at present there is nothing whatever to prevent bad or indifferent medicine men from practising, and while the police may in some cases convict a man of poisoning—a thing which anyway seldom frutuates—loss of life continues to occur and the chief evidence to secure a conviction is never available, namely the deceased person

The above steps are most immediate. Nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of prompt action

GENERAL DE GAULLE'S STATEMENT

General De Gaulle's headquarters makes the following official statement: "Vice-Admiral Platon (Minister for the Colonies in the Vichy Government) has recently broadcast a communication in connection with the offer made by General de Gaulle for the exchange of prisoners.

"While General de Gaulle will not reply to the implications contained in this communication the Commander-in-Chief of the Free French Forces wants to protest against an untruth told by Vice-Admiral Platon including the Bishop of Libreville (Monseigneur Tardy) in the list of prisoners who were to be exchanged or could guarantee the safety of the Free French Forces. General de Gaulle formally denies that he ever contemplated that the Bishop of Libreville, who is not a combatant, could be included in any exchange of prisoners to be regarded as hostages.

"It is pointed out that Monseigneur Tardy has already been treated by the Free French Forces with all the respect due to his religious calling. In indulging in an accusation of this kind Vice-Admiral Platon has shown once more what the explanations of those who cooperate with the enemy are worth."

Bantu Women Defended

Editress,

May I draw the attention to Mr. Nzima in regard to his article published on February 8.

I greatly sympathise with you Mr. Nzima for in reality you may be one of the very few upright and honest men.

You blame women for flirting. I doubt if you took any pain to think seriously about your subject before you sat down to write; for if you did you should not have written so bluntly about women.

There are flirts on both sides but many a good woman has been put out of tune by bad men.

If men are SCARED about the behaviour of their wives behind their backs as you put it: Do the women not suffer from the pang of anxiety? You should not be one sided, Mr. Nzima, but face the facts like a man.

Flirting on the whole has become a hobby amongst both sexes. But one thing definite people are not alike. Sometimes a good person is never destined to his kind. FEB 22 1941

What do you think of a man who leaves his young wife all day and all night with no one to talk to except the reflection of her own face in the looking glass? Surely life is bound to lose much of its zest; and she can easily fall a victim to temptation. To such a lonely woman flirtation grows to be a veritable tonic to her lonely heart, and yet such evil practice spell disaster to the soul.

Falsehood and deceit has taken its toll of many noble hearts and the tentacles of disillusionment has often crushed remorselessly even the bravest of hearts.

I hope Mr. Nzima next time you write remember the quotation from the scriptures which says:—"Why seest thou the mote in thy brother's eye but the beam that is in thy own eye thou considerest not."

Dead Mother & Living Baby Were Locked Up In One Room

OCT 2 1941

The circumstances surrounding the death of Madam Iyabo Adebowun aged 29 years, wife of Mr Benjamin Coker of Abeokuta, who gave birth to a baby at 4 a.m. on July 20 and died that day at about 6 a.m., were revealed at the inquest held in Ebute Metta Court.

Doctor Isaac Ladipo Oluwole, who performed the autopsy, said that on the receipt of a note at about 1 p.m. on July 20, calling his attention to the corpse of a woman and that of a baby at 6 Adana Village, Suru Lere, he arranged to collect them.

He went to the spot and there found a woman dead in a pool of blood and a child still attached to the dead mother in a room with windows and the door closed.

Witness said that he separated the child at about 1.30 p.m. and took it personally to the Marsey Dispensary where it is being cared for.

In his opinion, the primary cause of the death of the mother was anaemia due to bleeding from after-birth, the many blood-sucking hook-worms which were present in her bowels and to the destruction of her blood vessels by malaria.

The normal spleen weighs six ounces approximately and that of the deceased weighed 19 ounces, due to malaria infection and her lungs, bowels and kidneys were very pale from anaemia.

The right lung was adherent to the chest wall from pleurisy and 16 common round worms were found in her bowels.

He certified that the deceased died from natural causes, but he was of the opinion that the death was attributable to, or accelerated by, culpable conduct on the part of her people for not seeking proper medical aid before the after-birth was retained and the culpable conduct extended further when the child was allowed to be attached to the dead mother in a pool of blood without care.

Witness said that he had no intimation that the child was alive until he got there.

Badaru Barber, who lived in the same house with the deceased, gave evidence together with Police Constable Peter Faronuwa.

The Court found it necessary to hear the evidence of the husband who had been subpoenaed from Abeokuta and further hearing was adjourned till Friday, September 9.

A Crime To Be Black

AUG 23 1941

PEOPLE who have the good fortune to live outside of the ambit of pass laws in the Union of South Africa may imagine that these operate merely for the good conduct of those under its yoke. But those who have frequently suffered from their operation have genuine cause to feel strongly the need for their modification if not abolition. These are made operative to control the Africans in their travels and conditions of life — something quite unknown with the other races living in the subcontinent.

A typical operation of these pass laws was seen a fortnight ago when in one of the Durban branches of the G.P.O., an elderly and grey-headed member of the Bantu race entered to transact business. His business was to receive cash for a five-shillings Postal Order. On giving the official the Postal Order, which he scanned, the order was given that before having it cashed a pass must be produced by the African. He was stunned and stood there wondering why the law was so constructed that it should apply so harshy upon him and members of his race. On this occasion there were a good number of Indians transacting similar business and they were attended to without demur.

This old African happened to have the required tax exemption and, rather than walk or travel back to his home for the required pass he presented it. But even then it was not cashed at once as the official now criticised his signature.

This was a ridiculous objection as he had cashed many similar Postal Orders using the identical signature without any question. Other customers who were there were surprised at the incident and thanked their stars that they do not belong to the Bantu race.

The old African happens to be a well known man and has lived in Durban for many years and has never been charged with committing any crime. He told us that he is a rate payer of this city and if he had a white-skin he would be enjoying the franchise which his colour disqualifies him for that honour.

He has two sons to land in Durban and well-behaved, but in entering a Government office he is at sight nothing but a potential criminal who must be scrutinized before a Postal Order can be cashed for him. Not all Postal officials insist upon this even if the law authorises them to submit all Africans to this indignity when they enter a Government department to transact business.

In the private business houses no question is made as to whether the money spent has been faithfully acquired or stolen. Why then does the Government make such a humiliating law for the Africans that they must always hand their passes in certain public offices?

In the evening of Sunday the 12th October, the Management of the Bantu Social Ceutre arranged the first of a series of concerts which will be held every Sunday night at the New Centre. These will be Free Concerts, members requested to bring one guest on these occasions.

Half-an-hour before the commencement of the concert the brilliantly lighted City was suddenly transformed to a black City without sirens wailing their note of warning for one of the longest Blackouts the City has ever experienced, having lasted eight hours.

This blackout did not stop members and their guests finding their way to the Bantu Social Centre and in 15 minutes' time there was an audience of over 100 waiting for the show to begin.

They were not kept waiting long when the curtains were drawn and Mr. B. B. Mavundla, Manager and Conductor of the Morning Stars Touring Troupe appeared and announced their first item. The programme included African Songs, Sketches, and Tapping, everyone of these items was highly apreciated by the audience who accordingly applauded.

Mr. Mac. P. Mottar a member of the Bantu Social Centre very kindly volunteered and gave a Trumpet Solo (unaccompained).

Many of those who attended wished that these concerts could be a regular feature of the Centre which only showed that they really enjoyed the programme.

Appalling Chaos In Native Education

OCT 11 1941

The reasons for the present "appalling chaos" in Native education in the Transvaal were analysed by the Rev. F. A. Winter C.R. in an address recently delivered to the Education Committee of the Transvaal Teachers Association.

Father Winter pointed out that the total enrolment of Native scholars in primary schools in the Transvaal was about 121,000, which represented about one-third of the children of school-going age. For the other two-thirds there were neither proper schools nor qualified teachers available. All available space in existing Native schools was full to overflowing.

Each province, said Father Winter, administered Native education separately, the cost being borne by the Government. In the Tranvaal the Education Department paid the salaries of all teachers, but the Department provided practically nothing for buildings or equipment. The salaries of Native teachers were "shockingly low."

The speaker considered that the lack of funds, and the inadequate pay of Native teachers, especially in the primary schools, were the principal difficulties in the way of better educational facilities for Natives in the Transvaal.

Dealing with the first of these, he said: "The appalling chaos and lack of steady growth in Native education is due to the failure of the Central Government to make adequate grants for this purpose. The remedy lies in the education of public opinion. Ultimately, the cost of Native education must come out of the nation's revenue and be voted for exactly as is that of European education.

"At the moment there is a block grant which never varies, and thus does not arouse criticism in Parliament. The rest comes from the Native Development Fund, which is financed out of direct Native taxation. It is ridiculous that the poorest section of the community shuld thus be expected to pay for its own improvement. Native education is the Cinderella of the public services."

On the subject of pay for Native teachers, Father Winter said that better scales were urgently necessary, and that proper provision should be made for the superannuation of Native teachers. At present no provision was made for pensions for any Native teachers, whether in primary or secondary schools.

BERLIN RETICENT ON AFRICAN WAR

NOV 23 1941

But the High Command Admits That Britain's Tank Forces in Libya Are Strong

ITALIAN UNIT IS ATTACKED

Ariete Division Is Hit Again—Axis Troops Are Reported Striking Back in Desert

BERLIN, Nov. 22 (U.P.)—Official military spokesmen were reluctant to comment on the North African fighting tonight, but it was noted that the High Command, after having mentioned Axis counter-attacks for two days, merely stated that German and Italian troops were engaged in a heavy battle with "strong British tank units."

It is too early to speak of anxiety here. But it was with extreme reserve that a German military spokesman indicated that the Libyan battle was in the balance. German quarters have made no attempt to conceal their realization that General Erwin Rommel is fighting against a strong foe.

New Attack on Italians

ROME, Nov. 22 (AP)—A "strong new attack" on the Italian Ariete Division deep within the Libyan desert was acknowledged today by Stefani, official Italian news agency, which said that the British were broadening their front.

A correspondent indicated that the Axis troops were striking back with hard counter-attacks and reported the destruction or capture of many British vehicles and the taking of many prisoners.

Fierce, day-long efforts of the Tobruk garrison to open a breach through Axis siege lines, the dispatch said, were frustrated by the Italians.

NOV 23 1941

The dispatch described as heavy the British losses in the fighting on the Ariete Division's sector. The agency previously had reported the British halted there.

Stefani said that Italian and German planes, working "effectively" with the land forces to beat back the British, had destroyed a number of tanks and trucks. Italian fighter pilots reported that they had shot down two United States-made Curtiss planes in air combats. Italian bomber crews claimed hits on the British defenses at Tobruk.

Menace Acknowledged

Without acknowledging the loss of specific Italian positions, an authoritative source said that "a British menace does exist." He accused the British of "serious inaccuracies" in their Cairo communiqués.

Stefani said that the British, in launching their Libyan offensive, sought to open a second front against the Axis to satisfy demands for aid to Russia; to rupture the Axis by putting Italy out of the war; to free British Mediterranean forces for defense of the Caucasian oil fields, and to break the siege of Tobruk and effect the conquest of all of Libya and "absolute mastery of the Mediterranean."

On the Ethiopian front, the communiqué acknowledged, the Italians were undergoing further heavy British attacks in the Gondar area. With the Chelga garrison isolated, it was said, an Italian supply motorcade fought a bloody four-day battle to break through from Gondar with supplies for Chelga.

The defenders of another garrison on the Gondar front, Culquabert, have been resisting since yesterday and have launched bayonet counter-attacks against preponderant British forces, the communiqué added. The garrison has been pounded continuously for eight days by British artillery and planes.

Work of A.M.E. Church in South Africa Growing

Says Prof. J. R. Coan, M.A., D.D.

JUL 12 1941

Little known and somewhat isolated from Durban's Church life, Ebenezer Mission, Overport, has been having about its grounds a distinguished visitor from Evaton in the Transvaal, in the person of tall, scholarly and kindly Professor Joseph us R. Coan, M.A., D.D., Negro Superintendent of Wilberforce Institute, Dean of the Wilberforce Theological Seminary and Acting Superintendent-General of the Africa See of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Speaking at a reception held in his honour in the A. M. E. Church building at Mayville last Saturday evening, Professor Coan made reference to the significance of African Methodist Episcopal work in Southern Africa. Exhorting the Mayville congregation to work with one mind, he assured them that if they made a start on the road to building a new Church for the Durban congregation, he would help them to set up a building which would not only be the pride of the Africans, but would be a monument of African achievement.

Reviewing his work at Wilberforce he said he had come to Africa with the sole aim of training Ministers of religion. Shortly after his arrival in this country, however, he was suddenly called to the Principalship of Wilberforce and also appointed Superintendent of the community clinic at Evaton. When Bishop R. R. Wright left for the United States, his successor, Bishop Reid found it not possible, because of the War, to come to South Africa and the administration of the Church's affairs fell into his hands.

MAKING PROGRESS

In spite of difficulties, Wilberforce Institute had been able to steer ahead and make definite progress. She had won the confidence of Government departments interested in African development. Apart from salary grants she now received a grant of £500 from the Government and was proceeding with a building programme to extend over a period of about four years. There had been additions to the staff and in direction this Wilberforce sought to have more and more graduates.

The work of the Church had made steady progress and he hoped that much more would have to be done in the future. He did not know when, but was certain that some day Durban would have an edifice in which to worship as good as, if not better than, Cape Town's. The growth or otherwise, of A.M.E., work, Dr. Coan said, is to the credit or discredit of the African. The African has to make his Church strong. It is now the monument of his achievement. The world has a strange notion of things African. It believes that whatever is the product of African hands is inferior. It is for the African himself to educate the world out of this attitude, not merely by words, but by actual achievements. The African must create an atmosphere where thoughts that associate inferiority with his work and achievements shall not survive.

The Church, continued Dr Coan, had to make a great conquest—it was fighting a righteous battle and it need

The Need For Co-Operation

AUG 2 1941

The need for co-operation between white and black was the keynote of the speech delivered by the Minister of Native Affairs, Colonel Deneys Rietz, at Lovedale last week. The Minister said "men of every race and colour in South Africa must work together, otherwise the country would be involved in ruin. The section of the people which was unfortunately taking a narrow stand, and who were showing hate and prejudice towards the Native, would pay dearly for their actions. co-operation was urgently needed."

This statement, coming from an influential member of the Government, will be highly appreciated by all men and women, be they white or black, who are working for harmony and co-operation between the races. It will encourage them to carry on the good work for which they have dedicated their lives. There was a time when Europeans who preach the gospel of inter-racial co-operation were regarded in political circles as Negrophilists who wanted to put silly ideas into the black man's mind. We are glad that responsible men in South Africa are supporting the policy of making the white man and the black man realise their inter-dependence and the fact that the prosperity and progress of their joint-fatherland depend upon the creative co-operation of the two races.

Colonel Rietz did not only call upon South Africans of all races and colours to work together for the good of their country but he also showed that the Government was prepared to do likewise. He announced that the Government had decided to give "an opportunity in the civil service for the employment in Native Areas of Africans." By this action the Government has set an example which we hope will be followed by the people. This is a step in the right direction and it will make the African feel that he was now not an outcast in his own country but a citizen with certain privileges and responsibilities. People of whatever race or colour will not be content unless they feel that they are part and parcel of the system that controls their lives; and they will not be satisfied unless their affairs are directed by men of their own race and language, who share their customs, understand their character and sympathise with their aspirations.

The opening up of positions of responsibility to Africans will go a long way to restore confidence in the justice of the white man's rule. It will prove to us that the white man wants to live and let live, that he is willing to allow the African to develop his life to the full and to use his ability in the building up of his national life. We welcome this gesture of goodwill because it is the first instalment of the privileges to which we are entitled by virtue of the fact that we belong to the human race.

But Africans must know that privileges that are being granted to them carry with them heavy responsibilities. No person, whether black or white, is entitled to state recognition if he is not prepared to perform his duties to the satisfaction of those in authority. It will be the duty, therefore, of those Africans who will be appointed to these posts to prove not only the ability of our race to fill such posts but also its honesty of purpose. It is needless to say that their failure will not be regarded as individual but as racial failure, while their success will be looked upon as the success of our race. It will be remembered that whenever a request was made that educated Africans should be given responsible positions in the civil service, the answer has invariably been that the time was not yet ripe. It rest, therefore, with those who will be called upon to man these new posts to prove conclusively that given a chance, the African can hold his own. In other spheres of employment and certain professions Africans have proved their ability and their sense of responsibility. We are, therefore, confident that the same thing will happen in these posts.

Let South Africa Be Realistic

The vexing question, whether or not the Africans in this country should be armed for military service in this gigantic war, which is now devastating Europe and which is spreading to Asia and Africa, has been brought to the fore by Colonel Deneys Reitz, Minister of Native Affairs. Expressing his personal opinion, Colonel Reitz told a Press representative in Durban that "I feel that we, here, are deliberately depriving ourselves of valuable fighting material."

No doubt the Minister will be severely criticised in certain quarters, and be stigmatised as "a Negrophilist" and a menace to European security and superiority. But all right thinking men will endorse his opinion. The policy of not arming Africans for the defence of South Africa was conceived in the womb of fear by men who knew that they were not giving the African a square deal, and that they were not prepared to allow the African to take his rightful place in the national life of South Africa. Because of this unreasonable and undemocratic attitude, they felt that the arming of the African would endanger their authority and undermine the security of white civilisation. These men never thought that the illtreatment of the African constituted a serious menace to the security of civilised life. No, they only thought that disarmed, the African would be rendered helpless and harmless.

With this policy it is no use to quarrel to-day. The men who gave birth to it are fast disappearing. Their place in our national life is being taken by men who realise that South Africa is the common heritage of the two races which, for good or ill, are destined to live side by side. Their task, therefore, is to find in diversity a basis for national unity. They recognise the undeniable fact that the South African nation is not exclusively white; it consists of all the elements of our cosmopolitan population.

There was a time, no doubt, when the African was a danger to the white race, when he wanted to overthrow his rule, but that time has long since past. The African of to-day is a different man to his warlike ancestors. He has learned to appreciate the benefits of the white man's civilisation and, in spite of the disabilities under which he lives and labours, he is not hostile to the existence of the white race in Africa. What he wants and claims is the right to share in the good things of civilisation, the right to develop his life for the benefit of humanity and the right to enjoy the fruits of his labour. What he claims is what has been and is being claimed by every human being.

He looks upon South Africa as his ancestral home—a home which he is prepared and ready to shed his blood in its defence. He is equally interested in this war. To him victory will mean the rejection of his progress, and the enslavement of his race and the destruction of its soul. For this reason he is prepared and ready to defend with his life those principles of life which have enabled man to rise above the brute creation.

South Africa is the only country on this continent where the black man is deprived of the right to die for his country in the battlefield. It is the only place where race and colour prejudice is allowed to sabotage the organisation of man power for the overthrow of Hitlerism. And yet Hitler and Mussolini have not hesitated to mobilise the yellow man and the black man to crush the forces of democracy. In East and North Africa, the South African white troops fought and are fighting against Mussolini's black soldiers. In the Far East Hitler is wooing the Japanese, who do not belong to the "chosen race of Aryans," to throw in their lot on his side against the nations that are fighting for human freedom.

Let South Africa be realistic. This is not a white man's war; it is a war against the law of human progress and against God's law of human brotherhood. Into this struggle all of us—no matter to what race or nation we belong, or in what continent or island we live—are irresistably drawn. We must, therefore, all of us fight because from the consequences of this devastating war, whether glorious or disastrous, none of our children will escape.

England Refuses Africans Chance At Defense Work

SEP 15 1941

LONDON—(Special ANP Correspondence)—The question of racial discrimination against Africans and people of African descent but who may be said to be British subjects is so keen that it recently was the subject of discussion in the house of commons when Vernor Bartlett, diplomatic correspondent of the London "News Chronicle," speaking on behalf of black workers from the colonies, asked the Minister of Labor whether he was aware of color discrimination at the labor exchanges.

SEP 15 1941

Mr. Bartlett asked whether Minister Ernest Bevin, hailed as the great labor leader of England, who is the trade union boss in this country and minister of labor, was aware of the difficulties which colored workers experienced when they attempted to be of service to the nation during this time of crisis.

Minister Bevin, whose position is for all the world like that of President Green of American Federation of Labor, plus that of Sidney Hillman of the OPM of the United States, employed the same tactics which they do, ducking the issue and evading the question.

"If my honorable friend has any particular case in mind, perhaps he will let me know, so that I can consider whether there is any action I can usefully take," Mr. Bevin replied to Mr. Bartlett.

Bartlett, knowing as did all the house who heard the question, that Bevin was trying to evade a question which everyone connected with industry knows exists asked again "Is it not a fact that in quite a number of these firms, there is this discrimination and should not the government do everything it can to discourage it; first, to increase the labor potentiality of the country and second, to remove any discrimination which should not exist in a great democracy?"

Bevin, known as one of the great labor leaders of the world, wiggled but did not reply. It is a well known fact that Negroes have been refused work on the ground of color and that most of the cases have been reported to the ministry of labor, but nothing has been done about it.

The result is that some of the Negro men approached Mr. Bartlett, who is an independent member of parliament, tied up neither with the Tories or the Laborites. The matter has come to such a sad state that even though there is a great demand for seamen, many ships refuse to carry colored crews, though there are many capable African and colored sailors here. Since the war when employment in films and night clubs which was about all Negroes could get to do was no more, economic conditions among the blacks in London have been simply terrible.

White Man's War Puzzles Savages

By the Associated Press.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Sept. 17.—The trouble with being a Christian missionary in Africa, says O. U. Giddings, who is one, is that you have a difficult time explaining the white man's war to the black "savages."

SEP 17 1941

Missionaries have fought the evil of war between tribes for years, Mr. Giddings, who has been in central Africa since 1925 for the Seventh Day Adventists, declared. Now the natives, who are denied firearms, cannot understand the way the great white Christian nations have resorted to gunpowder.

Organising Native Voters

A convention of the African Voters' Association comprising the different branches from the Cape the western and eastern circles, and Griqualand West, was held in the Community Hall, Bloemfontein, recently to consider the rights and privileges of the African registered voters in the Cape Province. The President, Professor D. D. T. Jabavu, presided.

The Rev. R. M. Tunzi presented an encouraging report on the negotiations that he had undertaken with the Native M.P.'s in connection with the conditions and status of the African registered voter.

Mr. E. D. Tsenyego then gave an account of his activities in organising and enrolling the African voters of East London, where the Association had its most powerful branch with well over 1,000 members on the roll.

FEB 8 1941

He said that he had first sought the co-operation of employers who used Native labour on a large scale, for under the Urban Areas Act it was necessary for every employer before engaging a Native who was not registered as a voter, to pay his registration fee of a shilling. It was therefore an advantage to employers if Natives were registered and he had thus been able to gain their support, which in some cases involved permission to address meetings of their employees.

NATIVES SUSPICIOUS.

The Natives themselves, however, were often suspicious, being inclined to interpret his efforts as attempts to recruit them for war service. He had explained to them the advantages of registration, which enabled them to be exempt from the many pass laws and offered a better chance of employment.

The speaker said that although there had been no registration for the supplementary list during last year, there will be a general revision and registration throughout the Cape Province in February of this year, and it behoved every Native with the necessary qualifications to register himself. He appealed to employers of Natives to give all the necessary help to all those wishing to register themselves.

After much deliberation on the matter, the convention finally decided that circulars be printed and circularised throughout the large centres in the Cape Province and that canvassers be appointed to each centre to organise the voters.

Concerning the Rural Area.

FEB 1 - 1941

The term "Rural Area" is comprehensive in the present application of it. In this article, reference may be made to any particular section or locality of the four rural areas as and when it may be necessary to do so.

Firstly, it would appear that the people of the rural Area are not to enjoy full benefit of the amenities enjoyable in common with the people of the urban area.

Beginning with the Colony Circular Road, attention had been called to the narrowness of all the bridges built on this road.

The bridge over the Congo Town stream is the only one wide enough; but this bridge is practically within the urban portion of the Circular Road. Its width allows the crossing of it by vehicles and pedestrians simultaneously.

It is this bridge alone that has the advantage just pointed out.

FEB 1 - 1941

The tragedy which took place at the bridge over the Lumley Brook is still fresh in people's minds. It does not speak well as to the construction for this particular bridge to have been made so narrow, and without rail to boot.

It is obviously very dangerous to even travellers only on the Circular Road, much more to both vehicles and pedestrians.

It would be right and fitting for the Authorities to give attention to the bridge with a view to widening it, or else, to put a rail with two or three bulged safety projections along its sides for people to betake themselves to when they are already on the bridge which is the only way for traffic, when vehicles are approaching from either end of it.

The work of widening this particular bridge should be extended to, and taken in hand at, all the bridges, seeing that the narrowness of which the writer is speaking is a common fault to all of them, and there are no by-paths for travellers and other pedestrians to use as means of safety, as they cross the bridges.

Secondly adequate Medical Facilities are still being denied the people of the rural areas. The Rural Areas' Council spent quite a long time in discussing the subject, about which members of the Council had been rather serious; and very likely it had come in for attention from the proper source. But this measure of attention could not at all fulfil the obligation of the Authorities to the rural people. More care for the sick is a necessity.

For an example, it does not appear quite convenient for one Medical Dispenser to dispense medcines in the five Mountain Villages, residing at Regent as he does. Nor is it a satisfactory arrangement for the Medical Dispenser residing at York, to visit Goderich on Tuesday of a week and Sussex on Friday of a week also, to dispense medcines to the sick of this extensive portion of the rural area, Sussex being about eight miles distant, and Goderich about sixteen miles distant from York. More should be done for the rural people in regard to medical attendance; and, it may be hoped that this all important subject will be given its proper place in the consideration of the Authorities!

Thirdly, as there is rumour that ere long a level rate of school fees, that is to say, one shilling and three pence will be charged at all classes of the primary school recognised by Government, the writer is undertaking to point out, before the matter becomes a "fait accompli" that, the hardship in school fees hitherto charged, about which there has been ceaseless complaints will, by this presumed new step, be only dissembled, but not removed. If therefore, there is any foundation whereupon the rumour is based, then arises a question:—Will illiteracy be thereby greatly checked? "Let those concerned think before they leap!" For the moment, the writer holds his peace.

Fourthly, the problem of bus transport in the rural area has not yet been successfully solved, owing to the fact that the data are never complete or are never fully discovered. The man in the street says that the authorities of the Bus Service are a "group of Thomases" that would not believe facts told them, unless they should see. And yet they could not go out and see.

It does not appear that the Bus Authorities are aware of the fact that the buses are very widely patronised. It is no tale-telling to state that very often people from Kent and Banana Islands come down to York terminus to take the buses running to Freetown. Many a time intending travellers are left at the very terminus from want of accommodation for themselves and their marketables. On several occasions the buses can accommodate only people who are fortunate to be at York ready to travel. Then must persons at Tokeh, Number Two and Bawbaw be left behind bitterly disappointed in respect of their business!

For the minimising of the foregoing and other difficulties connected with the Bus Service, especially at places very far away from Freetown, would the Bus Authorities not consider the advisability of sending a lorry to York along with the bus each afternoon, so that, on the next morning all travellers can be taken on to Freetown? Such an arrangement would bring great relief to people in the matter of taking their articles of trade to the markets, as well as of bringing their saleables home from Freetown.

The people of this country do fully realise that, on account of war conditions, they cannot have all that they need and are asking for; but, they are entitled to some considerations, in regard to the ways and means of earning their daily sustenance, seeing that they must eat, if they are to live.

Relative Duty Of Parent And Teacher To Child

TRAGIC INCIDENT CITED

FEB 1 1941

Sir,

On December 4, 1940 as a result of a schoolboy quarrel during interval at the St. Augustine School, Walmer, Port Elizabeth, my young brother was fatally stabbed by a playmate. The boys were the best of friends and it was tragic that the boys' squabble should have ended so unfortunately.

I would like to refer to the remarks made by the preacher at the graveside when the boy was buried, as I feel that a wrong impression has got abroad in regard to the discipline at the school concerned.

Throughout his address, the preacher's remarks gave the impression that, had the school been properly disciplined the tragedy would not have occured, but I feel that, however strictly the children are trained at school, teachers cannot be held responsible for accidents such as this. It is essentially the upbringing the boys and girls receive at home which tells in life, and unless teachers, who, after all, see the children for only a few hours a day, receive cooperation from parents, it can never be possible to train the youngsters' minds in the proper channels of respectable behaviour and honour.

It is seldom that a child whose home is happy and whose parents are an example to him gives trouble at school, but all too frequent are the cases of the cause of juvenile deliquency being traced to unsatisfactory home conditions. In many instancies, every little misdeed which child does is blamed on lack of discipline at school, but parents must realize that the ground-work of proper upbringing is done at home, and the child with its imitative mind, cannot put aside influences received from his home circle, however earnestly his teachers may strive, in the short time at their disposal, to instil the basic principles of discipline and courtesy.

I hope this letter will be seriously read by all parents with a view to their turning their attention to enforcing more strict discipline in their own homes and not leaving the entire rsponsibility with teachers.

Combination Of Bantu Languages

PROPOSALS PUT FORWARD

FEB 1 1941

Sir,

To bring our many dialects to the normal standard as was determined by Providence is a task that cannot be mastered in a moment of time. It would mean years of unceasing changes, constant corrections, and continuous improvements. The numerous tribes and nations would have to make a common interchange of words and phrases. Most likely, many people in each branch of the wide Bantu family would disfavour the idea of parting with what they had for long looked upon as their valued media of expression. For these reasons, many persons would feel inclined to pooh-pooh the whole idea of language combination.

Nevertheless, in the course of these amendments big strides would have been taken towards the acquisition of two great ends in the life of the African. Firstly, channels would open up for the development of our languages which gravely call for this measure of action. Secondly, the scheme would serve as a medium for the reparation of the bonds of unity that were dissevered years ago by the deadly tribal differences which, sad to say, still play a big role even where the African people have to work together in pursuit of a very high and common cause.

In the introductory portion of this article headed "Bantu Languages", proofs that affirm the belief that our dialects are derived from a single source have been advanced, even if ineffectively. It follows then that the workable means whereby Bantu languages could be placed close to the state of purity, would be by the application of a uniform manner of expression, more or less, commonly encouraged among the different Bantu nations. Here arises the advantage that comes with the introduction of the new orthography where by its use the wide dissimilarities in spelling have somewhat been modified. The "ea" and "oa" which were used in seSuthu-Choana, have now been replaced by the "ya" and "wa" as is employed in the Zulu-Xhosa languages.

The next step towards the combination of Bantu languages would have to be the liquidation of that long-overdue debt which our dialects owe to European languages. For ages, the African has borrowed and kept such words as: "phepha, pampiri," from "paper, papier"; "tafile, tafula," from "table, tafel"; et cetera. In substituting these with Bantu words, the Africans of all tongues would have to make mutual agreement on the general use of a single word in each case.

Again, where this is necessary, the Africans should borrow words from one another only, and not from any other source. May it be noted however, that there is no bad motive behind the making of this suggestion. It is advanced here because the act of borrowing words from European dialects is such an easy course to follow that, as a result, the African gives himself no time to think out and formulate his own words, hence the circulated employment of such words as "mothokari", "eropuleni" etc. If this setback remains unchecked, there is every likelihood that, with the advance of inventions, Bantu vocabulary would become widely "anti-Native."

Instances are not wanting, to prove that the members of the Bantu family can easily make a general interchange of words without having to run to sources with which they do not hold close linguistic relations.

The above written proposals do not cover everything that is required in the broad innovation of establishing a Bantu National Language. None the less, they are useful particles upon which the high objective of combining Bantu languages should find grounds for feasibility.

All African Youth League

AN APPEAL TO YOUNG AFRICANS

FEB 1 1941

Sir,

In my last article under the above caption I had appreciated to the officials of Youth Leagues in various places to correspond with me to organise and arrange for an "ALL AFRICAN YOUTH LEAGUE." So far I have had no response, but I still solemnly remind them so to do, for the sake of redemption and emancipation of the Africans and the Non-Europeans in general.

In the youth of any nation in the world repose the potentialities of freedom and progress. It is, therefore, imperative that the youth of this country awake to the realisation of the power latent in them. The welfare of the commuity in all spheres rests entirely upon the youth, and the responsibility lies with them for leaving it to deterioration and retrogression by their indifference in nation-building activities. On the other hand they can render useful and lasting service to their fellow-men by working in and through a powerful organisation which in its constitution should embody all the fundamental principles indispensable for purposive progressive action.

In this country where each succeeding day renders our position more precarious the chaotic and treacherous leadership at the helm of the community must be checked in its mad career of gross betrayals and vested intersts.

The organisation—All AFRICAN YOUTH LEAGUE must have one comprehensive aim—to work in educational, religious, political and social emancipation of the nation.

I abide with anticipated hope on the bright youthful brains for suggestions and support.

Young Africans In Prison

FEB 1 1941

The statement made by Mr. J. Lewin of the University of the Witwatersrand at the recent conference of the Institute of Race Relations, that there were no fewer than 20,000 Natives under the age of twenty-one in prison today," has undoubtedly shocked many people, even those who may not be interested in the welfare of the African people. This statement reveals a state of affairs which calls for more than passing attention. It cannot be denied that this growing lawlessness among young Africans constitutes a problem of grave magnitude and that unless it is tackled at once it will eventually become an incurable disease.

There can be no doubt that this once law-abiding race is fast becoming a race of criminals and lawbreakers. And the reason for this is not far to seek. No race which is hemmed in by oppressive and restrictive legislation as is the case with the African race can escape deterioration. Most of the Africans who are in prison today were convicted for committing technical offences under the pass laws, Urban Areas Act, Masters and Servants law and other discriminating laws.

In their effort to secure complete control of the Africans and their labour, Europeans in this country are succeeding only in destroying all that is fine in their character.

One of the laws which is largely responsible for the disintegration of African family life in urban locations is the Urban Areas Act. One of the regulations framed under this Act does not permit children aged 18 to live with their parents without paying lodger's fees. It is true that some Municipalities do not enforce this regulation, but the majority of the local authorities have refused to accede to the requests repeatedly made by Advisory Boards not to enforce it. Some of the smaller Municipalities, we are told, actually make it illegal for these children to live with their parents. Is it surprising then that we should have not fewer than 20,000 juveniles in prison today? It is our firm conviction that unless these restrictive laws and regulations are abolished, the menace of juvenile delinquency cannot be combatted successfully.

Another cause of this growing lawlessness among young Africans is ignorance. It is really not in the interest of Europeans to allow thousands of African children to grow wild in urban locations. It is a tragic fact that owing to lack of educational facilities thousands of African children of school-going age are growng without receiving a training of any kind. As the result they take to gambling and other evils and these start them on the road to crime.

There are Europeans who think that to educate a black man is to spoil him and to make him a black European. For this reason they are opposed to educational facilities being provided by the State for Africans. They do not realise that for good or ill white and black are destined to live side by side and that whether they like it or not they form one nation whose very existence depends largely upon interracial goodwill and co-operation.

It is the ignorance and superstition and not the education, of the African which constitutes a real menace to European civilisation. Educated Africans are an asset instead of being a liability to the progressive life of this country; they are useful members of the community, contributing their share to the country's industrial and commercial development. They realise that it is their bounden duty to be law-abiding and to live in peace and harmony with their neighbours.

There can be no doubt that by providing more educational facilities for African children in urban locations, the State will be encouraging the development of good citizenship. What is really wanted in urban areas is compulsory education. The State should build more schools instead of spending large sums of money on building more prisons. Prisons have hopelessly failed to make men repent from their sins. It is in the school, and not in prison, that our young people will learn to respect law and order and to live peacefully and happily with their fellow country-men.

The Black Man And His Land

The Story Of Farmer A & Farmer B

Chapter V

(By Edward Roux, M.SC. Ph.D.)

In order to show the difference between the right and the wrong way of managing cattle and land I am going to tell you the story of two farmers. I shall call them Farmer A and Farmer B. They started farming in 1919. Their two farms were next to each other and were of the same size. The grass and soil in the two farms were in the same condition. Each farmer had ten cattle.

Farmer A was a forward-looking man; he was willing to try the new ways of working with cattle and land. But Farmer B was old-fashioned; he was not willing to depart from the ways of his grandfathers, forgetting that conditions had changed since the old days when there was plenty of land.

Farmer B thought he would let his cattle go on increasing as much as possible, but Farmer A decided that he would only keep as many cattle as his land could feed without becoming spoilt.

As soon as he was able Farmer A fenced his land. Not only did he put a fence right round it, but he put fences across it so as to divide it into four camps. He had gates in the fences so that he could drive the cattle into whichever camp he pleased. The camps were numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. At first he put all his cattle into camp 1. While the cattle were there the grass in camp 1 was being eaten but the grass in the other three camps was growing. For a week he kept his cattle in camp 1. Then he changed them to camp 2. He kept them there a week and then put them in camp 3. A week later he put them into camp 4, then after another week back into camp 1. And so on, round and round. The grass in every camp was able to grow for three weeks before the cattle began to eat it again. Then it was only eaten for one week and got three weeks rest once more. This system is called "rotational grazing" and the camps are sometimes called "paddocks."

Farmer B did not understand all these carryings-on on the part of Farmer A. On his land Farmer B let the cattle roam about and eat anywhere they pleased. The result was that the grass never had a rest. After a few months if you looked carefully you might have noticed that the grass on Farmer B's land was getting thinner and the grass on Farmer A's land was getting thicker. Also you might have noticed that Farmer A's cattle were a little fatter and gave a little more milk than Farmer B's. But you would have had to look carefully to notice these things. Farmer B thought he was doing very well.

As time went on new calves appeared on both farms. In 1922, three years after the two farmers started, Farmer B's herd had increased from 10 to 18. But he had given three of his cattle to his son who wished to marry, so that there were 15 cattle grazing on Farmer B's land.

During the same three years Farmer A's cattle had increased from 10 to 20. His cattle had increased more rapidly than B's because none of his calves had died, whereas B had lost two. But Farmer A did not keep twenty cows on his land. During the three years he had sold no less than ten of his cattle. He got good money for them, because they had had plenty of grass to eat and they were fat and in good condition. With the money he got he was able to pay for the fencing and buy things he needed for his house. But farmer B had got no money for his cattle.

In the next three years, between 1922 and 1925, Farmer B's 15 cattle produced 8 calves which grew up. Farmer B sold one of his beasts and two others died. Those that died were eaten, but they were old and the meat was tough. Farmer B now had 20 cattle grazing on his land and he was very proud. But he had no reason to be proud of the condition of his land. In patches the grass was becoming very thin and there were some spots where no grass grew at all and there were only little bushes. And though he had 20 cattle, they were thin, starved-looking creatures and they gave very little milk. Sometimes from the whole lot he would get only one full bucket.

During these same three years Farmer A's 10 cattle had produced 14 healthy calves. Farmer A had sold or killed for his own use 12 of his beasts. He had increased the number grazing on his land from 10 to 12. The grass had improved so much, as a result of his veld management, that he thought it could easily manage to support another two.

If at this time you looked at the two farms without a proper understanding you might have thought that Farmer B was better off than Farmer A. You might have said: "Farmer A has only 12 cattle; Farmer B has 20 cattle. B is 8 cattle richer than A." But this would be because you were thinking only in terms of heads of cattle, not in terms of meat, milk and money. Although Farmer B had 20 cattle he had had very little real benefit from them. His cattle had brought him no money and he had got very little milk and meat from them. And, though he did not seem to realise it, they were ruining his land. On the other hand Farmer A had made money from his cattle by selling some to the butcher. There was always plenty of milk on his farm. His children have had plenty of amasi and had grown strong and healthy. When the neighbours wanted to buy milk they knew they could always get it from him.

Non-European Owners Of Taxis

FEB 22 1941

Regulations Being Tightened Up

REPRESENTATIVES of the Transvaal Non-European Taxi-Owners Association (Messrs G. Sibidla, A. C. Marks, and P. Ndaba), introduced by Senator Rheinallt Jones, who was accompanied by Senator C. H. Malcomess, obtained an interview with the Minister of Railways and Harbours (the Hon. F. C. Sturrock) and the Chairman of the Central Transportation Board (Dr. H Reitz), in the Minister's office, Cape Town, on Saturday, February 8, 1941.

"Pirates" Who Carry Too Many Passengers

THE deputation said that they represented the legitimate taxi-owners and had no connection with the "pirates" who are unlicensed and carry excessive numbers of passengers. They complained that the legitimate taxis were blamed for accidents caused by the "pirates." The taxi-owners carry third party risk insurance, and have their vehicles kept in order, and inspected by municipal officials every six months.

The deputation expressed concern regarding the possible effect of the Motor Carrier Transportation Bill upon legitimate Non-European taxi services. After full discussion the following points emerged :—

(1) Under Clause 4 of the Bill a taxi-owner will require to obtain a certificate of exemption from the Board before his taxi may operate under a municipal licence. Regulations to govern such taxis are being prepared by the Board, and the Minister authorised the Chairman of the Board to allow the Association and the parliamentary representatives of the Natives to see the draft regulations and submit representations. There was no intention to interfere unduly with existing taxis operating within municipal areas.

(2) The Chairman of the Board said that he himself was strongly in favour of Non-Europeans serving their own people, subject, of course, to the Board being satisfied as to the vehicles used and the character of the applicants.

(3) The deputation pressed the view that special consideration should be given by the Board to the fact that taxis serving Africans were restricted in the range they could serve by the fact that Africans are mostly resident in urban Locations, and (on the Reef) in Mine Compounds. This results in their service having the appearance of a "shuttle service," whereas they really operate as taxis.

The Minister and the Chairman said that they appreciated the special character of this situation, and the Chairman promised that the Board would give due consideration to it.

(4) The deputation said that the limitation of the number of passengers who may be carried in a taxi to four passengers was too severe, and urged that large American cars can quite easily accommodate five passengers and the driver. The Chairman said that this point should be taken up with the Municipalities concerned.

(5) The deputation urged that the cancellation or suspension of licences should only occur in respect of convictions for serious offences. The Chairman of the Board said that driving a car under the influence of liquor must be regarded as a serious offence. The Chairman pointed out that often the Board knew that an offence had been committed but was unable to prove this to the satisfaction of the Court.

NATIVE FIRST AID TRAINING
30,000 MINE AFRICANS PROFICIENT IN IT.

You have been reading in these articles how good a thing it is to understand and have a knowledge of First Aid. Africans working on the Mines are encouraged to learn it, and they like to learn it. That is the spirit in which progress is made.

X X X

Every year competitions in First Aid are held on the Mines under the auspices of the South African Red Cross Society working in close co-operation with the Prevention of Accidents Committee of the Rand Mutual Assurance Company Limited, and of course together with the Transvaal Chamber of Mines.

When the annual competitions in First Aid Training are going to be held the news spreads along the Mines and the Africans take the keenest interest, the more so as there have already been the preliminary competitions. It means that the teams competing in the finals have proved themselves very good at First Aid. They are indeed the crack teams of First Aid on the Witwatersrand Mines.

The annual Competitions for the year 1940 took place last October at the Witwatersrand Native Labour Association Compound, Johannesburg, and many were the people who came to watch the tests, which were carried out with the usual strictness. The importance attached to these competitions, which are for the Native Mine Ambulance Championships of the Transvaal, can be realised when it is stated that on the occasion of the 1st finals a Cabinet Minister, the Hon. H.G. Lawrence, K.C., M.P., Minister of the Interior and Public Health, came to present the trophies medals and other prizes to the captains of the winning teams and also the cash prizes to all other teams competing. Amongst the notabilities also present on the memorable day were the Acting Director of Native Labour (Mr. A. E. Lowe) and Mr. H Wellbeloved, Native Labour Adviser to the Transvaal Chamber of Mines. Mine Africans who were taking part brought their "brothers" and Europeans came also. Everybody was interested.

X X X

More than 3,000 Mine Africans had taken part in the preliminary competitions, that is, before the finals were held, and you may be surprised to learn that there are now nearly 30,000 Mine Africans who have made themselves proficient in First Aid. Ten years ago there were only 2,000 to 3,000 Mine Africans who had qualified in First Aid, so you can tell the great progress the Africans have recorded in this most useful and beneficial knowledge.

X X X

The competitions naturally take a long time to complete each year. There is an under round competition and also a surface competition, and here again Organisation —the doing of things in an orderly manner — is evident.

JAN 18 1941

The trophies that the Mine Africans win in the finals represent the blue ribband of the whole of the Transvaal for Mine Ambulance competitions, and the winners are very proud of the trophies, also the medals and prizes; indeed, they display their medals at public functions.

It is interesting to note from experience that employees trained in First Aid are safer workers because in the training they realise the consequence of accidents and are therefore more careful.

The Black Man And His Land

The Story Of Farmer A & Farmer B

JAN 25 1941

By Edward Roux, M.SC. Ph.D.)

1931

We now jump six years to 1931 before we have another look at our farmers. During these six years Farmer A has kept his grazing herd limited to 12 beasts. Every year, on the average he has sold or slaughtered four cattle. His grass is still in tip-top condition and his cattle are healthy. He has money in the Post Office Bank.

During these six years (1925 to 1931) Farmer B has lost 12 cattle, all of which died. He still has 18 beasts on his land. You will notice that his cattle are no longer increasing in number. The old ones die quicker than the new ones come. About three-quarters of his land is now useless for grazing; it is full of dongas, stones and prickly bushes. There are a few small patches of grass left where the cattle can still get a little to eat. But Farmer B still thinks he is better off than Farmer A. "I have 18 cattle," he says, and he has only 12."

The next two years, 1932 and 1933, were very bad years for farmers. There were terrible droughts, and when the rain did come it was very little. Both our farmers suffered from the drought, B suffered more than A. Farmer A's land was in excellent condition before the drought. The grass was thick and its roots were well set. There was plenty of humus in the soil and thus it kept its water longer. A's cattle still had food when B's had practically nothing to eat. But Farmer A very wisely reduced the number of his herd to 10. "It is not wise under these conditions to keep these two extra beast," he said. So in 1934, after the lean time was over and good rains came again, A had only 10 cattle on his land. And during the previous three years he had only sold 10 cattle. But with the good rains his land rapidly recovered from the drought, because the strong roots were still there, holding the rich soil together.

But poor B! The drought simply ruined him. During the years of drought 8 of his cattle died. There was so little grass left on his land that his cattle used to push their heads through the fence to try and eat the grass on A's side. In 1934 Farmer B had 10 cattle left.

Now it is 1940. Farmer A has 12 cattle on his land. He does not intend to let his herd get bigger than that. He still has his four camps and he moves the cattle to fresh grass every week. He still sells some of his cattle every year and gets good money for them.

But Farmer B's cattle have continued to die. His land never recovered from the drought. He now has only four cattle left.

Between 1919 and 1940 Farmer A sold or killed 78 cattle valued at £350. During the same time Farmer B sold or killed or gave as lobolo 4 cattle valued at £15; he also had the use of the carcases of the 29 cattle that died. These would be valued at about £58. Total for B, £73. Farmer A also made quite a lot of money by selling milk and Farmer B made nothing from milk.

Our two farmers started equal 21 years ago. If Farmer B had managed his land and cattle in the way he should have done he would have been as well off to-day as Farmer A. As it is Farmer A has got about five times as much value out of his land cattle than Farmer B got out of his. In addition A still has 12 good cattle his land is in much better condition than it was 21 years ago. It will continue to bring in a good profit every year if he treats it properly.

But even the best farmers would be able to do very little with B's land now. Not only has the grass gone, but the soil has gone too. It is mostly rocks and stones. If this land were fenced off and no cattle were allowed on it for a few hundred years it might become good grazing land again and Farmer B's great-great-grandchildren might be able to use it. We know that soil is formed by breaking down rocks and it takes a very, very long time for a little soil to be made in this way. It takes hundreds and thousands of years to form a deep soil, but soil erosion caused by man and his cattle may wash it all away in the time it takes for a child to grow into a man.

Let us learn the lesson from this story of the two farmers. Let us try to keep our grass and our soil, because once they are gone we can never get them back unless we live to be hundred years old; and that you know is impossible.

An appeal to the "youth" of Basutoland

My Appeal to the "Youth" of Basutoland.

AUG 3 1949

(BY B. S. T. LIKATE.)

My dear Comrades-in-arms,

In the name of youth, whether you be at Colleges, Training Institutions, High, Technical, Boarding, Day, Intermediate, Elementry Schools or in the very darkest corner of Basutoland—in fact wherever you may be—I greet you during these chaotic days, when each nation must necessarily pull itself out of the mud by its own and not other peoples efforts, I feel the urge from within to address the following appeal to you As a matter of course, I am an unknown outsider to the majority of you people. However, seeing that 'necessity is the mother of invention', I consider it expedient that I should speak to you. It has ever since been the greatest desire of my heart to address you at a public gathering or while you are in assembly, but circumstances have always renderered that impracticable. I should state here that I have no other qualifications for addressing you excepting that I am 'one of you'.

In the first place I address you "dear", because you are as dear and important to me as any one member of my body is. As you are already aware, this is said to be an appeal. As such I have got to be definite and tell you precisely on what points I am appealing for your support and co-operation. Since some three years or so ago, many problems have been parading my mind. I have been watching the developments in the Territory, and the world at large, with keenest interest and maximum amount of watchfulness and extra-ordinary anxiety and carefulness. Great men have come, great men have passed in the history of our beloved Basutoland. Apart from having an energetic and able leader in the person of our present Paramount Chief, happy memories of our late P.C. are still overshadowing us in a manner beyond human description.

Forward moves and advancements have nevertheless taken in various directions. Anti-spoil erosion and water conservation works have been carried on almost over and in every part and district of our Territory. The improvement of stock has also been going apace. Not only these, but a new leaf has been turned in the educational development of the Territory by the erection of the Basutoland High School at Maseru for the purpose of giving the highest qualification—short of a College degree—to sons and daughters of Basutoland in the land of their birth. The Government and Missionaries have been co operating fully in the educational development of our country. Their labours have been co-ordinated with the greatest amount of success in the inanguration of what is called the "E.V. 2 Teachers' Course". It is needless for me to say that all 'the powers that be" deserve our warmest and deepest gratitude for this invaluable service to our nation.

While it is true that the Basotho are—year in and year out—beginning to realise the need and value of education for their sons and daughters, it is equally true and important to mention that some disturbing and distressing influences are also fast marring the progress of our "motherland". As I have said above, special qualifications for speaking to you I have not, I am merely answering the urgent call of necessity by thus writing. It is both sad and painful to me that I have to write what I am now going to write. I am more sorry than I would otherwise be, if I had been placed in such a predicament by sheer misfortune.

There are three destructive agencies very rapidly and incessantly sucking the very life-blood of or from our dear country. In In my opinion these three undesirables are more deadly than any noxious weed Basutoland has ever suffered from. I have a very indelible impression of them in my mind. They are: 1. Intoxicating Drinks. 2. Moral Laxity and 3. Laziness.

By the grace of God, I wish to say all that can possibly be said by one with a limited knowledge, short vision and imperfect understanding, in a single article on such great social evils.

1. Drinks. As every Mosotho is aware, the indulgence in strong Beer (Joala) was—in the early days of our nation's History—a game played by men—rarely women—of ripe age In those days it was both unusual and uncommon to behold a drunken man. This beverage of our fathers and ancestors was brewed not for sale but solely for home consumption. As all things are bound to change, the beer brewing and drinking habit has also undergone a tremendous change. It is now not only almost solely brewed for sale to the grown-ups but also for the use of our youth, the majority of whom—I am sad to report—are not ashamed to accept

Our late Paramount Chief did not only voice his dislike and abhorence of this deadly enemy of our nation but caused some of those people whose motives are bent towards its production to undergo certain terrible punishments. We have cause to thank him for his unswerving stand against this common menace. In spite of all that the Administration and our chiefs have done and are still doing to combat this evil, its brewery and use has extended to almost every corner of our country. And it is taking its toll among both our old and young in greater numbers every year. The malady has not only ended there. The people concerned with its production have now gone a step farther by introducing some concoctions, more deadly than beer, to destroy human lives. This evil seems to be increasing by leaps and bounds every year. It has its branches flung to the uttermost parts of Basutoland and its roots deeply and firmly planted in the minds and hearts of our people—the youth being in the forefront in acquiring the drink habits.

to make a "Parktown" of their own.

I am sorry to say there is absolutely nothing tangible in Mr. Manamela's letter other than that he was too much in himself to criticise, guage and tally my suggestions.

The Black Man And His Land

The Story Of Farmer A & Farmer B
Chapter V

JAN 18 1941

(By Edward Roux. M.SC. PhD.)

In order to show the difference between the right and the wrong way of managing cattle and land I am going to tell you the story of two farmers. I shall call them Farmer A and Farmer B. They started farming in 1919. Their two farms were next to each other and were of the same size. The grass and soil in the two farms were in the same condition. Each farmer had ten cattle.

JAN 18 1941

Farmer A was a forward-looking man; he was willing to try the new ways of working with cattle and land. But Farmer B was old-fashioned; he was not willing to depart from the ways of his grandfathers, forgetting that conditions had changed since the old days when there was plenty of land.

JAN 18 1941

Farmer B thought he would let his cattle go on increasing as much as possible, but Farmer A decided that he would only keep as many cattle as his land could feed without becoming spoilt.

As soon as he was able Farmer A fenced his land. Not only did he put a fence right round it, but he put fences across it so as to divide it into four camps. He had gates in the fences so that he could drive the cattle into whichever camp he leased. The camps were numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. At first he put all his cattle into camp 1. While the cattle were there the grass in camp 1 was being eaten but the grass in the other three camps was growing. For a week he kept his cattle in camp 1. Then he changed them to camp 2. He kept them there a week and then put them in camp 3. A week later he put them into camp 4, then after another week back into camp 1. And so on, round and round. The grass in every camp was able to grow for three weeks before the cattle began to eat it again. Then it was only eaten for one week and got three weeks rest once more. This system is called "rotational grazing" and the camps are sometimes called "paddocks."

Farmer B did not understand all these carryings-on on the part of Farmer A. On his land Farmer B let the cattle roam about and eat anywhere they pleased. The result was that the grass never had a rest. After a few months if you looked carefully you might have noticed that the grass on Farmer B's land was getting thinner and the grass on Farmer A's land was getting thicker. Also you might have noticed that Farmer A's cattle were a little fatter and gave a little more milk than Farmer B's. But you would have had to look carefully to notice these things. Farmer B thought he was doing very well.

As time went on new calves appeared on both farms. In 1922, three years after the two farmers started, Farmer B's herd had increased from 10 to 18. But he had given three of his cattle to his son who wished to marry, so that there were 15 cattle grazing on Farmer B's land.

During the same three years Farmer A's cattle had increased from 10 to 20. His cattle had increased more rapidly than B's because none of his calves had died, whereas B had lost two. But Farmer A did not keep twenty cows on his land. During the three years he had sold no less than ten of his cattle. He got good money for them, because they had had plenty of grass to eat and they were fat and in good condition. With the money he got he was able to pay for the fencing and buy things he needed for his house. But farmer B had got no money for his cattle.

In the next three years, between 1922 and 1925, Farmer B's 15 cattle produced 8 calves which grew up. Farmer B sold one of his beasts and two others died. Those that died were eaten, but they were old and the meat was tough. Farmer B now had 20 cattle grazing on his land and he was very proud. But he had no reason to be proud of the condition of his land. In patches the grass was becoming very thin and there were some spots where no grass grew at all and there were only little bushes. And though he had 20 cattle, they were thin, starved-looking creatures and they gave very little milk. Sometimes from the whole lot he would get only one full bucket.

During these same three years Farmer A's 10 cattle had produced 14 healthy calves. Farmer A had sold or killed for his own use 12 of his beasts. He had increased the number grazing on his land from 10 to 12. The grass had improved so much, as a result of his veld management, that he thought it could easily manage to support another two.

If at this time you looked at the two farms without a proper understanding you might have thought that Farmer B was better off than Farmer A. You might have said: "Farmer A has only 12 cattle; Farmer B has 20 cattle. B is 8 cattle richer than A." But this would be because you were thinking only in terms of heads of cattle, not in terms of meat, milk and money. Although Farmer B had 20 cattle he had had very little real benefit from them. His cattle had brought him no money and he had got very little milk and meat from them. And, though he did not seem to realise it, they were ruining his land. On the other hand Farmer A had made money from his cattle by selling some to the butcher. There was always plenty of milk on his farm. His children have had plenty of amasi and had grown strong and healthy. When the neighbours wanted to buy milk they knew they could always get it from him.

Big Plan For Settlement Of Africans

FEB 22 1941

AS we go to press the Rand Daily Mail publishes the following note with regard to an important Native Settlement.

The paper states:

One of the largest settlements for Africans in South Africa will be laid out by Johannesburg City Council about 20 miles from the centre of the city, if the recommendation by the Finance Committee to purchase 6,288 acres for £55,000 is adopted by the Council.

The purchase is also subject to the approval of the Minister of Native Affairs and the Administrator, and would be affected through borrowing powers.

FEB 22 1941

The land lies to the left of the Potchefstroom Road at the back of the Rand Water Board's Zuurbekom pumping station. It has been inspected by the municipal Native Affairs Committee and the Secretary for the Government Native Affairs Department.

The municipal non-European and Native Affairs Committee proposes to proclaim a location in terms of the Natives (Urban Areas) Act. It should then be reserved for approved Johannesburg Natives who should be given an opportunity of purchasing stands in freehold and erecting their own houses.

The committee, in its report, considers that a freehold scheme of settlement for Africans has long been a need, and there is a growing demand of ownership by Natives in the existing locations. The urbanised Native has largely outgrown tribal conditions. Such Natives want their own property, which, it is contended, will give them stability and be a steadying influence on them.

The committee is convinced that a freehold township under the Natives (Urban Areas) Act on this land would be welcomed by them, and much of the land would be taken up. It could be cut up into at least 9,000 half-acre stands at £25 per stand, which would yield a gross return to the Council of about £225,000. This would be returned to Africans by way of the usual amenities, such as light, water, sanitary services, and roads. From a financial aspect the scheme would be completely self-supporting.

Bantu Segregation

MR. MOHLAMME REPLIES

MAR 8 1941

Sir,

When I wrote and demanded that segregation be enforced in urban areas amongst the Bantu, I did so because of the fact that the Native Advisory Boards in general have some difficulty in facing the civic complains boldly, or even citizenising the location residents boldly because of the controversy between themselves.

It is a pity at this stage to find that some considerable majority of Bantu masses, especially the traditional "territorial" groups have a wrong notion that they are not Europeans. in that, meaning they are not going to Europeanise themselves though they inhabit, inherit and thrive in the European areas; and even in their very territories they depend on the very Europeans from whom they pretend to disassociate themselves.

It is Mr. Manamela, of Pretoria, who would like to say something against me in this topic, and instead he only "licks a hot iron" with his tongue immediately he says, if the urban Bantu is advanced he should see that he pulls up his rural unadvanced brother. It's just here that the "hot iron" burns his tongue, for if at all he was thoughtful and as much urbanised as I am, he would not "dilute" my suggestions.

MAR 8 1941

The municipalities, especially that of Pretoria, will assumably be just too pleased to see the dispute between Mr. Manamela and me in connection with the urbanisation of the Bantu, for it is quite evident that the more the people understand townsmanship the more the City Councils incur expenditure equity to their (peoples') standard. In this we have Mr. Manamela and his followers saying "birds of the same feather flock together and die together."

If my word was a bit bigger than it is now to make changes without delay in the residential areas of the Bantu, Mr. Manamela would be the first to apply for a house in the segregated areas of my vision. He is quite aware of this too, but as a Bantu innate in nature he must always shake his head as if refusing whereas inwardly he has a big YES.

In Johannesburg we have a place called Park Town, the history and the meaning of which are known; and so, I ask the urbanised Bantu

S. African Troops race for Addis Ababa.

MAR 2 2 1941

According to reports in the daily papers The British all-African column which is driving into Abyssinia from the south east is now favourite in the race to Addis Ababa. For speed it is breaking even the records established in Libya. For over a fort' night the column has averaged forty miles a day across rising uplands on Abyssinia's eastern threshold.

The British and Patriot forces round Lake Tana are nearer Addis Ababa, but they are not advancing with the same breath-taking speed.

MAR 2 2 1941

The Imperial army in Eritrea may fight the biggest battle of the campaign at Keren, but they are hardly in the running for the capture of Addis Ababa. So these swift and tireless Gold Coast and South African units look like having the best chance. They are now pushing on well beyond Daggabur, says the special correspondet of the "Daily Mail" in Cairo.

MODERN TARMAC ROAD

The backbone of their advance is still the modern tarmac road along which the Italians laid the trail and abandoned ammunition and material in a headlong fight. Ahead of the column lies Jigjig, where resistance may await them. The Italians are reported to have concentrated something like 40,000 men who are now hastily attempting to switch their fortifications to face south east instead of north-east from which the attack was originally expected.

Jigjig airfield is deserted, except for one wrecked airplane, and possibly the Italians decided to make their stand a little farther on in the hills round Harar, Abyssinia's second city. Here the broad escarpment offers a ready-made defensive line, and communication problems would be easier. Thus Harar may prove the key to the whole campaign.

Beyond Harar the broad highway runs down to Diredawa, whence a railway and a new road run 250 miles to the west of Addis Ababa, and almost the same distance eastward to Jibuti. Which will the Italians choose? Before the British cut the railway the great decision must be made.

OLD CUSTOMS OF THE GOLD COAST

By James Harley

APR 1 2 1941

NATURALLY and laudably, various African critics are making a war-time scrutiny of West African life and ways with a view to seeing whether change would be beneficial. One Gold Coast writer discusses tribal markings (often facial). He does not mention the view prevailing in parts of Nigeria, that such markings are relics of the era of slavery, being made by parents to provide against the miserable possibility of a child being seized and perhaps in later life coming again among his own people and being unrecognizable by them. His view is that Gold Coast markings originated when tribal friction was constant and it was necessary to know a friend at a glance. That phase is past, and "we now have a means of communication, English, which enables trade and other business to be carried on easily between all sections." Therefore marking should end. In some cases, markings were associated with fetish worship, but "with the spread of Christianity there will be a decline in this small class." His third reason for advising and welcoming abolition has wider interest. A change of attitude "towards standards of beauty all over the world" has left face-marking without admirers or defenders.

APR 1 2 1941

Distortion of the human face artifically has not been confined to West Africa, or Africa in general, and this adviser of his fellow-Africans is apparently so sincere a patriot that he would not urge abolition if in other lands it had weakened the people's hold on ancient customs nationally valuable. But it is not so, and as the African's mind and experience widen he should consider and decide which customs are worth retaining. "He has his part to play in the world, and he must have an outward appearance which will help him to play that part, not only within the limited confines of his village but in the new cities where he has to make contacts with business men of other nationalities and where appearance in 75 per cent. of good business." The face-mark certificate has served its purpose. It should go.

APR 1 2 1941

Costly Funerals

Much more severe is another African writer, whose subject is the oft-discussed funeral custom. He considers as its worst features bedecking the corpse with gold trinkets and rich clothes, as is often done by those who can afford it (and also, unhappily, by some who cannot, and contract debt), and the use of coffins beyond reason elaborate. The "abayan" custom he wholly condemns. It apparently originated among the Akans, a bereaved family protecting themselves against hunger (as they forewent food while mourning) by binding a cloth round the stomach; a process of "tightening the belt." In course of years this custom has degenerated, every relation stretching forth a hand for "abayan" (originally "aboyem") cloth, to establish his or her right and dignity. The critic urges that the cloths should be reserved for the direct family, or sold to lessen the funeral expenses. Money, he adds, is also wasted on the quantity of drink consumed, both at the "wake" and the actual interment.

APR 1 2 1941

Change in both matters must be on the people's own initiative. These critics are trying to prompt it.

Women Dominate Large African Tribe In Nigeria

MAY 11 1941

COLUMBUS. — (ANP) — As proof that "brains are mightier than brawn," the women in one of Africa's largest tribes have found ways to completely dominate the males by a new form of "passive resistance," according to Dr. Jack Harris, sociology instructor at Ohio State university. Dr. Harris recently returned from a 14-month study of the Ibo tribe in Nigeria, West Africa, with its population of 4,000,000.

Control Food Supply

Although the men display all the outward vestiges of authority, wearing the crowns, and passing the laws, the women, says Dr. Harris, by their control of the food supply, exercise supreme veto power. When a husband proves a little difficult, his food supply is cut in half, as soon as his hunger pains become acute, he is amenable to reason.

The tribal women have other ways of gaining their ends, including ridicule, strikes, boycotts and curses. One incident reported by Dr. Harris happened when the women found a rule adopted by the men not to their liking. The entire feminine population left the village, taking all the children, with the exception of babies in the nursing stage. For a day and a half the men fed the crying infants, cooked, carried water, brought in firewood and performed the other tasks usually allocated to women, before being brought to their knees. To the victors they gave goats as peace offerings, and formal, and informal apologies.

Many Quaint Customs

Another quaint custom known as "sitting on a man" was witnessed by the Ohio State professor. If a man offends a group of women they march in a body to his compound and remain to sing songs of ridicule until he apologizes. MAY 11 1941

The marriage customs of the Iboes provide that girls promised in marriage while still infants, become wives when the final installment is paid by the prospective husbands. The men contract to pay anywhere from $10 to $50 for a wife. Because a husband is unwilling to lose his investment, he tries hard to please his wife or wives as the case may be, since many of them have as many as 14. Women who are displeased by their husbands leave and refuse to return, charging mistreatment. However, if she remarries the former husband receives full repayment on his investment.

MORE AND MORE AFRICANS LEARNING FIRST AID

MAR 1 1941

Truly the advance made in knowledge of First Aid by African Mine workers in the Transvaal is wonderful. Five years ago, that is, about the year 1936, fewer than 10 000 of them were trained. Today more than 30,000 are trained.

X X X

Since the year 1920 as many as 160,000 African Mine workers have passed the Red Cross Society's examinations. These examinations are not easy; they are not meant to be easy. There must be serious, severe tests before certificates can be awarded. The African Mine workers know this fact, and therefore they give their minds to First Aid. They are interested and they want to learn.

MAR X 1941

About twenty-five years ago comparatively few Mine Africans knew anything at all about First Aid, and certainly there could not then have been the great Competitions that now take place every year. So important are these annual Competitions that last year, as you have been reading, a Cabinet Minister came to present the trophies, and medals and prizes and cash prizes.

Yes, today there are hundreds of highly-skilled Africans working on the Mines who have been taught First Aid and who are fully fitted to deal with almost any kind of accident. That is what the Minister of the Interior and of Public Health said the other day, and he ought to know.

MAR 1X 1941

The teaching of First Aid has made Mine employees, both Europeans and Africans, more safety-minded. That in itself is a testimonial to First Aid.

One Mine African, Abraham Haloza by name, has won sixteen medals and decorations in First Aid Competitions, and there are a good number of other Africans — your own people — who have also won medals and decorations similarly. MAR 1 1941

The African Mine workers recognise that the Doctors and First Aid Trainers wish to help them (the Africans) to add to their knowledge and knowledge is one of the precious possessions of life; nobody can take it away from you. This knowledge is imparted to the Africans in an interesting way.

The numbers of African Mine workers who know First Aid keep increasing.

Masters And Servants' Bill

MAR 8 1941

"South Africa is the only country in the world in which the colour problem exists on such a large scale and what South Africa decides is going to be of paramount importance to the whole world, and, especially to other communities in Africa."

This striking statement was made by Mrs. V. M. L. Ballinger M.P. for the Cape Eastern Circle in a vigorous speech in the House of Assembly during the debate on Mr. C. H. Geldenhuys' motion asking leave to introduce the Cape Masters and Servants (Amendment) Bill.

The Bill, as far as we can judge from speeches made by Mrs. Ballinger, Mr. D. B. Molteno and Mr. L. Egeland, vitally affects the interests of African labourers in the Cape. It is a measure designed to enable farmers to prevent labourers from evading their contracts. It proposes that non-fullfilment of civil contracts should become a criminal offence and that farmers should be given the right to control the labour of African workers.

As the Bill affects the welfare of the Africans, and is of such controversial nature, it should, in our own opinion, have been submitted to the Representative Council before it is dealt with by Parliament. It is the policy of South Africa under the provisions of the Natives Representation Act that any legislation affecting the interests of the African people will not be brought before Parliament until it has been considered by the Representative Council. This policy was laid down by Parliament and it should be maintained and be put into operation. It is to hoped therefore, that Mr. Geldenhuys will not be allowed to introduce this iniquitous Bill which, in our opinion, will not in any way help farmers to secure labour. If it became law it would have the effect of driving African labour from the farms; and we do not think that this is what the farmers want.

We are all agreed that the agricultural resources of this country should be developed and that the African should play his part in this development. But we cannot agree that the best means of doing this is to employ compulsory methods. The days when it was perhaps necessary to teach the African "the dignity of labour" are gone. The African has learned the lesson and he knows now that he cannot live in this world except by the sweat of his brow. Unfortunately there are farmers who have not learned this lesson and who, therefore, think that it is one of their previleges to live by the sweat of the brows of other human beings. The African knows today that as a human being he has the right to sell his labour to the highest bidder in the Labour Market. It is not his "laziness" that causes the shortage of labour on the farms; it is the unwillingness of the farmers to employ progressive methods in dealing with labourers.

The farming indutsry like any other industry cannot be developed by means of compulsory labour. Labour today is a commodity which must be purchased by those who need it. And the African is not willing to sell it to the lowest bidder. If the farming industry needs his labour it must pay the price which is paid by other industries. The farmers, like other employers of labour, must learn to put their hands into their pockets and pay their servants a living wage.

"Farm labourers are entitled to the ordinary basic rights for human beings" says Mrs. Ballinger, "namely facilities for the education of their children and proper housing Despite all the regulations to control the movement of the Native population the Natives still drift to the towns because the towns people pay better wages than farmers." This fact should be appreciated by all farmers, including those who believe in the divine right of European farmers to exploit African labour. MAR 8 1941

It is not compulsory labour, we repeat, that will enable the farmers to develop their agricultural pursuits; it is the contentment of the labourers due to satifactory working and living conditions. In the towns, although wages and working conditions are not altogether what they shsould be, there is a better relationship between maseters and servants. The Europeans in towns have learned to respect the feelings of their servants, and they realise that it is only by securing the co-operation of the workers that their industries can be developed satisfactorily. This is a lesson which the farmers must learn and they will soon find their labour difficulties disappearing.

AFRICANS & THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (28)

A FRENCH Priest invited Dessalines to dinner.

He played on his vanity and apprised him that some of the French Officers marvelled at his military exploits and were anxious to meet him vis-a-vis.

He accepted the invitation with pleasure.

On arrival, he found the banquet hall tastefully decorated and he felt rather proud to think that his military prowess had activated this conviviality.

Then an old Negro maid-servant entered the hall to wait on the guests.

She glanced at Dessalines and by a strange twist of her lips, warned Dessalines, through a secret code, that his life was in danger.

This secret code was formulated when the faithful blacks met at Bois Caiman and drank the hot blood of a wild boar, to fight to the end for the freedom of San Domingo.

Immediately, Dessalines unsheathed his sword, flashed it at the nearest opponent, hurtled himself across the banquet table, breaking the crockery, ran to the gate, and then jumped on his horse, flying as fast as he could.

The French Priest did not understand how Dessalines solved the riddle of his visit and it was so sudden that it was not possible to call out the armed Soldiers who were concealed in the other rooms.

Dessalines rode through the town shouting:

"Aux armes! Aux armes! Vive l'independence!"

The news spread like wild fire from one part of the Island to another.

Then the news regarding Toussaint Louverture leaked out.

And the blacks and mulattoes now prepared to fight France to the death.

Petion with other mulatto Officers deserted the rank of the French Army with their mulatto troops.

Christophe handed to Dessalines the 30,000 guns that he had collected.

And the blacks and mulattoes were arrayed in battle against the Army of Napoleon, who was bent on reinstituting slavery on the Island of San Domingo.

Some Negroes and mulattoes, strangely, joined the French side.

They were still loyal to France.

To show them what Napoleon thought of Negroes, the 2,000 loyal Negroes were drowned in the open sea, by General Rochambeau, for spite.

Some white Frenchmen joined the side of the blacks.

But the blacks welcomed them as loyal Republicans.

Trouble then brewed in San Domingo.

The yellow fever was still on.

Leclerc became a victim of the scourge and died.

General Rochambeau was now Commander-in Chief, while Dessalines assumed command of the blacks and the the mulattoes.

With the news of the intrigue of the French Priest regarding the near-assassination of Generalissimo Dessalines, spreading far and wide, the blacks and mulattoes realised that their hour of destiny had arrived.

General Clervaux suddenly revolted and carried with him all his troops to the side of Dessalines.

Simultaneously, Christophe revolted and joined forces with Dessalines.

It was too evident that an interracial war was now in the offing.

The blacks were working fast, and before Rochambeau could realise what was going on, destruction and carnage faced him and his Army, which had been considerably reduced by the yellow fever scourge.

Then the blacks and mulattoes attacked the French and routed them with heavy casualties.

The French fled helter-skelter.

And many prisoners and guns were taken as spoils of war.

Thus was French hegemony smashen in Haiti.

"Napoleon's great effort had ended in complete disaster.

"Of the fifty thousand soldiers sent thither during those short two years, only a few thousand ever saw France again.....while the ten thousand sailors dead of yellow fever were to be surely missed on the day of Trafalgar," writes Stoddard.

In December 1803, Dessalines formally proclaimed the independence of San Domingo as a free and sovereign State.

He abolished the name of "San-Domingo" and revived the name "Haiti," to mark a complete break with the Colonial stage of the history of that unhappy Island.

Meanwhile those who drafted the Constitution of Haiti quarelled over its phraseology.

"What you have done," said Dessalines, "does not fit our mood.

"To draw up an Act of Independence, we should have the skin of a white man for parchment, his skull for an inkwell, his blood for ink, and a sabre for a pen."

The blacks and mulattoes were now tree at last.

Napoleon was no longer a foe of the black man, because Dessalines had accomplished the dreams of Toussaint Louverture.

Leclerc had been buried and Nelson was whipping Napoleon at Trafalgar!

Although Dessalines had promised the whites protection, and had invited them to return to the Island, yet, he proved to be a rascal.

He changed his mind and suddenly decided to dole out to Napoleon what the Corsican had done to Toussaint and to the 2,000 loyal blacks, who were drowned alive, by Rochambeau.

On April 25, 1805, he issued a Proclamation and promulgated an Edict which disfranchised white persons for ever on the Island of Haiti.

This, by the way, has been a cardinal principle of Haitian domestic politics.

Then, like Toussaint, he ordered a Roman Holiday in Haiti, and hypocritically closed his eyes, as blacks began to butcher the whites and loot their property.

The massacre of the whites was vividly described by a French Officer, in a private letter from Jamaica, as follows:

"The murder of the whites, in detail, began at Port-au-Prince, in the first days of January, but on the 17th and 18th March they were finished en masse.

"All, without exception, have been massacred, down to the very women and children.

"Madame de Boynes was killed in a peculiarly horrible manner.

AFRICANS & THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (29)

"A YOUNG mulatto, named Fifi Pariset, ranged the town like a mad man searching the houses to kill little children.

"Many of the men and women were hewn down by sappers, who hacked off their arms and smashed in their chests.

"Some were poinarded, others mutilated, others 'passed on the bayonet,' others disembowelled with knives or sabres, still others stuck like pigs.

"At the beginning, a great number were drowned.

"The same general massacre has taken place all over the Colony, and as I write you these lines I believe that there are not twenty whites still alive—and these not for long."

Thus were the capture and death of Toussaint Louverture avenged.

Thus were the dreams of Napoleon shattered to smithereens.

Thus was the restitution of slavery averted in Haiti.

Thus was Haiti made safe for Black Democracy.

The story of Toussaint Louverture is a story of revenge.

It is a story of Haiti avenging his death, avenging oppression and injustice.

It is pertinent to note an important part the loss of Haiti contributed to the downfall of Napoleon.

After the Peace of Amiens, Napoleon became master of Europe.

His Decrees of Milan and Berlin had placed the British Government in an awkward position, due to his blockade of Britain.

Despite the fact that the Corsican Corporal had become the greatest military genius of Europe, yet he lost Egypt after the battle of the Nile.

He might have reached his military peak at Austerlitz and Moscow, yet he was humbled at Waterloo.

Indeed, Napoleon's nightmare was a composite picture of Toussaint Louverture, Admiral Nelson, and the Earl of Wellington.

Whenever the story of Napoleon is told, it cannot be complete without a direct reference to the part played by these men to pave his downfall and hasten his expatriation to St. Helena, to die unwept, unhonoured and unsung.

Napoleon had planned to use San Domingo as base for his New World Empire.

Being in a central location, San Domingo afforded good opportunity for naval warfare.

According to Professor Hockett, the Treaty of San Ildefonso with Spain made it possible for the shadow of the Corsican to fall across America.

"Under the lead of the remarkable Negro, Toussaint Louverture, a black Republic has been set up and independence proclaimed.

"The career of the 'gilded African,' as Buonaparte called him, on a small scale paralled his own and won for the Negro the name of 'the Black Napoleon.'

DEC 1 2 1940

"... . The war thus prolonged until the heats of summer brought yellow fever to fight the battles of the Islanders

"The white Army melted away and the reconquest of the Island was given up.

"Without it, Louisiana was less desirable, and the Army of occupation had left its homes in San Domingan graves."

(See "Political and Social Growth of the United States" (1933, rev. ed.), pages 367-368.)

The failure of Napoleon in Haiti made it possible for France to sell Louisiana to the United States Government under the eagle eye of President Jefferson, and to blast the dreams of France for any Colony in North America.

DEC 1 2 1940

It is very significant to note that when Napoleon played his last card with Fate, and lost, and was hustled away to the Island of St. Helena, off the coast of Africa (the beloved Nativeland of Toussaint Louverture!), he had occasion to reminisce over his attitude towards Toussaint.

According to J A. Rogers, the West Indian historian (quoting "Historical Miscellanies," (London: 1823) vol. I, page 215), Napoleon made the following statement:

"It would have been much more proper for Toussaint to have been returned to France, as General of a Division, than as a criminal."

This implies that, in Napoleon's belated opinion, the incarceration, together with the torture and death of Toussaint, caused directly by the untramelled ambitions of Napoleon Buonaparte, was a political error.

Indeed, it was a grave political blunder, yet it is one of the ironies of French history!

It is also important to say here that, although Toussaint Louverture dreamed of a free San Domingo, yet he also planned to return to Africa and fight the Slave Trade, possibly with a view to making West Africa a free and independent State, after the fashion of San Domingo.

Consequently, Toussaint planned that after he had emancipated Haiti from political bondage, he would return to his homeland in Dahomey, and use that country as a base to fight the Slave Trade and emancipate West Africa.

For this purpose, he saved over 6,000,000 gold francs (which is equivalent to £2,000,000 sterling, today) and entrusted this money to an American ship Captain, named Stephen Girard—so the allegation of some historians of unimpeachable credit goes.

DEC 1 2 1940

As soon as he learned that Toussaint Louverture had been captured and sent to France as a political prisoner, it is alleged that Girard misappropriated Toussaint's fortune.

It is reported that during his nine months' incarceration in Fort de Joux, Toussaint was tortured by the agents of Napoleon to disclose the place where he had hidden his wealth, but he did not reveal the same to his tormentors.

Yet the news leaked out, but due to legal technicality, the American sailor blessed his stars and become one of the very first millionaires to grace the American continent in the early days of the nineteenth century!

According to Gragnon-La Coste ("Life of Toussaint L'Ouverture" (Paris: 1877), page 203), "Girard, to give him his true name, never returned the millions entrusted to his care following the events which deprived Toussaint of his liberty."

After the death of Toussaint, efforts were made to recover this money and litigation ensued, but this proved abortive.

The Rural Areas

FEB 2 2 1941

The rural peoples are continously making requests to the Authorities for what they need; and of course "necessity knows no law" is an old and wise saying. It has to be said once more that Medical Facilities are the peoples' greatest need, and the care of the sick is a most anxious thought with them.

All the causes that may be set forth on behalf of the sick residentin the Urban areas Freetown and Sherbro Judicial District, are existing proportionately in the Rural Areas; and therefore, the same amount of care and attention is respectfully demanded for all. And it may not be unreasonable to suggest that, sufficient attention should be paid to the sick and otherwise poor people of the Rural Areas, from the consideration that, circumstances do not and cannot allow of Medical Practitioners' residence in the Areas. The situation in the Urban Areas is quite different.

The Medical Authorities know that, there is only one dispensary in the mountain villages which number five; that, in the whole of Waterloo and villages around, something like a radius of ten miles with Waterloo as centre, there is only one dispensary; that for Kent, Banana Islands, Tombo, Russell, etc; there is only one dispensary; and that, there is only one at York and the villages within eighteen miles off, northwards. And strange enough, there is one only Medical Dispenser appointed to each of the four dispensaries named above. There is no assistant to relieve or lighten the weight of their duties which include clerical work Whenever any of the resident dispensers is ill or otherwise unable to attend dispensary, the hardships which the rural peoples usually experience are very great.

In the Urban Areas these hardships are unknown cannot better medical attention be given to the rural peoples who are equally human beings and similarly liable to bodily sufferings?

The plea of inadequacy in the staff at Headquarters is lame; because, for the care of the sick in all civilised lands, foresight is a pre requiste, and nothing like close-fisted policy should be practised. It may be hoped therefore that, as early as possible the Medical Authorities will induce Government to make better and ampler provision for the sick of the whole peninsular villages, and not for the urban peoples only who appear to be well taken in hand already.

Transport facilities are another need of the rural peoples. Nobody that takes civilised life into serious consideration can omit, or even think less of, transport; and, the transport Authorities are well aware of this fact.

The motor buses are being run on real business lines, and the public are the customers. This being the case, there is no reason why the public should be put in any degree of inconvenience in the matter of their transport.

The attention of the Bus Authorities has over and again been called to the inadequacy of the buses put on the roads, and also to the bad condition of some of the buses. It is certainly a matter of great inconvenience to the public when buses on the runs have a break-down. The Authorities concerned may put the buses on the runs; but, are they ever, or always satisfied that the buses are in fit condition? If one or two of the vehicles are in good condition, does it follow that all are in this same condition? Surely, the department has in its service a number, and perhaps sufficient number of engineers. Are the buses usually and carefully overhauled before they are put on the runs? For an example the first—bus on Sunday morning last was unable to take the Hill station cooks and servants to their work. It broke down by the way, and the men never reached their destination till after 8.00 a, m; when they should have answered "Present," at 7.30 a. m. the latest. Almost all the men had to walk a good portion of the distance.

On that same Sunday morning the second bus for Regent did not reach this village in time. It suffered a break-down too. To the writer's knowledge, when the first bus at last recovered its strength, it had to return direct to Freetown without halting at any of the stages and points of request, because there was no conductor in it to issue tickets to travellers. Several people who were ready at the halts were left behind to their bitter disappointment.

All these things loudly call for better transport arrangements and the rural section of the public will not cease complaining till the Authorities take the matter of their transport well in hand.

Another necessary thing connected with the bus transport is Telephone Service. It has been suggested that there should be this service for public as well as departmental use. The writer is quite sure that the Bus Authorities never knew anything of the misfortunes of the two buses put on the runs on Sunday morning last, till the drivers or conductors returned to Freetown and reported.

Supposing the break-down had taken place at, say, between Sussex and Number Two. with the bus going to York, and it was a total break down; how could the news of it be reported at Headquarters, in order that a relief vehicle could be put on the run? Would this not then mean that the passengers in the bus must have to walk on to York, a distance of about eight miles? Of course the alternative would be to send a messenger to Freetown to report the incident; and before a relief bus would be put on the run several hours should have been spent for nothing Telephone Service appears to be a necessity!

Edward H. Williams A Liberal, 85 Negroes In Auditor's Office

FEB 4 1941

DETROIT— (WNS)— Speaking at recent meetings of fraternal organizations and social groups, county Auditor Edward H. Williams discussed the greatly increased recognition of Negroes and Negro abilities in the field of local government.

"Ten years ag barley a score of Negroes were employed in the central county government, and most of them were in maintenance jobs," Mr. Williams stated. "A count I had taken the other day showed a present-day total of 85 Negro employees in the various departments under the Board of County Auditors, and fifty-seven more in the other county offices.

"Nor is the range of opportunity limited as before mostly to low paid positions and menial jobs," said Auditor Williams. "One of my first official actions was the appointment of Mrs. Josephine Belford to the responsible post of Superintendent of the Poor. Mrs. Belford, who I knew to be a woman of fine administrative capacity, was the first person of Negro race so honored in the history of Wayne County."

County Auditor Williams gave many other examples of the vastly widened range of opportunity for Negro employees in the County government. He cited Benjamin B. Pelham, County Accountant and Clerk to the Committee of the Board of Supervisors, who holds the highest position in the Auditors' office.

Also specifically mentioned were Dr. W. T. Love, County Medical Examiner, and Alfred M. Pelham County Budget Director, who has charge of preparing Wayne County's twenty million dollar annual budget.

Among the other members of the group under the Board of County Auditors are three stenographers, five social workers, ten hospital nurses, three hospital supervisors, one hospital investigator, one engineer, two tax researchers, and one chief clerk, Mr. Williams asserted. Almost every department of Wayne County government now contains some able, well-trained Negro employees.

County Auditor Edward H. Williams has long had a reputation in civic circles for extreme liberalism in matters of race and creed. Years ago, on the Detroit Board of Education, he crusaded against prejudice, intolerance, and all strictures on equal opportunity.

He told one group: "I have always contended that public jobs should be filled solely on the basis of merit. My position as County Auditor these last eight years gave me the chance to put my cinvictions into effect. It is amazing what strides have been made by Negro employees of Wayne County since then.

"As long as I am Wayne County Auditor any Negro employee can go as far and reach as high as his ability will take him. I will not tolerate any discrimination," he concluded

Our Deplorable Economic Condition

FEB 8 - 1941

The Urgent Need For An Intelligent Examination

FOR the past few weeks, our contemporary, the "Daily Echo," has been making a series of exposures into the deplorable conditions in relation to our economic structure. Unpalatable though they are those exposures are timely. For it can not be denied by any one who is intelligent enough to read between the lines that we are rapidly deteriorating and losing even what little economic competence we can claim to possess. Under the arresting title of "Slaves in the Gold Coast," the series has been tracing the course of the decline of the influence of the general masses of the country on their own economy. The fact that it is now influenced and controlled for the most part by foreigners can never be heartening reading.

Several things have contributed to this pitiable state of affairs. Time was when both trade and industry and local finance for that matter were controlled by the aborigines. With the opening up of the country however, following the boom in the cocoa trade, a policy of squeezing out set in. The repressive capitalistic system of "Big Business" by which erstwhile independent firms trading in open competition with each other surrendered their identity and merged their interests in a gigantic organisation the more to secure absolute control of the economic life of the people was introduced. The success of this scheme naturally raised up a crop of imitators. Other amalgamations took place and competition was narrowed down to a small compass. Firms which refused to come into the merger were soon forced to close down by the operation of the big financial backing of the Amalgamated firms. The way was now open to an unrestricted and undisturbed economic exploitation of the people.

FEB 8 - 1941

In the meantime Syrians and Lebanese immigrats who usually come to these parts with scarcely a penny in their pockets have begun to acquire economic competence. The Kwahus too, forsaking their farms, descended the plateau which had secured them against invasion for a hundred years, spread out into the States of the plains on an economic conquest. Like the larger European combination of big firms, these Syrian and Kwahu traders also began to form similar combines to operate on the pickings left by the larger bodies. The result is that between the upper and nether millstones represented by the European amalgams on the one hand and the Syrian and Kwahu elements on the other, the ordinary citizen of the Gold Coast is being ground very small indeed

African Trading

By Fr. Bernard Huss, R.M.M.

DEC 28 1940

At the Regional Conference of the South African Institute of Race Relations at East London in April 1935 an African speaker mentioned the difficulty of the Native people in carrying on trade and asked whether the Institute could not help to arrange for the training of Africans in trading.

Mr. Rheinallt Jones said that the Rotary Club of Johannesburg was trying to arrange for instructional talks on the Reef. In other places Joint Councils might do this. In the Western Township of Johannesburg the late Mr. Howard Pim, brother of Sir Alan Pim, and Mr Ballinger had done much to put co-operative trading on its feet. Mr Jones then instanced numerous cases of successful trading by Natives and expressed the view that there are clear indications that successful trading will become more common

In Johannesburg business men meet groups of Native shopkeepers to discuss with them business methods and organization. Some African traders get help from European and Indian wholesalers. Some visit European shops and learn to treat customers courteously and to keep their shop clean and attractive. A few employ European book-keepers who visit their shops once a month.

DEC 28 1940

Practical Experience

The most important part in the training of the African trader is practical experience. The best way to get it is service for some years in a well conducted store. There are many stores where Natives have been working for years as assistants and have gained valuable experience. If such men took evening classes or correspondence courses they could qualify as proper storekeepers or managers in co-operative stores which are sure to grow up.

Some are taking the B.Econ. or the B.Com. degree, a few are studying business in England. These things show how determined the Africans are to learn and manage their own businesses as their cousins, the negroes, do in America where I have seen wonderful progress in various lines of business.

The C.A.U. has now tried for years to give its members some practical training in co operative buying and bookkeeping.

DEC 28 1940

A definite tendency appears among the African traders to organise themselves. They will have to overcome great difficulties as we can see from the following description of disagreement among the Bantu by the Rev Dr. J. L. Dube in his previously mentioned little book :

DEC 28 1940

"One of us may say : 'Men, let us combine for a certain business; it will bring us great profits.' The others agree and say : 'You are right, call a meeting.' The meeting takes place. You are amazed at the eloquence displayed and the wise suggestions given there. You go home and say : 'To-day is to-day, our people have been awakened, we shall see great things, the desert will blossom.' But it was only the foam of that day. If you then try to call the important men together for real business you will find them who had been so hot yesterday to be to-day as cold as a dog's nose."

Apathy is not the only or greatest difficulty. Whilst this is more and more disappearing a great difficulty makes itself more and more felt and this is the deficiency of their moral equipment, as already described. This comprises absolute honesty, perfect reliability unimpeachable integrity, unshakable loyalty, patience and perseverance.

In many lectures I had opportunity to mention this weakness and my listeners were never offended. It happened that they interrupted me or asked me afterwards to mention those qualities again slowly so that they could write them down, or I had to leave my notes with the secretary This shows on the one hand how gratefully they accept from us genuine advice even in the form of bitter pills ; on the other hand how determined they are to earn to organise and to succeed.

An African official of the Western Township Co-operative Store told me a few weeks ago that he tried to organise 500 African traders around the Rand for the purpose of buying co-operatively, but the traders could not agree. It is quite possible that in course of time they will discover that unity is strength and that they will make use of their organised forces for their own economic advantage.

It is European opposition and the policy of segregation which drive the African traders more and more together and provide the necessary cement for holding them together.

Business Association

On November 18, 1937 two hundred African traders and business men coming from all over the Reef and Pretoria met at Johannesburg to discuss and consider the trading rights of the Africans as stipulated in the Native Laws Amendment Act of 1937 and to establish an association for protecting and safeguarding the interests of the African traders and business men as well as for promoting and encouraging business enterprise among Africans. At the conclusion of this meeting a definite organisation under the name of the African National Business Association was inaugurated.

An attempt at organised trading was considered in the middle of 1938 by the South African Dingaka ("ngaka" means Native doctor) Herbalists and Midwives' Society at a meeting near Pretoria This Society intends to open co-operative stores throughout the Union under the name of the South African Dingaka Aid Society with a view to sending twelve African children overseas for a higher commercial education. The stores will be run by African women and all members will be allowed to hold shares.

We shall have to wait patiently for a long time till we can see some substantial fruit of this attempted organisation. Between 1925-1935 two big African organisations, the I.C.U. (Industrial and Commercial workers' Union) and the A.N.C. (African National Congress) intended and promised to open co-operative stores "all over the country."

Ignorance !

When I lectured in the court house at Ngeleni in 1928 I was challenged by the I.C.U. and asked whether I did not know the famous I.C.U. Co-operative Store at Kingwilliamstown. To my shame I had to confess publicly my gross ignorance about that matter. I at once inquired from Mr. Ballinger about this store and heard that there was none, and neither of those two organisations has a single co-operative store to day.

THE BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

DEC 28 1941

BY SENATOR EDGER H. BROOKES)

The wage problem is, from certain points of view, the most important in Bantu life. By this I do not mean to suggest that money is more important than spiritual or educational ideals, or that people with low wages must necessarily lead a bad life, or even that people with good wages will necessarily lead a good life. I do mean, however, that it is very much easier to lead a good life when one is freed from pressing temptations, the continual worry of making ends meet, and perpetual debt. DEC 28 1941

The test of facts shows that Bantu wages all over the country are too low. When we say that wages are too low, we mean that they are not enough to enable the average family to live a decent life with the minimum of good food required for keeping in health. When we present a case for higher wages in any particular centre, we ought to give actual figures in support of our claim. In a study of this kind, it is more difficult to do so, because these figures vary considerably from time to time and from place to place. Very full particulars for Johannesburg and the Reef area, for example, can be obtained from Dr Ray Phillips's book, "The Bantu in the City."

One fact emerges from almost every investigation, that there is a gap between the wage of the father of the family and the minimum amount on which he and his wife and children can live in decency and health. This gap amounts in many cases to £1. 10s. a month, if not more.

Some people may ask "Why do you speak of a man, his wife and children, when a large number of workers in the towns have their permanent homes in the Reserves?" The answer to that is that we must take married man with a family as the basis when we are fixing wages. More and more people are living permanently in towns. It is better that the man who comes in from the country should have a little surplus to send home than that the man whose home is in town should not be able to provide for his wife and children. All over the world Trade Unions have fought for this principle. They have never been willing to accept a wage based on a bachelor's standard of living, and they have not even been willing to accept different wage rates for single and married men, because, as they rightly point out, the tendency when that is done is in times of depression to get rid of the expensive married man, particularly the man with a large family, first. Such action is a disgrace to the selfish employer, but it does take place, and we must make provision according. DEC 28 1941

Country wages are very much affected by town wages. The special methods by which wages can be raised in towns are not applicable to the country districts, but as town wages rise there is bound to be gradual shortage of farm labour, and, except for a change of heart on the part of the farming community as a whole, this seems the only way of getting farm wages raised. Quite likely, efforts may be made at a later date—the practice has already begun in some areas—to bring in low-paid farm labourers from outside the Union. This we should have to fight, as it would take away the one chance of raising the farm labourer's status.

The farms will be discussed more fully later on, but it may be mentioned here that conditions vary so widely as to make it impossible to make sweeping statements about farms and farmers in general. While there is much personal kindness, and sometimes, on the best farms, ties of real friendship between the farmer and his people, farm wages are, in the majority of cases, very low indeed. Investigation by Government experts, not at all biased or trying to make a case for the Bantu, has shown that even when a cash value is given to all benefits, such as free grazing, the right to cultivate, and occasional presents from the farmer, the total wages received are still below the minimum required.

The farms, the Reserves and the towns all influence one another. More successful production in the Reserves, making them less dependent on wages earned in the towns, would actually help the towns. The Native Affairs Department works with this end in view. It hopes to produce a more prosperous Reserve population, and to reduce the competition in the towns between the permanent town-dwellers and those coming from the country, and willing to work at a lower wage. The Native Economic Commission some years ago said that we should take as our ideal "a smaller, better paid and more efficient urban Native population." We may agree with this if we are allowed to add that reducing members is not an end in itself, and that we do not want people driven out without provision being made for them, but only such an improvement in the Reserves as would gradually reduce the member of workers leaving them. DEC 28 194

In the towns, then, as we face this wage question, we realise the need for higher wages. But before we go on to see how wages can be raised, it may be as well to point out that there are two groups of thinkers, claaiming to be friends of the Non-European population, who do not share the view expressed in these articles that raising wages should be one of our first objects. DEC 28 1941

One group—it would be better, I think, not to mention names—stands for a low-wage policy. It claims that the only weapon of the Non-European is his ability to undercut the European, and that once he loses this ability his chances of employment will diminish considerably. Presumably in the end European wages will be forced down to something nearer the Bantu level.

With this vew I desagree. It is better to bring wages to a uniformly high level than to a uniformly low level. The low-wage policy, in my opinion, would make for continual racial friction of the worst type, and would hold the

DEC 28 194

It has long been a standing grievance of the Non-European population in general, and of the Africans in particular, that Non-Europeans could attend only the first three years of the full medical course at a South African University, and that they had to go overseas for the three clinical years. Medical training is expensive at best: to have to go to Europe or U.S.A. for it, made it more expensive still. Some of the well-to-do Indian families have been able to afford it. But, the Coloured and African parents able to send a son or daughter overseas have been few indeed.

This grievance has, at long last, been removed by the decison of the University of the Witwatersrand to offer full clinical training to Non-European students in its Medical and Dental Schools.

The decision was made possible by the great expension, in the last fifteen years, of hospitals for Non European patients, which are now large enough to offer an adequate variety and number of medical, surgical and gynaecological cases for thorough clinical instruction. When the new hospital in Orlando has been built, the clinical facilities available for Non-European students will be even greater.

Similarly, the new Dental Clinic of the University for which the plans have been completed, will include the necessary accommodation for training Non-European dentists on Non-European patients. Until now, though there are about ten fully-qualified African medical men with overseas degrees practising in the Union, there has been no qualified African or indeed Coloured or Indian dentist in the Union. Thanks to the new policy of the University, there may be the first Non European dentist in practice in about six years time: there certainly will be a steady, but not spectacular, increase of Non-European doctors. DEC 28 1940

Owing to the pressure on the laboratories and lecture rooms of the University for the four Natural sciences (Physics, Chemistry, Botany, Zology), which form the first year of the medical course, these courses will be taken at the Native College, Fort Hare. Successful students will then be admitted to Anatomy and Physiology, the subjects of the second year of study. Non European students with a first-class matriculation record will be eligible for bursaries on the same terms as European.

The fees for the course are heavy, amounting—apart from living expenses—to £60 per annum for each of the three years, and £55 per annum for each of the last three years, or £345 in all. These fees, however, are inclusive, covering registration, S.R.C. fees, students' medical benefit society etc. The dental course one year shorter but student may combine a medical and a dental degree in [illegible] years.

The University [illegible] helped by grants from the Bantu Welfare Trust in meeting the expenses of appointing additional staff for the clinical instruction of Non-European.

All concerned in this development are to be congratulated on opening completely a door hitherto half-closed to Non-European advancement. It is to be hoped that the candidates offering themselves for the course will be the very best that the Non-European communitties can produce. For, only a man or woman of good character and good intelligence can become a good doctor or a good dentist. It will be a great day especially for the African peoples when the first African medical student comes up to be capped for his degree.

OLD HATRED RISES IN SOUTH AFRICA

History Of Union Traced By Childers; Feud Between Rulers And Anti-British Is Renewed

BY JAMES SAXON CHILDERS

The current rioting in Johannesburg is no surprise to anyone who knows the political situation in South Africa.

The English and the Boers, the predominant white peoples of South Africa, have a deep dislike for each other which they inherited from their forefathers and which through the years has been accentuated by economic, national and religious rivalries.

Three hundred years ago in the early part of the seventeenth century, the Dutch dropped anchor off the southern tip of the African continent. Working their way north from the Cape of Good Hope, they settled the country. They farmed, raised cattle and prospered.

Then at the time of the Napoleonic wars the English came and began to muscle in. The English were the stronger people and gradually they took over control of that part of South Africa which bordered the sea. They took over the important ports; they took over the choice land immediately behind these ports. Naturally the Dutch were resentful.

There was a second and perhaps an even greater cause of resentment. The Dutch were slave holders. They looked upon the native as man power, as labor, and little else.

MAR 1 3 1941

The English opposed slavery and were insistent about the freeing of the black man. Also they wanted to grant a greater freedom to the Hottentots, the Bushmen and the other natives than the Dutch were willing to permit.

FINALLY in 1838 an open rupture occurred, and the British made their Great Trek. Declaring that they could no longer endure British rule and that they could no longer live even near the British, the Boers trekked north, leaving that part of South Africa which is now Cape Province, the southernmost province of the country, and Natal, the southwestern province. They settled in the part of South Africa now known as the Orange Free State and the Transvaal.

MAR 1 3 1941

For decades the English did not intrude these new settlements of the Dutch, but as more and more British settlers came to South Africa, the population pressure around the seaports forced Englishment toward the lands that the Boers had taken in the interior. Once more the old rivalry and the old struggle and the old hatred were renewed.

Finally in the 1870's open hostilities between the English and the Boers broke out. This first Boer War was of no great consequence, except as an indication and a promise.

Then in 1886, gold was discovered on the Witwatersand—the Roof of the White Waters, the land where the Dutch had settled after the Great Trek. There was a terrific rush to this new settlement and the town that grew up became known as Johannesburg.

The almost incredible wealth of the area—five billion dollars worth of gold, one-fifth the total mined gold of the world has been dug in the Johannesburg district—this great wealth lured so many English that soon they were in sufficient numbers to challenge the Boers.

There was constant bickering and fighting until finally in 1899 the two peoples went once more to open war.

In 1902 this war, the Boer War, was settled by the English taking complete control of all South Africa.

But neither side had forgotten, and the Boers did not forgive. Even the formation of the Union of South Africa in 1910, obviously a British gesture to placate the Boers, was unsuccessful. Politically and nominally there was an abiding division.

Through the years, this division has been nurtured by the Boers. They have held fast to their language, a corruption of Holland Dutch and known as Afrikaans. They have dropped the old name of Boers—which means farmer or tiller of the soil—and they took the new name of Afrikander, meaning a man of Africa. Their stern predicants and persistent teachers constantly reminded them of their Dutch heritage and of the treatment they had received at the hands of the intruding English.

In 1938 the Afrikanders gave full vent to their feelings when at the time of the centennial of the Great Trek of their forefathers, they set out from the cape and from the southeast coast in ox wagons, just as their fathers had done. They drove the old trails to the north and when they approached the modern cities they were met by Afrikander men and women wearing the dress of the early Boers.

As the heavy wagons came over the hills the men unhitched the oxen aside, harnessed themselves to the wagons, and the women alone dragged the wagons to the center of the cities where the celebration was to be held. Fresh cement was placed beside the highways and the women walked barefoot through it and the oxen plodded through it, that their footprints might show forever as proof of their loyalty and as incitement to their children.

At this time, in 1938, the Afrikanders allowed their beards to grow as their fathers had done, and now the reports out of Johannesburg say that after a day of rioting, soldiers saw a bearded man on a street car. They pulled him off and beat him up. The report was merely saying that soldiers loyal to the British Empire saw an Afrikander, a man loyal to South Africa, and once more the ancient hatred proved itself.

At present in South Africa there is a strong Nationalist party that works day and night to take over the country entirely. This party is determined to break all official ties with England and rid the country even of British influence. There will be one predominant church, the Dutch Reformed Church. The slogan is "South Africa for South Africans alone!"

MAR 1 3 1941

In 1939 after England had declared war and all the other dominions and colonies had hastened to her aid, South Africa still held out. Finally Hertzog, the prime minister, went into the House of Assembly with a motion asking that South Africa ignore England's declaration of war and that South Africa announce itself as permanently on friendly terms with Germany.

REVIEW.
FEB 1 - 1941

In a review of the Annual Report of the Institute of Race Relations, the Bishop of Bloemfontein the Right Rev. A. H. Howe-Browne, in the last issue of the Diocesan Journal states: "A month or two ago we reviewed a book about conditions in one of the Johannesburg Native Townships. There has now come into our hands a Report which in some ways is a supplement in that book but which concerns a town in our Diocese, namely, Kroonstad. The Report is the outcome of an investigation by the Race Relations Institute. It makes rather starting reading, for it is quite clear that the natives of Kroonstad can hardly make both ends meet, if they are honest. The root of the trouble is, as might be expected the low wages paid to the Native employee. Bloemfontein has a wage determination, which ensures a minimum wage to Native male workers of 3/6d. a day or 20/- a week, but Kroonstad has not and the average wage is not much above 12/6d. a week, although it appears that the cost of living is actually higher in Kroonstad than it is in Bloemfontein. The inevitable result is under feeding, and it is stated that the children, for instance hardly ever get milk.

BANTU LANGUAGES

ONLY ONE NEEDED

JAN 25 1941

Sir,

In regard to "The Bantu World" leader of one of the recent issues concerning Bantu languages, I will remain opposed to the suggestion for the forming of "three languages" as expressed therein. It would not be intelligable enough to create three formidable language forces to be and only to remain opposed to one another as a a vexatious problem in the Bantu families for still an indefinite period. Why not discard the malevolence once and for all!

The Rev. H. Maimane's scars have itched unsatisfactory, for they are the result of the 1921 suggestions of uniting the relative languages only, in which some probabilities for some detrimental "unity" of the Bantu remain suspectable. And even the T.A.T.A. of that time were possibly to have been lock-headed by such a theory. In that I would agree with him in the other way round that we have the defference of Bantu languages just as they are.

All I am interested in are some creating a continental or a south cheating a continent or a south of the Equato Bantu language. In this I would candidly call upon our B.A.'s, M.A.'s and all our philological experts as opportune mediators for a NEW BANTU LANGUAGE, and should this fail or them failing in the bright course, then I would again suggest that we choose one prominent Bantu language, say Zulu, as the already leading language, to be enforced as the inter-Bantu language in the southern hemisphere.

The opposition, however, has been great, and it shall always be there as it has always been. But a unanimous resolution in the form of a plebiscite by education authorities to mediate, may be indecisively, especally for appositions, would be most appreciable. We should not allow the opposition to gain ground. I know the whiteman is very daring if he favours a thing, in that, he crossed the perilous seas to expand his mission of delight and light for the good of the nations, and so he would once more die to force the Bantu Education Department to lead for this suggested and desired end. This fould not be a matter to satisfy or dissatisfy so and so, but would be for the Bantu end.

I would suggest that the education curriculum be drawn on either of the following mediums:

(1) A new Bantu language, specialised industrially and commercially for the Bantu;

(2) A diffusion of the Zulu language, and Zulu only in the southern hemisphere.

Ethiopia

As you read of the rising of the dark people of Ethiopia to reclaim their land from the Italian invaders, you can obtain a great change from the customary visions in your mind's eye by visualizing that vast and lonely land.

FEB 12 1941

Such a variation of thought, of concept, as to the nature of our common world, sometimes can be very broadening and stimulating. It can break us loose from too much of concentration upon our own immediate little sphere. It can suggest to us something of the infinity that lies behind our blurred visions and our many limitations.

For example, here are a few paragraphs descriptive of Ethiopia written by R. H. Markham for The Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Markham was his paper's correspondent in Addis Ababa during the Italo-Ethiopian war.

"There are no road maps," he writes, "because there are practically no roads. There are no signposts and no milestones. There are practically no stations, no inns, no camps where you may replenish supplies. The grass grows and behold trails are gone: the sand blows and trails are gone: jungle bushes intertwine and trails are gone.

"There is no place to go. Every place is as every other place. The stars look the same from here; the stars look the same from there. The same cold, stealthy darkness enshrouds every place. It swallows one up as a lake swallows a stone, as a desert swallows a footprint. Wherever you are you're nowhere. It is all a monotonous tom-tom, tom-tom, tom-tom—and the Italian soldiers hear it."

If one meditates upon such a land even for a little while, he's pretty likely to get a change of mood, if nothing else. It is escaping, through the imagination, from our familiar environment.

But one cannot long think about these two so different parts of the globe, without remembering that, different as they are, strange as seems the picture of Ethiopia, the tom-toms beating in that land are saying that this is all one world, that essentially, there is only one great struggle for human betterment, diverse as are the means and ideas employed in the struggle.

ATTEMPT AT UNIFICATION DEPLORED

Sir,

I have read with ever-growing heat the recent articles on Bantu Languages in "The Bantu World." I cannot see why Southern Suto Setsoana and Sepedi should be considered unifiable, whereas Xhosa and Zulu aren't. I feel certian that on investigation, it will be found that the differences (and they are the problems of unification) existing amongst the languages of the first group, are much more than those between those of the second. Therefore, why not attempt to merge Xhosa and Zulu also, and thus have two South African Bantu Languages?

Why attempt these unifying processes at all? What good can we ever derive therefrom? What's there in a Bantu language? If it's the unity of Africans at large that we desire, how then is the Gold Coast, Uganda, or Equatorial or even Abyssinian African supposed to benefit through this unification? Remember we in South Africa are not the only Africans. Is there, at present, any Commercial, Literary, Economic, or other real value in our Bantu Languages? It is not true that these languages are (1) a tsumbling block to our scholars and teachers? (2) a heavy burden for he Black man's shoulders, as they form a considerable portion of that foundation upon which tribalism is rooted?

In these circumstances I would suggest that we strike the iron while it is hot and copy—without shame in doing so—the example set us by the American Negro, who determinedly trod on his, and—unshamedly again—made his master's language his own, thereby forging his progress and tolerability by a great stroke a tremendous bound.

Afrikaans and English are both rich in an inexhaustible literature of great educational value. They are the Official languages (which means very much), and we can add to these to their benefit and ours. If there's any action to be taken, why not direct it usefully in a vigorous campaign against the Education Departments, requesting them to see to it (1) That Bantu Languages be done away with after Sub B; (2) That English and Afrikaans be the medium instruction as from Std. I.

This campaign being successful, the results would then be:-

(1) Sounder education amongst Africans;

(2) Better examination results;

(3) Better relations between White and Black;

(4) A common language for Africans as English is universal and also widespread even in Africa.

Let the Bantu Languages go to seed in the bookshelves, if you can't set fire to them! But for pity's sake don't mass them up!!

The Conquering Lion Of Judea

FEB 18 1941

MANY CURRENT periodicals are offering the return of the Lion of Judea to his old haunts in Ethiopia as one of the answers proposed to England as to what is her war objective. Haile Selassie, the little bewhiskered monarch, who after fighting to the last ditch was forced to take up exile in England, a worn, broken but never forgotten man. The gallant little Lion plead with all his main and might for help when help would have been effective. Here possibly the history of the world for a thousand years might have been written if the great powers had hearkened to his voice. But that is neither here nor there, what is interesting to the world now, is the apparent crack up of the spoils the Italians took over in their lust for carcas after the kill.

The Kingdom of Ethiopia is one of the oldest in the record of civilization. It is said that the banished ruler is of the line of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. The land is old and proud and has a tradition that rivals any records of government in the world. It comprised of a quiet peaceful people, attending to their own business and who for centuries refused conquest to the ends of increasing their boundaries.

This meant nothing to the brutal thrust of the power mad Mussolini. He felt that he was predestined to overthrow the holy things of God and feared not to touch the sacred Ark of the Covenant.

It may well be said from recent developments, the mills of the gods grind fast when it comes to dictators. With the poor fighting the Italians are putting up, with their lack of strategy and military technique of the modern era, the stronghold of Italy will in the end lose confidence in the great iron man chosen to lead them and will turn upon him just as he has turned upon helpless nations killing barefoot fighters and ruthlessly running off kings and royal houses.

Woe unto him who touches the Ark of the Covenant. In those days shall come one Mussolini and he shall drive to the east and the west shall touch the holy things of God. He will drive off kings and leave the dead to bury the dead, but the ploughman will overtake the reaper and that man shall be sorely smitten. The Conquering Lion of Judea will return to his throne and the whole house of Europe and in that day for those who chased them, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah.

For example, here are a few paragraphs descriptive of Ethiopia written by R. H. Markham for The Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Markham was his paper's correspondent in Addis Ababa during the Italo-Ethiopian war.

"There are no road maps," he writes, "because there are practically no roads. There are no signposts and no milestones. There are practically no stations, no inns, no camps where you may replenish supplies. The grass grows and behold trails are gone; the sand blows and trails are gone; jungle bushes intertwine and trails are gone.

"There is no place to go. Every place is as every other place. The stars look the same from here; the stars look the same from there. The same cold, stealthy darkness enshrouds every place. It swallows one up as a lake swallows a stone, as a desert swallows a footprint. Wherever you are you're nowhere. It is all a monotonous tom-tom, tom-tom, tom-tom—and the Italian soldiers hear it."

If one meditates upon such a land even for a little while, he's pretty likely to get a change of mood, if nothing else. It is escaping, through the imagination, from our familiar environment.

But one cannot long think about these two so different parts of the globe, without remembering that, different as they are, strange as seems the picture of Ethiopia, the tom-toms beating in that land are saying that this is all one world, that essentially, there is only one great struggle for human betterment, diverse as are the means and ideas employed in the struggle.

BANTU LANGUAGES

ATTEMPT AT UNIFICATION DEPLORED

JAN 25 1941

Sir,

I have read with ever-growing heat the recent articles on Bantu Languages in "The Bantu World." I cannot see why Southern Suto Setsoana and Sepedi should be considered unifiable, whereas Xhosa and Zulu aren't. I feel certian that on investigation, it will be found that the differences (and they are the problems of unification) existing amongst the languages of the first group, are much more than those between those of the second. Therefore, why not attempt to merge Xhosa and Zulu also, and thus have two South African Bantu Languages?

Why attempt these unifying processes at all? What good can we ever derive therefrom? What's there in a Bantu language? If it's the unity of Africans at large that we desire, how then is the Gold Coast, Uganda, or Equatorial or even Abyssinian African supposed to benefit through this unification? Remember we in South Africa are not the only Africans. Is there, at present, any Commercial, Literary, Economic, or other real value in our Bantu Languages? It is not true that these languages are (1) a stumbling block to our scholars and teachers? (2) a heavy burden for he Black man's shoulders, as they form a considerable portion of that foundation upon which tribalism is rooted?

In these circumstances I would suggest that we strike the iron while it is hot and copy—without shame in doing so—the example set us by the American Negro, who determinedly trod on his, and—unshamedly again—made his master's language his own, thereby forging his progress and tolerability by a great stroke a tremendous bound

Afrikaans and English are both rich in an inexhaustible literature of great educational value. They are the Official languages (which means very much), and we can add to these to their benefit and ours. If there's any action to be taken, why not direct it usefully in a vigorous campaign against the Education Departments, requesting them to see to it

(1) That Bantu Languages be done away with after Sub B;

(2) That English and Afrikaans be the medium instruction as from Std. I.

This campaign being successful, the results would then be:-

(1)Sounder education amongst Africans;

(2) Better examination results;

(3) Better relations between White and Black;

(4) A common language for Africans as English is universal and also widespread even in Africa.

Let the Bantu Languages go to seed in the bookshelves, if you can't set fire to them! But for pity's sake don't mass them up!!

The Conquering Lion Of Judea

FEB 18 1941

MANY CURRENT periodicals are offering the return of the Lion of Judea to his old haunts in Ethiopia as one of the answers proposed to England as to what is her war objective. Haile Selassie, the little bewhiskered monarch, who after fighting to the last ditch was forced to take up exile in England, a worn, broken but never forgotten man. The gallant little Lion plead with all his main and might for help when help would have been effective. Here possibly the history of the world for a thousand years might have been written if the great powers had hearkened to his voice. But that is neither here nor there, what is interesting to the world now, is the apparent crack up of the spoils the Italians took over in their lust for carcas after the kill.

The Kingdom of Ethiopia is one of the oldest in the record of civilization. It is said that the banished ruler is of the line of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. The land is old and proud and has a tradition that rivals any records of government in the world. It comprised of a quiet peaceful people, attending to their own business and who for centuries refused conquest to the ends of increasing their boundaries.

This meant nothing to the brutal thrust of the power mad Mussolini. He felt that he was predestined to overthrow the holy things of God and feared not to touch the sacred Ark of the Covenant.

It may well be said from recent developments, the ills of the gods grind fast when it comes to dictators. With the poor fighting the Italians are putting up, with their lack of strategy and military technique of the modern era, the stronghold of Italy will in the end lose confidence in the great iron man chosen to lead them and will turn upon him just as he has turned upon helpless nations killing barefoot fighters and ruthlessly running off kings and royal houses.

Woe unto him who touches the Ark of the Covenant. In those days shall come one Mussolini and he shall drive to the east and the west shall touch the holy things of God. He will drive off kings and leave the dead to bury the dead, but the ploughman will overtake the reaper and that man shall be sorely smitten. The Conquering Lion of Judea will return to his throne and the whole house of Europe and in that day for those who chased them, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah.

ETHIOPIA'S STATUS

MAR 1 1941

Democratic opinion, supported by the anti-imperialist sections of the press is demanding the British government to extend official recognition to Ethiopia as an ally, and to give a definite assurance to Haile Selassie that his country will be restored to full sovereign independence after the expulsion of the Italian invaders from Africa.

Paradoxical as it might seem, although a British military mission is cooperating with Selassie and his chieftains, the British government has up to now refused to make a clear and unequivocal statement on Ethiopia's future political status.

Commenting upon the question, the liberal Manchester Guardian of London states in a leading editorial:

"Mr. Eden's return to the Foreign Office was welcomed because it was believed to end the policy of buying off tyrants at the cost of other peoples. When he was at the Foreign Office before, he stood for the principles of right and law in international affairs; he lost office for them, a rare thing in our politics. He is again Foreign Secretary, with Lord Cranbone, who shared his convictions and his fall, to speak for foreign policy in the House of Lords. The fortress, then, is in firm hands. One of the regions to which Mr. Eden should turn an early eye is Ethiopia. To most people it would be news, and disagreeable too, if there were any doubt about the relationship of this country and its government with Ethiopia and her Emperor. They assume that since Italy entered the war we must have repudiated our recognition of her conquest of Ethiopia, and that it is part of our formal policy to restore the independence of that country, and that Ethiopia and her Emperor, both of whom we are most actively urging into the war on Italy, are in a full sense our ally.

"We have not yet formally declared that we no longer recognize Italy's conquest or that for us the Emperor is the de jure ruler of Ethiopia. We have said various things, and because they are so various we had better look at them closely."

The Manchester Guardian's editorial has created widespread interest in colonial circles in England and in America. The demand that Ethiopia be recognized as an ally on equal status with such countries as Poland, Norway, Belgium, Holland and even the Free French forces under Gen. Charles De Gaulle, is growing.

MAR 1 1941

It was pointed out that Felix Eboue, the Negro governor of Chad territory in Equatorial Africa, was the first French colonial administrator to revolt against the Vichy government and to throw in his lot with the British. Therefore, Africans deserve more consideration than has been shown Ethiopia and her Emperor up till now. It should be remembered that British colonials have already contributed over 18,000,000 pounds ($90,000,000) towards the defense of Britain. Jamaica was the first to start a Spitfire Fund, followed by other West Indian and African colonies. Let us trust that these sacrifices in the name of democracy are not in vain.

Ethiopia . . .

- - story of a great country

MAR 8 - 1941

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of five or more articles on Ethiopia and its Soldier-King, Emperor Haile Selassie I, being especially written by our staff writer, A. M. Wendell Malliet. The series will deal with the history of Ethiopia, going back to the journey of the Queen of Sheba to the Palace of Solomon as a result of which the Menelik I, who became king of Ethiopia, was born. Modern Ethiopia, as a pawn in European diplomacy and the role of Selassie as one of the important figures in these momentous days, will be clearly stated by Mr. Malliet, whose researches will bring to light some remarkable facts about the birthplace of human civilization.

By A. M. WENDELL MALLIET

In no country in the world have the ideas and goals of white-world supremacy been more diabolical and effective than in Ethiopia. European statesmanship deprived her of an outlet to the sea and made her a landlocked nation; her emperors and statesmen, some of whom have been the equal, if not the superior, of the world's greatest national leaders, have been rudely ignored and even jeered; her internal weaknesses and shortcomings have been magnified and publicized out of proportion to any true picture of conditions as they were, and all efforts of the Ethiopians themselves to build a new and more progressive and independent nation have never received from the stronger powers the sympathy and encouragement that would have been given to a sister nation had her population been members of the so-called white race.

MAR 8 - 1941

But in spite of all these handicaps, Ethiopia is still in the forefront of the nations, particularly Great Britain in her hour of dire need, and her valiant Emperor Haile Selassie has become the symbol of victory and leader of armies, whose objectives are largely the salvation of the British Empire and the crushing defeat of the Axis Powers.

As far back as September, 1935, Dr. John P. Harrington of the Smithsonian institution, Washington, D. C., said: "Ethiopia and the Rock of Gibraltar guard opposing ends of a waterway vital to the British Empire. The Gibraltar of the West is only a rock less than three miles long . . . The Gibraltar that protects the eastern end of Britain's water highway is a whole plateau of African mountains—the impregnable fortress of Ethiopia. . . . A military coup which could be given from Ethiopia might settle the fate of the British Empire and cut the connection between England and India at a time when this connection was urgently needed." The foregoing explains now the large-scale support of Emperor Haile Selassie with men, munitions, equipment, money and technical help by England to oust the Italian army of occupation.

Had Selasie been a white man, not even an emperor, he would have been hailed as one of the world's greatest figures, a "Lawrence of Arabia" for example. But his role in history has been decided by the logic of events. He is the supreme moral leader of the world; its greatest seer and statesman; its most courageous king-emperor. He is a military leader of dashing courage, keen insight and unbounded patience and understanding.

Who is this fifty-year-old African emperor—this man of destiny, who lost a throne and may yet save modern civilization from the brutal savagery of the Huns under Hitler, Mussolini and Matsuoka?

MAR 8 - 1941

Haile Selassie I, (Power of the Holy Trinity) King of ings, Emperor of Ethiopia, Conquering Lion of Judah, was born in 1891 in the Province of Harrar, where he inherited vast estates. His father, Ras Makonnen, was considered the most enlightened and highly educated Ethiopian of his time. He was the first cousin of the great Emperor Menelik, and was one of Menelik's most trusted diplomats and generals, serving as minister to Paris, London and Rome, and afterwards distinguishing himself as commander of the great armies that defeated the Italians at Adowa in 1896.

Of this great modern African king-emperor, C. F. Rey in his friendly book, "The Real Abyssinia," says: "Amid the few strong men and striking personalities brought to light during and immediately after the Great War, Tafari Makonnen, now King of Kings of Ethiopia under the style of Haile Selassie I, deserved to take a high place. I have had the privilege of knowing him since 1919, and few personalities with whom I have come in contact have made so deep an impression upon me as this remarkable man."

But as dramatic as was his appearance before the League of Nations to plead his country's cause; as heroic as his stand against the military power of the Italians and as brilliantly and as thoroughly as he out-manoeuvered the great diplomats of several British Governments in their long struggle to wrest the Lake Tana waters and territory from Ethiopia, the real Haile Selassie, Man of Vision and Action, can not be fully understood without a knowledge of his background—a knowledge of the ancient Land of Ethiopia, its peoples, culture, customs and civilization. African Seamen Exploited By British Shipping Companies

Practice Continues Despite Numerous Protests to British Board of Trade—Men Hired and Fired at Will.

FEB 1 1941 FEB 1 1941

LIVERPOOL, England, Jan. 30—(ANP)—Despite numerous protests to the British Board of Trade, the plight of Nigerian seamen employed by the Elder Dempster Shipping Company remains virtually the same. According to reports from Pastor G. D. Ekarte, of the African Churches Mission here, African seamen have been employed at ridiculously low wages and have been fired when they made some attempt to improve their conditions.

This English shipping company, operating from the African West Coast to Liverpool, makes a policy of hiring only those Nigerians who do not belong to the Natinal Union of Seamen so that collective bargaining is out of the question. In mixed crews, although the African seamen perform the same work as English seamen, there is a marked difference in their respective wages.

A petition to the Board of Trade in London, sent by seamen on the freighter "Abosso," brought some half-hearted attempt to placate the men by promising to consider the matter. Instead of keeping their promise the company began to employ cheap labor, giving jobs only to those who would accept low wages. The company hires those men only from port of embarkation to the port of disembarkation, assuming no responsibility to bring them back to their homes. On arrival, the men are discharged and fresh hands are taken.

"These fresh hands," says Pastor Ekarte, "are for the most part 'raw' Africans who know practically nothing of a seaman's job. As a result, they are engaged at a very low wage—six pounds a month, including the five-pound goernment subsidy.

7. HOUSING

Closely connected with the problem of wages is that of housing. If the wages paid to the father of a family are not enough, he must either live in slum conditions or be supplied with what is called "sub-economic" housing, that is, with a house let at a rent which does not bring in a fair return on the cost of the house.

Opinions are divided on the question of whether it is better to pay a higher cash wage and charge an "economic" rent or to rely on the "sub-economic" rent to help matters out. My own opinion is definitely that it is always better to pay a wage which makes a man independent and enables him to look after his own interests. It will take time, however, before this can be done and in the meantime the provision of houses at specially cheap rentals is doing much to ease the position.

There is another important and —interesting point about housing Kindly friends of the poor and theorists about poverty tend to think in terms of housing. The poor themselves tend to think in terms of food That is why there is sometimes conflict between progressive and well-meaning Municipalities and the Bantu for whom they are trying to make provision. Beautiful houses — at least relatively beautiful, compared with the slums—are provided miles away from the centre of the town, not only adding transport charges, and using upon them money which might have been spent for food, but also raising the actual cost of food itself by moving the housewife away from the Market and competitive shopping area. It is a difficult thing to get Municipalities away from the idea that any Bantu Villages ought to be miles from the centre of the town, but in the Southern part of the United States of America, where racial segregation also prevails, the Negro quarter of the town is often quite near the business centre.

JUSTIFIABLE RESENTMENT

Small wages affect housing, even when it is "sub-economic", and always in the same way, by encouraging overcrowding. Firstly, the houses, even when of a satisfactory and pleasing type, are in the nature of the case, small, too small for a large growing family. Secondly, in the endeavour to make ends meet, families sometimes take lodgers in their already overcrowded homes. Local authorities try to stop this, by imposing a special Lodger's Fee, and in some areas, have aroused great and thoroughly justifiable resentment by classifying as lodgers, grown-up sons of the family.

The value of good housing is threefold. Firstly, it is of immense importance to health, as many diseases...and most strikingly tuberculosis...are actively spread by overcrowding. Secondly, it makes a great difference to the culture and self-respect of the family. Thirdly, especially if the houses have a sufficient number of separate rooms, it assists in maintaining the standards of morality.

CONSTRUCTIVE IMAGINATION

Although housing is very much bound up with the wage question, it must also be considered on its own merits. Even within the present limits of finance available, it is possible to provide either a poor or a relatively good housing scheme. Some towns, for example Pretoria, in its new garden village of Atteridgeville, have shown what can be done by town-planning and the use of constructive imagination. Points that call for study by the Municipalities and their expert advisers are (1) the materials used, that these may give the best value for money possible; [2] the arrangement of the house, a matter on which educated Bantu women should be taken into counsel; [3] the general appearance of the house and village, so that the appearance of rows of barracks may be avoided, since it costs little more to plan a pretty house than an ugly one; [4] the best way of utilising what skilled Bantu labour may be available, possibly by loans to enable plot-holders to build for themselves; (5) the artistic planning of the village as a whole, with due provision from the beginning for Schools, Churches, Shops, Community Halls, and, if possible, a Dairy.

Some thinkers advocate the building of blocks of flats, with communal play-grounds, wash-houses etc., as being the best way of giving really good housing within the limits of the available funds. Recently, the University of the Witwatersrand issued an interestingly illustrated study of this project, a study on which five post-graduate students had worked together. It is worth reading.

FOR CO-OPERATION

Improved Municipal housing is very evident these days, and while one must deplore the many deficiencies still existing, one must be sincerely grateful for what has been done. This subject of housing is one which is peculiarly fitting for the co-operation of Bantu and Europeans in the towns through Joint Councils and otherwise.

Much might be written about housing in the Reserves and on Farms, but the spear-head of the housing question is at present the urban areas.

JAN 1 1 1941

QUESTIONS:

1. On a rough plan of your own town, mark out any areas, within three miles of the centre of the town, which might be made available for Bantu homes.

2. Should rent be calculated on the actual cost of Municipal houses, or on what the cost would have been if they had been built by Bantu labour?

3. Would you favour the experiment of "Workers' Flats" as an attempt to solve Bantu housing problems or not?

Belgian Congo Rules Itself A Free State

FEB 4 19

LEOPOLDVILLE, BELGIAN CONGO—(ANP) — The Belgian Congo, one of the richest sections of the African continent, has been declared a free state independent of the mother country for the duration of the war, according to a report from M. deVlees Houwer Belgian minister for colonies, who will assume the duties of administrator-general of the newly established state.

The Free Belgian government has given him special powers, so that King Leopold, who is a prisoner under the Nazis, will have no authority over the African colony. The Congo will function as a separate self-governing state under the control of officials friendly to Great Britain.

Unless directly attacked by German and Italian forces, it will be the policy of the new Congo government to maintain neutrality in the African struggle. Meanwhile the native army will be increased and trained to defend the colony against invasion.

Native officers of the French Congo accomplished a coup de-etat when they arrested the governor-general and administrator of the colony who make known their plans to surrender their forces to the Nazi-controlled government in Vichy.

Following the example of Felix Ebou, black governor of the Chad province, natives of the French Congo revolted and joined up with Gen. de Gaulle, the leader of the French armed forces. When Gen. Husson, governor-general of French Equatorial Africa, expressed his official loyalty to the men of Vichy, a group of native officers promptly arrested him along with his administrator. Both men were taken across the border into the Belgain Congo as prisoners.

Other officers and native troops occupied all the official buildings and raised the flag of Free France, and the officers who had been earlier put in prison were set free as well as all native political leaders.

The revolt was a military one backed by the support of the native population. Col. de Larminet, leader of the revolt, has appealed to other colonies to join the revolt. Since then the Cameroons and Gabbon have joined.

Africa and Civilization

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Sir,—I wish to commend your editorial, "Negroes and Our Defenses." It is a hopeful sign when a publication of such great influence takes a courageous stand on the question of justice and fair play for minority groups.

Our history books would have us believe that the Negro has his beginning from a few savages sold into slavery at Jamestown in 1619. That is very unfair, and has greatly hindered the Negro in his efforts to make headway, and gain the respect of other peoples. In truth, what happened at Jamestown is a mere incident in a long and illustrious history of the Negro which runs back to a culture from which the torch of civilization was lighted.

For although "The Story of Nations" credits Chaldea with an unbroken line of kings covering a period estimated at 270,000,000 years, yet Africa gave to the world its first system of education. The Greeks, as did the Jews, borrowed from African culture. Nearly eight centuries before the birth of our Saviour Africa was furnishing artisans for the Grecian Olympics.

In the shifting pageantry of mankind Africa is distinguished as no other continent, in that it has absorbed the shocks of wars and upheavals which wrecked empires and buried other peoples beneath the ruins of their temples, while Africa has come down through the ages still Africa, inhabited by Africans. This is not only significant, it is a prophecy.

MATRICULATION AND THE BANTU LANGUAGES

The Editor, "Umteteli,"

JAN 4 1941

INTERESTED writes: Sir,—The Matric candidates taking Bantu languages find themselves handicapped by the experimentations that the examiners are allowed to carry out at their expense in setting questions for this examination.

To my knowledge there is no grammar text book written in any of these languages, while the prescribed text books are definitely written in English. Now for these examiners to shut themselves up in sound-proof laboratories and there compound grammar terminology, which is to say the least highly fallible and at best vague, is the zenith of unreason and tyranny.

No fool would question the desirability and wisdom of teaching a language through its own medium. This has not been done in Bantu languages except for the small attempts being now made in some primary schools.

It is time enough for our expert examiners to display their inventive genius in compiling such standard works as will justify them in setting questions in these languages and expecting them to be answered through the same medium. Meanwhile let them curb their enthusiasm through channels of discretion and good reason.

6. WAGES

JAN 4 1941

We have been considering the gap that still exists between the wages of the father of a family and the minimum cost of a decent life for his family. We may claim that this gap is a contributing cause of nearly all the social evils in our towns, and that to fill it by increasing wages would do much to fight those social evils. At the outset let us be quite frank. Wages are not the only explanation of these social evils. They can be fought without an increase of wages, and in some cases they will survive an increase of wages. We must particularly beware of the danger of putting every social evil down to low pay, and using that as an excuse for tolerating, in ourselves or in others, evils that need not be tolerated. Just to take one illustration infantile mortality is due to low wages and their natural results of poor feeding, over-crowding etc. But it is also due to ignorance and carelessness in some mothers, and it would be very considerably reduced by educational methods, cleanness and the like without, necessarily, an increase of wages.

Dangerous Tendency

Let us take one more illustration, that of drink. Drink is most certainly associated with low wages and bad living conditions all the world over, but long experience shows us that a poor man does not have to be a drunkard, and that not all rich men are sober. There are moral and spiritual qualities which can produce a David Livingstone, an Abraham Lincoln or a Booker Washington from a background of abject poverty, and we must very strongly oppose the dangerous tendency, often resulting in self-pity and demoralisation, which explains all evils as due to a bad economic system.

With equal intensity and conviction, we must state the case that these evils are partly due to the bad economic system, and we must fight for the wage increase which, while it cannot entirely destroy the evil, can remove a great deal of temptation from a great many people.

Five D's JAN 4 1941

The social evils of low wages in our towns may well be summarised under 5 D's—debt, dice, drink, disease and delinquency.

The immediate short term remedy for low wages is to run into debt. It is a short-term remedy, because very few men can continue to obtain credit for an unlimited period. Large numbers of our people have got into debt, and find it very difficult to get out of it. They are always harassed, and tend to pay the creditor who worries themmost. In the meantime, they very often have to buy on the storekeeper's terms, and may waste many shillings a month by not being able to purchase freely in the cheapest market.

Another short term remedy is to gamble. We must admit that the word "dice" is chiefly valuable as containing a "D", and that there are many other forms of gambling. Gambling, too, long experience shows to be a short-range remedy. No man can fool all the bookies all the time. Besides breaking down proper habits of controlling one's finances, and the highest and finest moral ideals, gambling is not even a permanent remedy for the wage question.

Honest Way JAN 4 1941

There is a simple way out of the issue: when one is paid less than one needs for a minimum standard of decency and health, one way of adjusting the budget is to live below that standard, to go short of necessary food and clothing. This is the most honest way out of the difficulty, but unfortunately, it tends, through under-nourishment, overcrowding and inadequate clothing, to cause disease and death. Undoubtedly, a very large proportion of disease is due to low wages, and could be removed by increasing them.

If the father cannot earn enough to keep the family, the mother may try to supplement his earnings. The easiest and most profitable way to do this in many of our town locations is to sell liquor. This is bad from every point of view. The home, particularly in the week-ends, becomes a most unsuitable place for children, and the purchasers of the liquor are very often men from the Reserves, who waste in this way, the money which should be going back to their wives and families there. Wholesale demoralisation results. A woman does not have to sell liquor: some women manage without doing so. None the less, the temptation is great, and an effective raising of wages would go a long way to move it.

Alternatives JAN 4 1941

Alternatively, the mother may go out to work in the daytime, or the children may get odd jobs. In both cases, there is a danger of delinquency resulting. When the father and mother are both away all day, the house locked up, and the street the only playground, how can it be expected that children will all be able to avoid those things that bring them into conflict with the law? Much delinquency is directly due to the fact that the father of the family does not earn enough to support his family, though he works hard.

In our work for better wages, therefore, we are directly supplementing the valuable efforts of the churches, the schools, and other associations and individual workers in their struggle to overcome the social evils which have to be encountered in our urban locations.

QUESTIONS: JAN 4 1941

1. What are the main causes of delinquency other than the low wage? What can be done to prevent and cure delinquency, other than the raising of wages?
2. Answer the same questions with regard to debt.

BANTU LANGUAGES

JAN 4 1941

The Editor, "Umteteli"

RANTHITE writes: Sir,—There has been no subject so much written about in the Bantu newspapers as the Bantu languages. The moderate view is to draw out the best, and to preserve what will be of great value, from the different dialects. Take two main languages, viz, Sesuto-Sechuana and the Zulu-Xosa. No doubt many will contend that some of the dialects would lose a great deal; but it would be unadvisable to do otherwise, if we are to be the great nation of our forefathers. There is a great need for Africans to concentrate their sentiments through two main channels instead of twenty narrow channels.

JAN 4 1941

Many may put the question "Who has time to read our languages at leisure?" and, say that we would like to write in English. To the latter statement there are no objections; but here are a few points. Joseph Conrad is one of the few who wrote work of literary value in a foreign language. John Milton, one of the greatest English poets, attempted to write in a foreign language, but his interest flagged because he could not succeed. So, many would rather see a Bantu tackle what looks like the perfectly impossible in the Bantu languages than a page of writing in English; he would, at least, do something with the one and nothing with the other, for, in the first he would be preserving some African values, whereas in the second he would be failing to do something which is only worth doing when it is done by an Englishman. What would be of great value to Africans is to elicit from the advanced languages those undreamed-of harmonies, and visions of loveliness which have escaped the ken of our languages.

JAN 4 1941

So, Africans, let us unite and go on the path of Civilisation and preserve our culture through languages and quench the fires of controversy on the question of our languages.

The Black Man And His Land

The Story Of Farmer A & Farmer B
Chapter V

(By Edward Roux, M.Sc. Ph.D.)

In order to show the difference between the right and the wrong way of managing cattle and land I am going to tell you the story of two farmers. I shall call them Farmer A and Farmer B. They started farming in 1919. Their two farms were next to each other and were of the same size. The grass and soil in the two farms were in the same condition. Each farmer had ten cattle.

Farmer A was a forward-looking man; he was willing to try the new ways of working with cattle and land. But Farmer B was old-fashioned; he was not willing to depart from the ways of his grandfathers, forgetting that conditions had changed since the old days when there was plenty of land.

Farmer B thought he would let his cattle go on increasing as much as possible, but Farmer A decided that he would only keep as many cattle as his land could feed without becoming spoilt.

JAN 18 1941

As soon as he was able Farmer A fenced his land. Not only did he put a fence right round it, but he put fences across it so as to divide it into four camps. He had gates in the fences so that he could drive the cattle into whichever camp he pleased. The camps were numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. At first he put all his cattle into camp 1. While the cattle were there the grass in camp 1 was being eaten but the grass in the other three camps was growing. For a week he kept his cattle in camp 1. Then he changed them to camp 2. He kept them there a week and then put them in camp 3. A week later he put them into camp 4, then after another week back into camp 1. And so on, round and round. The grass in every camp was able to grow for three weeks before the cattle began to eat it again. Then it was only eaten for one week and got three weeks rest once more. This system is called "rotational grazing" and the camps are sometimes called "paddocks."

JAN 18 1941

Farmer B did not understand all these carryings-on on the part of Farmer A. On his land Farmer B let the cattle roam about and eat anywhere they pleased. The result was that the grass never had a rest. After a few months if you looked carefully you might have noticed that the grass on Farmer B's land was getting thinner and the grass on Farmer A's land was getting thicker. Also you might have noticed that Farmer A's cattle were a little fatter and gave a little more milk than Farmer B's. But you would have had to look carefully to notice these things. Farmer B thought he was doing very well.

As time went on new calves appeared on both farms. In 1922, three years after the two farmers started, Farmer B's herd had increased from 10 to 18. But he had given three of his cattle to his son who wished to marry, so that there were 15 cattle grazing on Farmer B's land.

During the same three years Farmer A's cattle had increased from 10 to 20. His cattle had increased more rapidly than B's because none of his calves had died, whereas B had lost two. But Farmer A did not keep twenty cows on his land. During the three years he had sold no less than ten of his cattle. He got good money for them, because they had had plenty of grass to eat and they were fat and in good condition. With the money he got he was able to pay for the fencing and buy things he needed for his house. But farmer B had got no money for his cattle.

In the next three years, between 1922 and 1925, Farmer B's 15 cattle produced 8 calves which grew up. Farmer B sold one of his beasts and two others died. Those that died were eaten, but they were old and the meat was tough. Farmer B now had 20 cattle grazing on his land and he was very proud. But he had no reason to be proud of the condition of his land. In patches the grass was becoming very thin and there were some spots where no grass grew at all and there were only little bushes. And though he had 20 cattle, they were thin, starved-looking creatures and they gave very little milk. Sometimes from the whole lot he would get only one full bucket.

During these same three years Farmer A's 10 cattle had produced 14 healthy calves. Farmer A had sold or killed for his own use 12 of his beasts. He had increased the number grazing on his land from 10 to 12. The grass had improved so much, as a result of his veld management, that he thought it could easily manage to support another two.

If at this time you looked at the two farms without a proper understanding you might have thought that Farmer B was better off than Farmer A. You might have said: "Farmer A has only 12 cattle; Farmer B has 20 cattle. B is 8 cattle richer than A." But this would be because you were thinking only in terms of heads of cattle, not in terms of meat, milk and money. Although Farmer B had 20 cattle he had had very little real benefit from them. His cattle had brought him no money and he had got very little milk and meat from them. And, though he did not seem to realise it, they were ruining his land. On the other hand Farmer A had made money from his cattle by selling some to the butcher. There was always plenty of milk on his farm. His children have had plenty of amasi and had grown strong and healthy. When the neighbours wanted to buy milk they knew they could always get it from him.

Bantu Deterioration

The physical deterioration of our Bantu people since the advent and expansion of other races from overseas is a matter which is of such alarming proportions that it should be no longer viewed as a story that is told and with inaction. A good number of friends of our people have lifted up their voice and warned the country and the Bantu themselves. But the warnings of a few sympathisers is not sufficient when avoidable diseases inflict such havoc upon a people whose services the country can ill afford. Statistics of the Union have provided most alarming information that the Bantu are already suffering and succumbing to such diseases as are avoidable and are successfully resisted by the other sections of the population.

The causes are ignorance and poverty. The remedy is in the hands of the Government to see to it that education and an economic wage should be liberally given to the Bantu as is done for the other racial groups in this country. The news that the number of the Bantu who succumb to malnutrition which is the basis of T.B. and V.D., and is the result of ignorance, is most disquietening and gives cause for the fear that the Bantu as a race may reach a stage in their dwindling numebrs which may stamp them as a dying race.

At the meeting of the Bantu Youth League held the other day at Imbumbulu, most alarming reports were made by Dr. C. N. Dlamini of the Durban Municipal Health Department that the numbers of Bantu sufferers and deaths from the above-mentioned diseases are approximately about ten times that of the other racial groups in the Union.

Another feature which tends to impoverish our people is the increase in numbers of "doctors" who make and disseminate claims for ability to cure diseases which is beyond their power or training to discharge. This is done by Europeans and the Bantu, mostly those who have no qualifications to heal those diseases. According to the law no qualified medical practitioner may coerce or persuade patients to come to him for treatment, but here in Durban some healers with no qualifications, white and black, have taken to the method of employing several women to stand at corners and tout for them and point any passerby to their masters.

We cannot understand how qualified doctors are debarred from this practice and the others allowed or connived at by the law officers.

Another source of Bantu sufferings and deaths is some practitioners, European and Bantu who take advantage of their ignorance so praise their herbs if they were cure-alls when all the time they know that is not true. Some of these concoctions lay the foundation of diseases which were non-existent but have been caused solely by giving to these sufferers medicines which are not curative but resustJAN 18 1941

We think the time is now due when the health and the lives of our people should be preserved by enjoining that those who aspire to the curative faculty should, at least, have some training and not as is done now when any one may be a doctor without ever having received instruction from a qualified medical pactitioner. It is well-known that here in Natal and the Transvaal there are medical organizations now recognized by the Government. Why are not these bodies given such powers of training and Examinations that they can train aspirants for the position of physicians and issue official certificates for such as have qualified after examination, and all others be debarred from endangering the health and lives of their people by applying such clumsy methods and so called cure-alls which belie their names!

Forgets Race In His Talk On Freedom

JAN 24 1941

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa —(ANP)—General Smuts, prime minister of South Africa, Great Britain's principal African possession and where relatives are treated like cattle, delivered an important broadcast to the British people of the world last week.

"The cause of the Allies is very far from being lost," said General Smuts. "It will not be lost until Britain is taken," he continued.

"Freedom still remains our sovereign remedy for the ills which human society is suffering," said the former Boer general. He did not, however, call attention to the condition of the over whelming population of South Africa, the black natives. They are debarred by a law called the Colour Bar act, from all forms of skilled occupations. They are not permitted to own land, conduct business or live outside certain prescribes areas known as "reserves."

The South African government recognizes no equality between black and white in either church or state. The general forgot that freedom, like justice, is indivisible and cannot be based upon race or color or creed.

SELASSIE IN AFRICA FIGHTING ITALIANS

JAN 16 1941

By WADE WERNER

New York—(AP)—The Lion of Judah is on the war path again.

Haile Selassie, the little emperor who would not admit defeat even after Mussolini's troops drove him from his African capital, once more has an African front on which to fight.

With British help he has arrived in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, presumably to lead a British-supported campaign against the Italian conqueror who still holds Ethiopia.

He has had the satisfaction of seeing the British government reverse its acquiescence in the Italian conquest, restore him to recognition as monarch of his country and promise the restoration of an independent Ethiopia after the war is over.

How many natives of Ethiopia already are fighting to oust the Italians is not yet clear. Unconfirmed reports recently said 200,000 of them were active. Fighting between Ethiopians and Italians has been reported especially fierce in southern Ethiopia.

But whether he wins or loses in this fight, the little King of kings who carried his big umbrella and a plea for help to Geneva four years ago can make one proud boast:

Whereas four years ago he was only an exiled monarch pleading in vain for military assistance to regain his throne, he is today a full-fledged ally of a great power.—Times-Star.

Ethiopia Stirs

Great though the British victories in Libya may loom, an even greater disaster to Italian arms and morale is building in Ethiopia.

The country, first on the list of Mussolini's conquest of empire and the food with which he fired the patriotism of the Italian people is about to fall to an offensive which is as impulsive as it is little publicized.

JAN 27 1941

The disaster will rank with that of Libya even though it will be less sensational. The country is more loosely held. Communications are few and far between. Native opposition has never been entirely quelled, and it today is rising to a new strength with the arming of isolated tribes by the British.

This, the first great stone of the second Roman empire, is one of the keystones of Mussolini's hold upon the Italians. Here it was that he defied the power of the great world empires. Here it was that he smashed the feeble structure of the League of Nations. How, indeed, will he explain to his people the loss of this cornerstone?

The weakness of the Italian forces in Ethiopia is well shown by the fact that Haile Selassie has been leading his forces within that country since January 15, and that a small British mission has been deep in the interior for months raising an Ethiopian army and drilling it despite the utmost efforts of the Italians to locate and destroy the group.

Poor Benito, who set the stage of world tragedy and now reaps the whirlwind.

Interview Native Commissioner

JAN 18 1941

FOLLOWING the persecution of many Africans in Doornfontein and other parts of the City under the Urban Areas Act, as amended by the Native Laws Amendment Act of 1938, the chairman and secretary of the African Business League interviewed the Native Commissioner on Thursday last. They were told there was no relief. As a result, an emergency meeting of the league attended by over 500 traders, shoemakers, carpenters, and other Natives engaged in trades, was held at 2 Alexander Street on Sunday January 12, when the following resolutions were carried unanimously.

JAN 18 1941

A direct appeal to be made to the Prime Minister, Ministers of Native Affairs, Education and Justice for the suspension of the law, at least for the duration of the War.

To circularise every M.P., Member of the Provincial Council and member of the City Council of Johannesburg, Pretoria and the Reef Chambers of Commerce, Institute of Race Relations, Friends of Africa, Joint Council, National Council of Women, Native Parliamentary and Senate Representatives, members of the Native Council, and Location Advisory Boards, as well as other bodies interested in the welfare of race relations to secure their help in fighting this iniquitous measure, which aims to debar Native tradesmen from following their trades.

It resolves to educate public opinion to show the injustice of prosecuting Native tradesmen who carry out their trades to the welfare of the country as a whole, at a time of tension, when the majority of Natives are showing loyalty to the Government as a measure calculated to stir up bad feelings and as being contrary to the recent statement of the Native Affairs Department and the Christmas Message of the Minister of Native Affaris to the effect that repressive laws would be given a holiday at least for the duration of the War.

Finally it resolved to appeal to the European public to realise that Native traders put up their shops; at great sacrifice they obtain their goods, cloth, leather, timber and other requirements from Europeans, thereby helping the white community: they help the State by reducing the number of unemployed Natives who would otherwise be a menace; by helping their own people they are carrying out the policy of the Government. Moreover thousands of Native parents who send their children to Industrial Schools as well as thousands of Native students in such institutions would be affected. On those grounds the meeting resolved to put all facts before the public and to enlist support to fight this measure whose harsh administration will have the tendency to aggravate bad feelings between races.

RELIGION AND SOCIAL SERVICE

A NEGRO CO-OPERATIVE MAKES GOOD

JAN 11 1941

TIME and time again the little store had to stall off its creditors day by day. Mr. Anthony says that his faith in God was all he had to go on, but it was enough. Every time he seemed to have reached the very end, something turned up. One day when he was without a cent to pay his bills, two friends dropped in and lent him the money that saved the store. Practically all of his help was volunteer help, and he himself received no salary. Often he slept behind the counter to save rent. Like Kagawa, he took out nothing more than bare expenses for himself, and sometimes this amounted to no more than two dollars a month for laundry. Now and again his helpers in the store would take time off to get odd jobs to buy a suit of clothes or a pair of shoes. One summer in order to keep the store going Mr. Anthony took on a second job as time keeper, but he managed to run the store just the same.

The weekly turnover was now nearly one hundred dollars.

Along with opposition to the new venture there were new friends, too. One of them was a Negro dentist, Dr. Howard, with too much time on his hands because his practice had suffered during the depression. He was the only member of the group who had a car, and he put it at the disposal of the co-operative store.

LIBERIA BALANCES BUDGET

MAR 5 - 1941

MONROVIA, Liberia—(ANP)—Liberia will show a balanced budget for 1940. Due to insistence by President Edwin Barclay that the government adhere to his pay-as-you-go policy, and the fact that the government continued salary reductions in force for the second year, while departmental expenditures were reduced below those of 1939, this showing has been made.

While the total of Liberia's income and expenditures are trivial compared with that of greater nations still by comprison President Barclay and his government are to be congratulated upon so fine an example of management. This year $50,000 more will be available for road construction than was had last year. This sum has been appropriated from reserve funds due to savings in 1940.

THE University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg has made arrangements to enable a limited number of non-Europeans to obtain full training in Medicine and Dentistry at the University in Johannesburg, commencing on February 3, 1941.

As a result of this, the Department of Native Affairs has decided to provide, from the South African Native Trust Fund, five scholarships to be awarded to Africans on a competitive basis on the completion of the first year course in Medicine and Dentistry. That is to say, the scholarships will operate as from the commencement of the second year's courses in Medicine and Dentistry. Africans who have already fulfilled the requirements for the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry will be eligible at once. The scholarships will cover all University fees, equipment and other necessaries and reasonable living expenses during term-time. The scholarships will be open to men and women. The selection will be made from students who have completed the requirements of the first year course in Medicine or Dentistry.

All enquiries should be addressed to the Registrar, University of the Witwatersrand, Milner Park, Johannesburg.

FREE EDUCATION FOR AFRICANS.

DEC 28 1940

The pronouncement by the Minister of Native Affairs after discussion in the Council that free education will henceforth be extended to the Africans, was a piece of news which thrilled all of our people who heard of it. It has been a fact ununderstandable by the Bantu to see European and Indian children enjoying free education while this privilege was denied to the poorest section of the Union's inhabitants. Col. Denys Reitz's name will ever be gratefully remembered in connection with this concession.

There is no hope in the progress of the Bantu if they are discouraged in acquiring proper education. To say the Government is the father and guardian of the Bantu in the same degree as for Europeans had hitherto been only a poser, as, a people debarred from educational facilities could not hope to do their best in the battle of life.

The next obligatory step is to encourage the proper education of Bantu Chiefs. Progress of the people as a whole cannot be successfully pursued with illiterate leadership.

BANTU LANGUAGES

FEB 1 1941

The Editor, "Umteteli."

JOSEPH L. HALIFAX SEROKE, 60 Tennant Street, Capetown, writes: Sir,—People go as far as to mention that the best policy for Bantudom or for the unity of Africans would be to adopt "Esperanto," meaning unification of all Bantu languages. The worst part of this discussion is that they have the audacity to say: If our languages could be changed to one, the Bantu would be much advanced politically, economically and educationally.

FEB 1 1941

But, let us turn our eyes on Europe as a whole, and see how many countries there are. They are numerous, with different nations ruling them. Now then, is it not that African languages are as numerous as European languages? In what way do we differ from those people, that we cannot go forward without speaking one "Esperanto?"

Here for instance, we have a language by which we are able to carry our thoughts to those who cannot understand our different languages. This is "English." There is no other language for Bantu, unless all the Africans gather together to consider that, "One God, one aim, one destiny" are the fundamental principles for the emancipation of all negroes in the universe, and sink all tribal discrimination between man and man.

I would like to enlighten my fellow-countrymen that, it is not language-differences that impede and retard the progress and self-development of Bantu, but a lack of common-sense to do good to our fellow creatures, irrespective of colour and creed. Looking at other races, such as the whites, you and I know that they do not regard one another with contempt even if they cannot speak each other's language.

Mr. Nkatlo's Interesting Address

AUG 30 1941

A Lecture on the African National Congress was given by the New Era Fellowship in the Stakesby Lewis Hostel last Saturday. Mrs. Gool presided. Mr. Joseph Nkatlo was the chief speaker, and he dealt with one notable contribution the Congress had made to our national life, viz., the spirit it had instilled into the Africans to agitate for freedom and liberty. In his opinion, this was an outstanding contribution which far outweighed all the shortcomings of this august body. An organisation which was capable of inspiring such a spirit was worthy of active support by all who claimed to have the interest of the vast majority of the people of this land at heart. Believing as he did in the correctness of the analysis, he submitted that the Congress was the best base from which our political struggles would be conducted for the general emancipation of all who were denied democratic rights on account of colour.

The programme of the Congress, Mr. Nkatlo went on to say, was formulated in the light of contemporary conditions. Hence the criticism that its programme was out of date, fell away.

The African Debating Society, which has recently come to being, meets every Wednesday at Mrs. Martin's place, Dorp Street, Cape Town. The topic of Wednesday last week, was, "Has Christianity done anything good for the Africans?" Mr. Bhulana (for), seconded by Mr. J. Nduna, was defeated by six votes to four by his opponent, Mr. Silwane (against)! who was seconded by Mr. B. Ngwendu.

Mr. W. Nokele arrived last Sunday from a short trip round the Union.

Need For Hospitals For Rural Africans

Opening the Bantu Welfare Workers' Conference in Durban Dr. L. E. Hertslet commented on the fact that the work was being conducted along non-racial lines.

Dealing with the twin scourges tuberculosis and venereal disease, Dr. F. W. P. Cluver, Medical Officer of Health for Natal, pointed out that the diseases could be cured and even prevented.

He mentioned that cured cases of tuberculosis were being discharged from the McCord Hospital regularly. He appealed to employers to pay more attention to correct diet and proper quarters for Natives.

Dr. G. D. H. Wallace, M.P.C, referring to venereal diseases, said that in Durban hundreds of cases were now being treated in clinics and hospitals.

The venereal diseases death rate had been cut by 50 per cent. The problem was not solely one of medicine.

Suggesting means of combating the disease, he said there should be every free facility for treatment, including extensive hospitalisation and clinical attendance. There should also be intensive educational propaganda, proper housing for Natives, recreational facilities for both sexes, and a healthy public attitude.

Dealing with tuberculosis Dr. B. A. Dormer, of King George V Hospital, pointed out that if a man developed the disease in the lungs, he became the responsibility of the Union Government, whereas if the germ attacked one of his joints the matter then rested with the Provincial authorities.

The Europeans, being an older race group, had built up a strong reserve of resistance, while the Native had not, said Dr. Dormer.

Discussing the method of treatment, Dr. Dormer said that the method applicable to the whole population was miniature radiography, which cost 2d. per plate per head.

Criticism of the Natal Provincial Executive's policy of hospitaliastion was expressed by Dr. Allan Taylor.

Dr. Taylor expressed the opinion that over-hospitilisation at the larger centres like Durban and Maritzburg had been obtained at the expense of the smaller towns. The result was that relatively nothing was being done for the bulk of the Bantu living in the country.

"I know of no real hospitals established solely for the Bantu by the Government," said Dr. Taylor.

"One could sum up the unsatisfactory provision of hospital beds for the Bantu by saying that they had no vote.

"The Europeans are either ignorant or unsympathetic."

(BY REV. T. SILILO)

Outstanding success rewarded the efforts of all concerned in organising a Bantu Concert which was produced in the Stanger Picture Palace on September 10th, with the object of providing materials for Comforts for Bantu Men on Active Service. Mr. Snyman, Resident Magistrate, Dr. du Keruzec, Mrs. Alcock, and Chief Luthuli, the teachers and the pupils of the Emboniswen, Groutville and Stanger Bantu Schoo are to be congratulated.

Th house was packed and the sum of £4. 9 0d. was made. The mixed audience of Europeans, Indians and Bantu showed genuine appreciation.

The varied programme was composed of musical items, to which Miss Faith Caluza of Durban and a "Male Quintette" from Adam's Mission generously contributed. Ngoma Dances executed by boy and girl teams from three schools and Chief Lutuli's boys, recitations, choirs consisting of pupils ably conducted by Messrs. Zama, Sililo, Ngema, and Tabete, and one of the teachers conducted by Chief Lutuli, a parade of All the Nations, a sketch entitled Isibango, and drill by Boy Scouts and girl pupils.

The spontanaeity of the performers added to the success of the evening and each item was excellent in its kind.

The musical turns deserve special mention. The tone, harmonising and synchronising of the Groutville Choirs were excellent, though all the choirs did their conductors credit. The Native Teachers' Choir, conducted by Chief Lutuli was really good, the blending of voices being very pleasing. The Male Quintettee gave a finished performance and both serious and humourous songs were much appreciated. Miss Caluza, a rich Soprano, was a delight to listen to, and her purity of tone and constraint were marked.

OCT 1 1 1941

The recitations by small boys were delivered with gusto as they depicted their love of "A Jolly Sixpence," the tremendous splash of "A BEEG Tree," and tragedy of the Light Brigade which was wiped out almost to a man!

The Ngoma dancers, though youthful, were remarkable for team work, neat footwork and perfect timing. Even the smallest performer displayed the instinctive African rhythm characteristic of these dances. Originality was displayed by the Emboniswen Girls troupe and Chief Lutuli's boys.

The concert concluded with the singing of the Zulu Anthem by the choirs and the National Anthem. Chief Lutuli said a few words thanking all those who had assisted in organising the concert and providing transport, the Indian friends who helped to provide refreshments for the performers, and those who assisted at the ticket office and the seating of the audience. He also mentioned particularly Mrs. Bird who accompanied Miss Caluza at the piano. He expressed his pleasure at having a mixed audience and hoped it was an indication of a closer co-operation between the races in the near future.

XX Representation And The Franchise

AUG 2 1941

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES

In previous articles we have discusssed a good many of the grievances and aspirations of the Bantu. To redress these grievances and satisfy these aspirations is work which must very largely be done by the Bantu themselves, by their friends and by non-official organisations. A good many Bantu thinkers tend to depreciate these factors unduly, and to stress too much the importance of Parliament and of legislation. None the less, Parliamentary action is necessary, if the legimate aims of the Bantu are to be reached. Men are not made moral by Acts of Parliament, but a good many of the temptations to immorality may be removed by them.

Further, Parliamentary representation is the inherited right of educated, responsible citizens in a democratic country. The franchise is the badge of citizenship. The inadequate Parliamentary representation of the Bantu means not only that there is undue delay in redressing their grievances, but also that they are publicly stigmatised as second-grade citizens, citizens of a permanently inferior standing in their country.

The present Parliametary representation of the Bantu is twofold. In the House of Assembly, three European members represent the registered Bantu voters of the Cape Province—Transkeian, Eastern and western Circles. To qualify for a vote, an African in the Cape Province must be of male sex, over twenty-one years of age, the owner or lessee of property to the value of £75, or alternatively the possessor of an annual income of £50, having worked for eleven months out of the preceding twelve. In addition to these qualifications he must be literate enough to complete his application form without aid.

In the Senate, there are four Senators out of forty-four elected to represent the Bantu—one for the Transkeian Territories, one for the rest of the Cape Province, one for Natal, and one for the Transvaal and Orange Free State combined. The Senator from the Transkei is elected by the General Council. The others are elected by the local Councils, Chiefs, Municipal Advisory Boards and electoral committees of the area in question. Each one of these "voting units" is given a numerical value corresponding to the number of taxpayers under his or its jurisdiction.

There is little logic in the present arrangement, which is really a combination of two entirely different theories of Bantu representation. In the original plan of General Hertzog, the four Senators were to have been the sole Parliamentary representatives of the Bantu. The really important body was to have been the Natives representative Council, and the four Senators, sitting in the less partisan House of Parliament, were to have been the connecting link between Parliament and the Representative Council. It was intented that they should represent the Bantu as a whole, tribal or detribalised, educated or uneducated. The representation in the House of Assembly, on the other hand, is the old Cape system, based on nineteenth century Liberalism, with the two very important modifications that the Bantu are placed on a separate electoral roll, and that the maximum number of their representative is limited. When General Hertzog found it impossible to carry through his original scheme, a compromise was arrived at which, preserving the Cape franchise in its altered form, enabled him to get the two-thirds majority which he needed to pass his Bill.

The combination has some incongruous features. Out of seven representatives in the two Houses of Pariament, five represent the Cape Province, while the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, with a larger population than that of the Cape, have only one member between them. In the Cape Province itself, Bantu voters are grouped with Coloured and Indian voters as regards qualifications—no European requires a property, income or educational qualification—but separated for voting purposes Only prejudice can explain, and nothing can justify, the provision by which, after the Bantu had been segregated for voting purposes, they were not allowed to send to Parliament representatives of their own race and colour.

In spite of all these objections, the present representation has been far from ineffective. The writer, being one of the four Senators, finds it a little difficult to express his views on the merits of the representation, but it seems fair to say that even hostile critics have felt it to be effective in both Houses. The voice of the Bantu is heard in the councils of the land. When nothing can be done but stage protests, protests are staged, but a great deal of valuable, constructive work, the kind of work which renders protests unnecessary, is done behind the scenes. No one can possibly expect the Bantu to be satisfied, however, until educated men in all the Provinces have a franchise for the House of Assembly.

The Bantu are not represented on Provincial Councils, with the exception of the Cape Province, where they elect two European representatives on the same separate roll, requiring the same qualifications. Up to 1936 the Bantu had the theoretical right of returning a man of their own race to the Cape Provincial Council. On one occasion they did so. As Provincial Councillors handle Bantu education and hospitals, and also legislate on municipal government, the need for representation on them is clear. Nor is there any real reason why it should be withheld. In most countries, concessions to a politically weaker group begin with representation in local bodies and end with representation in the central Parliament. Here we have adopted the reverse course.

While in the Cape Province there is a handful of Bantu voters in municipal areas, there is no effective representation of Bantu interests as such on town councils and other local government bodies, and there is no representation at all in the other three Provinces. Larger city councils might be readier to accept the principle of such representation than the Provincial Councils, and there is no special reason why we should not start with them. This matter of Bantu Provincial and municipal representation is linked up with the question of the political status of the Coloured people, and above all of the Natal Indians. The Indians were deprived of their municipal franchise some fifteen years back, and any attempt to obtain any sort of franchise for the Bantu would lead to a perfectly intelligible and justifiable request for the restoration of this lost privilege.

AUG 2 5 1941

The final effectiveness of the system of Bantu representation cannot be finally decided nutil we have studied the working of the Natives Representative Council. This we shall do in our next article.

JUL 12 1941

South Africa And The Wider World

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In all our articles so far we have been considering the Union only. But, it is important to realise that what we do in the field of race relations affects and is affected by a much wider area.

To take a very simple and obvious illustration, our policy, whether good or bad, is bound to have repercussions on the three Protectorates—Bechuanaland, Swaziland and Basutoland. The major factor in determining the attitude of the people of these Protectorates towards incorporation in the Union must inevitably be the way in which the Union legislates for its own Native population Similarly, we in the Union are bound to be influenced, at any rate to some extent, by the policies of the Protectorates. If, for example, Basutoland should initiate a progressive programme of internal development offering high wages to thousands of men engaged within the Protectorate farm labour in the Free State is bound to feel the effect and farm wages are bound to rise.

With Southern Rhodesia and the British Colonies and Territories to the north of it we also have an association which we cannot escape even if we should like to do so. There are South African thinkers who envisage the Union as the senior partner in a United States of South-Eastern Africa. We need not go as far as that in our thinking, but our place in Africa, especially in South-Eastern Africa, imposes on us great responsibilities. When we hear people speaking about a Monroe Doctrine for South-Eastern Africa, or in other ways suggesting that the Union should be the dominant power in Africa south of the equator, we must realise that that policy will be either a blessing or a curse to the millions of Africans involved in it insofar as we do, or do not, give the right lead in our legislation and our policies

In the minds of thinking Bantu there is still wider area of which we form a part, the area of the black races the world over including the Negroes of the United States and of the West Indies Some would go further and in their thinking link up the Bantu of the Union with under-privileged racial groups throughout the world. Sound statesmanship would help the Bantu to feel more strongly the bonds of unity with white South Africans and would try to prevent the tendency of the Bantu to consider themselves merely as part of a huge under-privileged group. Because so much thinking among white people in South Africa is superficial, it is difficult to get this thought across and yet reasonable men on both sides of the Colour line must learn to face this issue, and, if possible, to face it together.

Some of us at any rate remember that as Christians we belong to another world-wide fellowship, which cuts across national and racial barriers. Those who have ever had the privilege of attending a world—wide Conference of Christian bodies such, for example, as the recent Conference called by the National Missionary Council at Tambaran, near Madras, have experienced at first-hand what it is difficult to put on paper—the thrill of the realisation of the unity of Christendom across barriers of denomination, language, race and colour. This is all too exceptional an experience. The fact of our unity remains none the less. Let me again take one simple illustration. When the Anglican Church, for instance, is asked to conform to the behaviour patterns of South Africans on race and colour questions, its world—wide character and the fact that its Bishops in this counry must, as it were, give an account of themselves to the Bishops of the same Church in areas where there is not the same colour bar, makes it impossible for them to decide the question purely on local lines. The same applies naturally to other important religious bodies. Indeed it may be said that the only Church of any size in South Africa which is not compelled by its Constitution to keep this fact in mind, is the Dutch Reformed Church. South African Methodism cannot ignore the feelings and attitude of British Methodism. The Presbyterian Church of S.A. cannot forget its connection with the Church of Scotland. The ultimate policies of the Roman Catholic Church are made, not in Pretoria, but at the Vatican City.

And finally, there is the greatest of all unities, the unity of humanity as a whole. Every scientist, every worker for public health, for improved agriculture, or for technical progress in industry inevitably feels himself so far as his work is concerned part of this wider unity. We must all accustom ourselves to think in this way. The isolationism which some covet for South Africa is simply impossible in the modern world. When we come to reconstruct human society after the war we shall find ourselves inevitably thinking more in general human terms and less in purely national terms. This is bound to have its effect in all matters which affect race relations.

XVI: EDUCATION

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In our last article we were considering the question of taxation, and we made reference in it to the special account into which two-thirds of the poll tax and certain other taxes are paid. This "Native Development Fund", which is now linked up with the South African Native Trust Fund has education as its main item of expenditure.

When the present system of financing Bantu Education was introduced in 1925, the four Provinces between them were spending £340, 000 annually on Bantu education. During the present year, the amount of expenditure is to exceed £1,000,000. It is clear that progress has been made, and very considerable progress. But anyone who has anything to do with Bantu education knows how inadequate the funds are even for the more urgent needs. Sooner or later, we shall have to find a better method of raising funds for this important object. No doubt in the meantime we can go on forcing up the contribution from poll tax. It has already risen from 4s. in the £ to 13s. 4d. in the £. and we must try to get 20s. in the £. But even this will be far from adequate. Moreover, the principle that expenditure on Bantu education should be limited by the amount of the tax raised is wholly unsound. What should be done is to fix a grant per head based on school attendance, so that the amount available may rise annually in an automatic way. At present every increase is the subject of negotiations and conferences, and one is never able to plan for more than a year ahead.

This question of the financing of Bantu education is one of the many points for consideration by those who are studying Bantu life. Another point is the question of the control of our schools. Under this term fall to be discussed two different questions: first, to what extent the schools should be directly controlled by the State, and, secondly, what State department or administration should control them.

As to the first question, almost all our primary schools outside the Province of Natal, and the majority in Natal, are under the immediate control of missionary societies or churches. A certain number are aided financially and inspected by the Government. Others are so-called "private schools", which, owing to lack of funds, do not receive this aid. All our Training Colleges, all our Industrial Schools, all our High Schools going as far as Matriculation, and a number of our junior High Schools also fall under missionary or church control.

Opinions are very divided as to the value of this control. Some Christian bodies, especially the Roman Catholic Church, hold on principle that education is a church matter, and that state schools tend to become secular and to leave out essential religious instruction. Many who do not share these views fully feel that the time is not yet ripe for the trasfer of primary schools to state control. One consideration which must not be overlooked is the personality of the teacher. A believing head teacher in a government school is more likely to be an effective force for Christ than an unbelieving head teacher in a church school.

One of the reasons why more schools are not under state control is that the state is shirking its financial responsibilities, and is only too glad to allow the missionary societies and churches to help to carry them. Much criticism of missionary education overlooks this vital fact.

To the extent to which the state controls education, directly or indirectly, by what organisation of the state should the control be exercised? For us in the Union this question resolves itself into a choice between three possible controlling bodies — the Provincial Administration, the Union Native Affairs Department and the Union Education Department. The Provincial Administrations are of course tthe controlling bodies at present with the exception of the S. A. Native College at Fort Hare, which falls under the Union Education Department. Probably the majority of Bantu leaders. If asked for their opinion, would place the three possible controlling bodies in the following order of preference: (1) Union Education Department; (2) Provincial Administrations. (3) Native Affairs Department. Of recent years a determined effort has been made to transfer Bantu education to the Union Native Affairs Department, though this has been successfully countered by an appeal to Provincial feeling and the constitutional rights of the Provinces. The changes of a transfer to the Union Education Department on the near future are not great. What is important is that any co-ordinating machinery such as a Union Advisory Board should come under the Union Education Department and not under the Native Affairs Department.

The reason why so many Bantu leaders object to control by the Native Affairs Department is their fear that semi-political considerations such as theories of segregation will have a disproportionate influence on the educational policy followed, and they prefer to have that policy approached from a more purely educational standpoint.

QUESTIONS:

1. What is your own opinion regarding the transfer of (a) primary education (b) higher education from missionary to Government control.

2. If a PER CAPUT system (i.e. a grant per head) were adopted for financing Native education, what do you think would be a fair figure to cover the expenses of educating one child for a year (the present figure works out at approximately £2, the Coloured figure at approximately £5, and the European figure at approximately £15)?

XVIII--Careers

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES

It may be of some interest if having now discussed the question of education at some length, we pass on to inquire what careers are open to educated Africans, and also what careers are closed. On the whole this is an encouraging inquiry, because in recent years more opportunities have been given to young educated Africans. Such an inquiry is also timely in relation to action, because there are many careers closed which ought to be open, and even many doors which are not as widely open as they should be.

The most obvious career for a young African is the teaching profession. He may enter this at various stages, with Std. VII, the Junior Certificate examination, the Matriculation examination, or a degree as academic prerequisites. Bantu men holding a degree and a teacher's diploma usually begin at £180 p.a. In some cases they also draw head teachers' allowances. From the teaching profession are drawn supervisors of schools, who are in fact Inspectors. The highest salary that the writer knows of personally, apart from University teaching, drawn by a man of Bantu race is £390 per annum.

While in some Provinces there has occasionally been overproduction of teachers, the Union as a whole during recent years has been able to place teachers in training in posts without difficulty. So far as more highly qualified teachers are concerned the demand definitely exceeds the supply, and is likely to for some time to come. No graduate with a teaching diploma should be out of work, except through his own misconduct.

One feels that the ministry ought not to be discussed in quite the same way as other professions, but it is impossible to survey available careers without mentioning it; for the ministry provides a means of self-expression and service to hundreds of Africans. Both training facilities, educational standards and salaries vary so widely that it is impossible to give any general or average figure.

The greatest progress during recent years has been as regards the medical profession. In the past, fully qualified doctors of Bantu race were the product of overseas training. To-day, courses are open at the University of the Witwatersrand, and generous scholarship assistance is given by the Government. It is probable, though not certain, that the Government will absorb doctors so trained into a state health service for the Bantu, and that they will receive regular and relatively high salaries. There is nothing to prevent a man paying for his own expenses, and practising fully as a doctor in the ordinary way.

The Medical Aid course, available at the S. A. Native College, Fort Hare, and also covered by bursaries, is generally a five-year course from Matriculation. Medical Aids are definitely trained for participation in a state scheme, and the commencing salary is £180 per annum, plus a free house. It is probable that, unless changes are made in the plan, in twenty years' time we should have at least fifty fully qualified Bantu doctors, and three times that number of Medical Aids in the field. If this hope is realised, it is obvious that it will make a great difference both to Bantu health and to Bantu social life.

The training offered for doctors is also open for dentists. This of course is an entirely new outlet.

This is hardly the place to speak of the work of herbalists, but it may be mentioned in passing that a number of educated men earn a living as employees of European chemists having a large number of Native clients. Wages vary, but are sometimes quite high.

With regard to the legal profession, the position is that there is no barrier against an African as such becoming either an attorney or an advocate. In fact, it is very hard for him to become either. An advocate cannot hope to practise successfully unless he has attorneys who will "brief" him, and in the ordinary way European attorneys are reluctant to brief Bantu advocates. To become an attorney one must, as the phrase goes "serve articles" for so many years in the office of an exisiting attorney. This is an almost insuperable barrier to young Africans. Few European attorneys, however broadminded, are willing to article a Bantu clerk, because of the loss of business which would follow. It is much to be regretted that this should be the case, but the object of this article is to give the facts. There is a good deal of employment available for educated Bantu as clerks in lawyers' offices.

The following notes have been supplied to the writer by a man who has himself made a great success in this career.

"Those offices which undertake Native work mostly employ Native clerks, if it is their wish to make a bold bid for such practice, because Native clients as a rule pay cash when they go to litigation, which is not often the the case with Europeans. Honesty is an essential to success in a lawyer's office. In preparing students to take such a career, Native law, shorthand typewriting and bookkeeping would be useful".

Openings are beginning to come in commerce. Young Bantu men can frequently get employment as assistants to European or Indian traders, and naturally as assitants to traders of their own race. Experience so gained may enable a really able man to run his own business successfully.

XIX—CAREERS (Concluded)

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

Among other careers open to Africans we might mention printing. A full course of this is given at Lovedale, and at some other Institutions. The educational standard of printers must not be lower than Std. VI. Their scale of pay varies with the local cost of living and with the individual's efficiency. It ranges from £1-10-a week for men of minimum ability to £2-5—a week for good men. Bantu newspapers offer a field of employment for clerks, and in journalism proper there are a few posts available. Though these are small in number, they are very important, offer special opportunities of service, of service, and the remuneration compares favourably with that in many other careers.

A new profession, training for which is being provided by the Jan H. Hofmeyr School of Social Service in Johannesburg, is that of social worker. In some cases Bantu social workers are already employed by municipalities, sometimes in general welfare work, sometimes in organising sports and entertainments. The number of such posts is likely to increase considerably in the next few years, and the young men and women training at the Jan H. Hofmeyr School will, in all probability, have no difficulty in securing employment.

In the Government service, the opportunities offered are numerous, though not as numerous as they should be. There are over two hundred agricultural demonstrators' posts under the Native Affairs Department, paid on a scale ranging from £6 to £10 a month. A diploma of a recognised School of Agriculture is required for such a post. Matriculated Native clerks draw a salary on a scale beginning at £10 a month and rising to £20 a month. There are only about ten of such posts. Native clerk-interpreters, of whom over a hundred and twenty are employed, are remunerated with salaries varying from £8 a month to £19 a month. The highest salary available to an African in the Government service is £450 per annum. Only one man has reached this figure.

Legitimate criticism of the restricted opportunities available to the Bantu in the Public Service fastens on two points. First, the almost complete exclusion of the Bantu from higher grades, even in their own Department and in their own areas, and secondly, the failure to use Africans for certain specific types of work. With regard to the former of these complaints, the argument generally used by the Government is that men in these higher positions are bound, in the ordinary course of events, to deal with Europeans as well as Bantu, and that in the present position of South African opinion, this is impracticable. The natural answer to this is: 'Either practise segregation or drop it. If you are really going to segregate White and Black, give the Black man his chance in predominantly Balck areas, even if a handful of European traders and others, who after all are not compelled to live there, have to transact their business through a Black man."

With regard to the second point, namely types of post not-yet thrown open, mention should be made of postmasterships, which are very rarely given to Bantu candidates, even in urban locations or in definitely Native areas. The whole field of survey is closed to the Bantu, although there is much surveying to be done in Bantu areas. Clerkships in the Native sections of Provincial Education Departments are another legitimate aspiration.

Notwithstanding the above criticisms, it must be frankly admitted that the Native Affairs Department has made great efforts to extend the number of posts available. Whenever a European interpretership in that Department falls vacant, the post is transfered to a Bantu post. Moreover, there is the big field of employment of the United Transkeian Territories General Council, figures for which are in addition to those quoted above.

The facts given in this and in the preceding article will possibly be of help to Bantu parents, and to advance students, and should be of general interest in indicating the increasing opportunities of service for educated men, while pointing out the very serious gaps in the present system.

The Bantu In South African Life

XVII: EDUCATION

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

We ought not to be satisfied to consider education merely from the financial or administrative point of view. Education is one of the most potent forces for good or bad in the life of a nation. Second-rate thinking about education means inferior results, a failure to achieve the nation's destiny. And there is much second-rate thinking about education. There are those, for example, who look upon education merely as passing the examinations. There is a place for examinations in education, because the qualities of a good memory and mental tranquility at a time of testing are in themselves valuable qualities. But examinations as they are conducted to-day do not test by any means all the essential qualities of an educated man, and often give us misleading results. To think too much of education in terms of examinations is to depreciate those elements in a good education, such as knowledge of the Bible, character-training, appreciation of music, physical ability or good sportsmanship which either cannot be tested, or are not in fact tested, in our examination system.

There are those, again, who think of education as a means of preparing boys and girls to earn a living. There is a great deal of truth in this view. It would be a very great pity if the boys and girls whom we turn out of our institutions were unable to make a living. We cannot forget this aspect of our work when we plan out our shool programmes. But education is a great deal more than helping people to earn a living, and if we only taught those subjects which were of direct and immediate value from the stand-point of earning a living, we should give a very poor and incomplete education to our students.

Bantu Education.

So far we have spoken of education in general terms. Why not speak specifically of Bantu education? Principally because the differences between European and Bantu education are immeasurably less important than the things which they have in common. If one were to compare the subjects taught in a Bantu schools with those taught in a European school, one would realise that there is not very much scope for differentiation. We hear a great deal from Europeans of a certain school of thought who complain that the Bantu must be taught to develop "on their own lines." It would not in fact be possible to give the Bantu an education which did not include reading and writing. Take such a subject as arithmetic. You could neither omit arithmetic from the programme of the morden Bantu schools, nor could you in fact teach it in any essentially different way from that used in European schools. Two and two make four in every country from China to Peru. In the same way, you could not omit science from a Bantu school curriculum, nor could you have a special African science course. For hydrogen and oxygen combine to make water whether the experiment is conducted by a Zulu, a Chinaman or a Scotsman.

There are certain obvious difficulties with regard to language, but even they are difficulties of application rather than of principle. We teach a Bantu language in our schools, and we sometimes omit Latin. A European English-medium school, which omits the Bantu language and includes Latin, is working on the same principle, namely that of teaching the mother-tongue and at least one other cultural language with wide opportunities for reading.

There are certain subjects which are stressed more in Bantu than in European schools. We must not assume from that that the Bantu curriculum is wrong. The stressing of such subjects as agriculture and manual work would, in the opinion of many Europeans, be of immense benefit to our European schools.

There would, however, be differences, many differences, in every-day teaching as between the two groups of schools, just as there ought to be between English-medium and Afrikaans — medium schools, or between town schools and country schools. That is because education ought to be a living thing, not possessing a mechanical uniformity, but building on the experience and the background of the student. A teacher in a Bantu school ought to know and value the social and cultural background of his students as far as he can, and to use that, not as a means of perpetuating differences, but as a means of leading the students into the full field of knowledge available for all races. Differences there will always be: the object of the teacher is neither to repress them nor to create them, but to understand, respect and use them.

While there should not be separate aims for, or a separate philosophy of African education yet the experience of education in Africa, and the similar experience of Negro education in the United States, have contributed something of great value towards general educational philosophy. The thought and practice of Booker T. Washington and of Aggrey as put into philosophic form by Dr. Jesse Jones in his "Four Essentials of Education" mark a permanent and most valuable contribution to educational theory. We should of course make a great mistake if we thought that the "four essentials" represented the whole of the legitimate aims of education. There are many more. But these four aims are essential, in the sense that if education fails to realise them, the national life is definitely improverished. Good health, the building up of a sound home life, love of and ability to use the land, and the gift of making a proper use of one's spare time are the four essentials referred to. When we look at our Bantu schools, we must keep these four points, among others, in mind when we pass judgment as to how far they have succeeded or failed.

Enforced Discipline

European education has broken away from certain ideas which used to be very strongly held in the 1890's. One is that discipline is impossible without continual corporal punishment. Another of these discarded traditions is that the best way of giving a lesson is to dictate notes. A third is that there is some kind of moral advantage in making a subject difficult, and some kind of "catch" if the subject is made easy and interesting. But just as many African women in remote parts of our country wear the European fashions of the 1940 or earlier, so a good many African teachers are content to jog along in the 1940's teaching on the principles current in European schools fifty years ago. We should covet for our Bantu schools the very best and the most modern experiments in European education. There is real scope for criticism when, for example, in Nature Study one replaces the out-of dooors bservation of the herd-boy by the dictation of notes in a class room.

The Mother Tongue

Among the most hotly disputed points in Bantu education is the place of the mother tongue, both as a subject and also as a medium of instruction. It may be said that on the whole Bantu opinion is hostile to the use of mother-tongue as the medium of instruction. Most of the driving force behind this demand comes from Europeans. Even the teaching of the mother-tongue as a subject is opposed by some sections of Bantu opinion, mainly from the stand point that education is a means of earning a living, and that the knowledge of English is important in earning a living, while that of the mother-tongue is not. In the end the Bantu themselves will have to decide as to the future of their own languages. But it should be stressed that many of the Europeans who encourage the study of these languages do so from no motive of segregation or differentiation, but because educational thinkers as a whole believe that there is an almost irreplaceable value in the mother-tongue. Experience in schools shows that it is not by any means the worst students in Zulu, Xhosa or Sotho who are the best students in English. Very often excellence in the one language is found together with excellence in the other.

There is so much more that might be said on the subject of education if there were no considerations of space to keep in mind. Out of many topics which remain over, we might select one with which to close the topic of adult education. Some very interesting experiments have been carried out among the Bantu in this field. The summer schools of the Bantu Youth League in Natal are good illustrations. But I feel that we still have to go a very long way in working out methods of reaching the parents of our children. We very often convince a child of some valuable points, for example of improvement in diet, only to find that complete lack of comprehension and co-operation at home destroys all our work or at any rate a great deal of it. We should certainly aim at a better system of adult education.

QUESTIONS:

(1) Would you be in favour of using the Bantu mother-tongue at all as a medium of instruction? If so, at what stage would you advocate transfer to the use of English as the mother-tongue?

(2) What in your opinion is the rightful place of Afrikaans in Bantu schools?

(3) Dr. Jones includes love of the land among his four essentials of education. Do you feel that this would be a valid aim for a Bantu school in an urban area?

(4) To what extent could the manual work and agricultural programmes of Bantu schools be adopted with advantage by European schools of similar standing?

THE BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES

THE HUMAN FACTOR

It has been well said that all reforms ultimately deal with both systems and people. While we have not forgotten the individual, we have been devoting our attention in most of the previous articles to systems. To get a balanced view of the situation we must come down to the human factor. We realise more and more nowadays that the best of systems cannot be a success if administered by selfish and undisciplined people, and that even in the worst of systems something can be done by good men. This truth must not be twisted to become an argument against trying to improve bad systems. But it must arouse in us a realisation of the iportance of people and the need of radically changing the attitude of people towards life, not forgetting our own. To take a very simple example. Honesty in the handling of money is fundamental to the success of many efforts to improve Bantu life. You cannot separate finance from life—it is a part of life. The great prevalence of carelessness and embezzlement of Trust funds in South Africa extends to Bantu enterprises and Bantu Societies. In how many cases have the African public lost heart because of the disappearance of the money which they have contributed to some great Society which was to have changed the world, but which, infact, has chiefly enriched its Office—bearers. Such mishandling of Trust funds has not always been deliberate dishonestly. It has often been mere gross carelessness. But the result in retarding progress of good causes and destroying public confidence has been very much the same. The comparative failure of co-operative societies is due to this cause. It is not by any means a purely Bantu characteristic. The history of co-operative societies among Europeans is full of records of embezzlement.

In the same way the quarrelsomeness which disfigures much of our life is something which no system can remove and which has to be dealt with in people individually—"My brethren, be not many masters" says one of the writers in the New Testament, and the trouble in much of South African life is that we all want to be leaders at the same time. The governing classes may possibly be able to afford the luxury of quarrelsomeness, but a subject race struggling to improve its conditions cannot afford such luxuries.

Even more intimately personal and yet even more vital to the progress of the race are those issues of health and of health and of home life which are affected by impurity, drunkenness and other forms of self-indulgence. Lust and drink, with the natural results of disease, have done far more to harm the Bantu than the most oppressive of laws passed by the most oppressive Governments can do. The remedy for so many of the ills of our society lies in our own hands and to be silent on this topic would make one a very imperfect prophet and misleading expounder of our situation.

When one thinks of much of the hypocricy and inconsistency in our South African Christianity one is not surprised to find revolt against religion. None the less nothing but a true and living religion lived out in daily life can help us to overcome these individual failures which spell national failure under any system. We dare not end a study of the Bantu in South African life without stressing this factor as from a purely realistic point of view the most important of all.

There is quite another side to this matter of human contacts which we should remember. So many would—be reformers are apt to think in terms of public meetings and resolutions. But reform must, in a great measure, be brought about by influencing individuals and changing their point of view, thus contact between individuals may be of the very highest value for our cause. Wherever true friendships can be formed across the colour line however humble the individuals concerned, something has been done to remedy our situation. A good deal of our thinking should therefore be devoted to seeing the possibilities of the contacts which we have and endeavouring to make more contacts between individuals possible.

XIX:—CAREERS [Concluded]

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

Among other careers open to Africans we might mention printing. A full course of this is given at Lovedale and some other Institutions. The educational standard of printers must not be lower than Std. VI. Their scale of pay varies with the local cost of living and with the individual's efficiency. It ranges from £1-10—a week for men of minimum ability to £2-5—aweek for good men. Bantu newspapers offer a field of employment for clerks, and in journalism proper there are a few posts available. Though these are small in number, they are very important, often special opportunities of service, and the remuneration compares favourably with that in many other careers.

A new profession, training for which is being provided by the Jan H. Hofmeyr School of Social Service, Johannesburg, is that of social worker. In some cases Bantu social workers are already employed by municipalities, sometimes in general welfare work, sometimes in organising sports and entertainments. The number of such posts is likely to increase considerably in the next few years, and the young men and women training at the Jan H. Hofmeyr School will, in all probability, have no difficulty in srecuring employment.

In the Government service, the opportunities offered are numerous, though not as numerous as they should be. There are over two hundred agricultural demonstrators' posts under the Native Affairs Department, paid on a scale ranging from £6 to £10 a month. A diploma of a recognised School of Agriculture is required for such a post. Matriculated Native clerks draw a salary on a scale beginning at £10 a month and rising to £20 a month. There are only about ten of such posts. Native clerk-interpreters, of whom over hundred and twenty are employed, are remunerated with salaries varying from £8 a month to 19 a month. The highest salary available to an African in the Government service is £450 per annum. Only one man has reached this figure.

Legitimate criticism of the restricted opportunities available to the Bantu in the Public Service fastens on two points. First, the almost complete exclusion of the Bantu from highers grades, even in their own Department and in their own areas, and secondly, the failure to use Africans for certain specific types of work. With regard to the former of these complaints, the argument generally used by the Government is that men in these higher positions are bound, in the ordinary course of events, to deal with Europeans as well as Bantu, and that in the present position of South African opinion, this is impracticable. The natural answer to this is: Either practise segregation or drop it. If you are really going to segregate White and Black, give the Black man his chance in predominantly Black areas, even if a handful of European traders and others, who after all are not compelled to live there, have to transact their business through a Black man."

With regard to the second point, namely types of post not yet thrown open, mention should be made of postmastership, which are very rarely given to Bantu candidates, even in urban locations or in definitely Native areas. The whole field of survey is closed to the Bantu, although there is much surveying to be done in Bantu areas. Clerkships in the Native sections of Provincial Education Departments are another legitimate aspiration.

Notwithstanding the above criticisms, it must be frankly admited that the Native Affairs Department has made great efforts to extend the number of posts available. Whenever a European interpretership in the Department falls vacant, the post is transfered to a Bantu post. Moreover, there is the big field of employment of the United Transkeian Territories General Council, figures for which are in addition to those quoted above.

The facts given in this and in the preceding article will possibly be of help to Bantu parents and to advanced students, and should be of general interest in indicating the increasing opportunities of service for educated men, while pointing out the very serious gaps in the present system.

BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

VI.— Wages and Social Problems.

We have been considering the gap that still exists between the wages of the father of a family and the minimum cost of a decent life for his family. We may claim that this gap is a contributing cause of nearly all the social evils in our towns, and that to fill it by increasing wages would do much to fight those social evils. At the outset let us be quite frank. Wages are not the only explanation of these social evils. They can be fought without an increase of wages, and in some cases they will survive an increase of wages. We must particularly beware of the danger of putting every social evil down to low pay, and using that as an excuse for tolerating, in ourselves or in others, evils that need not be tolerated. Just to take one illustration, infantile mortality is due to low wages and their natural results of poor feeding, overcrowding etc. But it is also due to ignorance and carelessness in some mothers, and it could be very considerably reduced by educational methods, cleanliness and the like without, necessarily, an increase of wages.

Let us take one more illustration, that of drink. Drink is most certainly associated with low wages and bad living conditions all the world over, but long experience show us that a poor man does not have to be a drunkard, and that not all rich men are sober. There are moral and spiritual qualities which can produce a David Livingstone, an Abraham Lincoln or a Booker Washington from a background of abject poverty, and we must very strongly oppose the dangerous tendency, often resulting in self-pity and demoralisation, which explains all evils as due to a bad economic system.

With equal intensity and conviction, we must state the case that these evils are partly due to the bad economic system, and we must fight for the wage increase which, while it cannot entirely destroy the evil, can remove a great deal of temptation from a great many people.

The social evils of low wages in our towns may well be summarised under 5 D's – debt, dice, drink, disease and delinquency.

The immediate short-term remedy for low wages is to run into debt. It is a short term remedy, because very few men can continue to obtain credit for an unlimited period. Large numbers of our people have got into debt, and find it very difficult to get out of it. They are always harassed, and tend to pay the creditor who worries them most In the meantime, they very often have to buy on the storekeeper's terms, and may waste many shillings a month by not being able to purchase freely in the cheapest market.

Another short-term remedy is to gamble. We must admit that the word "dice" is chiefly valuable as containing a "D", and that there are many other forms of gambling. Gambling, too, long experience shows to be a short range remedy. No man can fool all the bookies all the time. Besides breaking down proper habits of controlling one's finances, and the highest and finest moral ideals, gambling is not even a temporary remedy for the wage question.

There is a simple way out of the issue: when one is paid less than one needs for a minimum standard of decency and health, one way of adjusting the budget is to live below that standard, to go short of necessary food and clothing. This is the most honest way out of the difficulty, but unfortunately, it tends, through under-nourishment, overcrowding and inadequate clothing, to cause disease and death. Undoubtedly, a very large proportion of disease is due to low wages, and could be removed by increasing them.

If the father cannot earn enough to keep the family, the mother may try to supplement his earnings. The easiest and most profitable way to do this in many of our large town locations is to sell liquor. This is bad from every point of view. The home, particularly in the week-ends, becomes a most unsuitable place for children, and the purchasers of the liquor are very often men from the Reserves, who waste in this way, the money which should be going back to their wives and families ther. Wholesale demoralisation results. A woman does not have to sell liquor: some women manage without doing so. None the less, the temptation is great, and an effective raising of wages would go a long way to remove it.

Alternatively, the mother may go out to work in the daytime, or the children may get odd jobs. In both cases, there is a danger of delinquency resulting. When the father and mother are both away all day, the house locked up, and the street the only playground, how can it be expected that children will all be able to avoid those things that bring them into conflict with the law? Much delinquency is directly due to the fact that the father of the family does not earn enough to support his family, though he works hard.

In our work for better wages, therefore, we are directly supplementing the valuable efforts of the churches, the schools, and other associations and individual workers in their struggle to overcome the social evils which have to be encountered in our urban locations.

QUESTIONS:

1. What are the main caeses of delinquency other than the low wage? What can be done to prevent and cure delinquency, other than the raising of wages?

2. Answer the same questions with regard to debt.

The Bantu In South African Life.

XI: Bantu Law and the Courts Administering it.

MAR 8 1941

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In the last two articles we have been considering some of the problems of life in the Reserves. Closely associated with these problems is the question of what is usually called "Native Law". The questions of its recognition and the courts by which it should be administered are matters of real importance in Bantu life chiefly, but not wholly, in the Reserves.

Every nation has its own system of law, which must not lightly be condemned by others. Bantu law, though open to criticism on some points, was a well-worked out system designed to meet the conditions of tribal society. Some people have held, and some still hold, the view that Bantu law should not be recognised at all. But this, in the eyes of most students, would be considered an extreme view. It is true that we could hardly expect the court of a civilised country to sentence people to death, possibly death by torture, for being witches but there are vast fields of Bantu law, especially the law covering the relationship of persons to one another, which are not open to the same kind of objections as the law for punishing witches The policy of the British Commonwealth has been to recognise throughout the King's dominions the customary law of every nation or tribe so far as that law is compatible with the principle, of equity and humanity. So, in South Africa, Roman-Dutch law was recognised from the beginning, and is still the basis of our law. No attempt was made to force English Common law on this country. On the contrary Englishmen coming to settle here were subjected to Roman-Dutch law In the same way, we have gradually learned to respect and recognise Bantu law in all civic cases between members of the Bantu race.

The great difficulty arises however, that the Bantu are in different stages of civilisation Concessions which were rightly granted to people living under tribal conditions become mere licence when extended to civilised men. An obvious example is polygamy Restrictions, probably quite justifiable in tribal life, bear hardly on civilised men it is, for example, rather hard hat a graduate, a professional man, should be subjected on all points to the administrative discretion of an illiterate chief.

Broadly speaking, we have tried to get over this difficulty in two ways. In the Province of Natal anyone may apply for exemption from Native law, and if the Government is satisfied that he is a civilised man may obtain such exemption. On matters such as those referred to above, and on many others, he then falls under the ordinary Roman-Dutch and Statute law of the country, and not under Native law. Under this system a man, however civilised, does not escape from Native law, which in Natal is thrown into the form of a code, unless he has actually been exempted. In the other Provinces, the Courts themselves are given discretion as to the extent to which they should apply Native law to the particular persons before them. Neither system is wholly satisfactory, and very often decisions are given which are felt to be inequitable, though it must, in fairness to the Courts, be admitted that their task is an extremely difficult one.

The kind of questions which readers of these articles should be considering for themselves, are whether Bantu law shuold be expressed in the form of a written code, or left to be built up by the Courts', whether the Natal system of exemption is a good one, or whether it is best to leave the courts discretion to deal with each case on its merits; and whether there are any parts of Bantu law to which recognition should not be accorded Under this last head, the most frequently discussed instance is that of the so-called "bride-price" (LOBOLO IKHASI BOGADI). There are those who claim that this custom is of the very essence of Bantu society, and is contrary neither to the principles of humanity nor to Christianity. There are those, on other hand, who claim that conditions have altered so much that, as things are to-day, the custom which our law describes that recognition should be withdrawn from it. Another matter to which our law describes that recognition should be given to the form of marriage according to Bantu custom which our law describes as "customary union". Some people believe that all customary unions should be registered, and that they should be given a higher legal status than they have now.

MAR 8 1941

A last point is that of the Courts best suited to adiminister "Native law". At present a large number of Chiefs have been given jurisdiction, but with the exception of one small area of the Union, no African is compelled to go to his Chief first. He can choose whether to go to the Chief or the Native Commissioner. If he goes to the Chief, he may appeal to the Native Commissioner.

MAR 8 1941

Appeal from the Native Commissioner lies in all cases to the Native Appeal Courts There are two of these, one for the Cape and Orange Free State, the other for the Transvaal and Natal. These Courts have in many instances done excellent work, although critics point out that, particularly in those Provinces where the law is not codified, the power of interpreting Bantu law under changing modern conditions gives to the Presipent of an Appeal Court the chance of making decisions deeply affecting the Bantu social system, and almost of legislating—powers which should probably rather be in the hands of the ordinary legislative authorities, advised by the Native Representative Council

Bantu Leadership Wrangle

MAY 29 1941

There is today amongst the Bantu an undercurrent of antagonism between people of advanced years on one hand and youth on the other, or between what we might call self-schooled men and young men of letters from colleges over the question of leadership in particular. The former group maintains that it has a prerogative of leadership because of its advantage in years and experience in real life, while the latter claims the proragative on the grounds of college education and adaptability of the youthful mind to new conditions and changes.

While there is much to be said for both views, we must, however, try to point out where the fallacy lies, its cause and effect. Tackling the subject from the body we first examine the causes.

Conservatism of old age amongst all races has always been the despair of constructive enterprise especially with a people who are not yet beyond the one school they know—the hard school of real life. With old age youth is always ignorant and reckless and in all circumstances must be lead. Traditionally with the Bantu, youth is regarded as inherently irresponsible, and rigid age stages are, therefore, observed for its weaning. Those are few general causes of this leadership wrangle on the part of our elder generation.

Now, on the part of our modern youth there are the natural weaknesses of youth—ambition, impatience and lack of tact in trying circumstances. These are accentuated by the over-emphasis without analysis of leadership in schools and colleges by the teachers. Boys and girls are told over and over again that because so many of their brothers and sisters are still ignorant, they are leaders of their race with the result that they go out into real life with that leadership complex which will brook no interference with its ideals. They want to be accepted at their face value as genuine leaders, otherwise they will resign the company of their so-called educational inferiors, even to the extent of being nonentities in a national sense. This kind of attitude on the part of our young people directly puts them at loggerheads with their mellow brethern who haven't had the opportunity of high education and, nevetheless, have been so schooled by the world that it put the reins of its affairs in their hands.

Comparisons are usually odious, and it would be futile here to try to justify one group by the faults of the other. In any case, there is no prerogative of leadership for any group, because a leader is not made but is born. Old age will always be venerable and youth admirable, but they never supersede each other in the question of leadership. One born a leader will die a leader no matter what counter-acting influences there are.

If we should be fortunate to discover our leader young no matter in what sphere of national life, let us give him liberal old and tried men to advise him, youthful and enterprising men to keep him company in his national adventure. The same with an elderly leader, he will need enlightened and enterprising young men about him, otherwise he can only be a leader of his generation and no other.

In liquidating this subject we must point out that a leader is not necessarily a polititian as we are accustomed to think. True enough our life is so bound up with politics that it is with great difficulty to keep out of their premises altogether in most of our national organisations. That is an anomaly which we should not allow to develop to a complex We can have outstanding leaders in matters religious, educational as well as industrial, and perhaps a prodigy in several or all of them.

7. HOUSING

Closely connected with the problem of wages is that of housing. If the wages paid to the father of a family are not enough, he must either live in slum conditions or be supplied with what is called "sub-economic" housing, that is, with a house let at a rent which does not bring in a fair return on the cost of the house.

Opinions are divided on the question of whether it is better to pay a higher cash wage and charge an "economic" rent or to rely on the "sub-economic" rent to help matters out. My own opinion is definitely that it is always better to pay a wage which makes a man independent and enables him to look after his own interests. It will take time, however, before this can be done, and in the meantime the provision of houses at specially cheap rentals is doing much to ease the position.

There is another important and interesting point about housing. Kindly friends of the poor and theorists about poverty tend to think in terms of housing. The poor themselves tend to think in terms of food. That is why there is sometimes conflict between progressive and well-meaning Municipalities and the Bantu for whom they are trying to make provision. Beautiful houses — at least relatively beautiful, compared with the slums — are provided miles away from the centre of the town, not only adding transport charges, and using upon them money which might have been spent for food, but also raising the actual cost of food itself by moving the housewife away from the Market and competitive shopping area. It is a difficult thing to get Municipalities away from the idea that any Bantu Villages ought to be miles from the centre of the town, but in the Southern part of the United States of America, where racial segregation also prevails, the Negro quarter of the town is often quite near the business centre.

JUSTIFIABLE RESENTMENT

Small wages affect housing, even when it is "sub-economic", and always in the same way, by encouraging overcrowding. Firstly, the houses, even when of a satisfactory and pleasing type, are in the nature of the case, small, too small for a large growing family. Secondly, in the endeavour to make ends meet, families sometimes take lodgers in their already overcrowded homes. Local authorities try to stop this, by imposing a special Lodger's Fee, and in some areas, have aroused great and thoroughly justifiable resentment by classifying as lodgers, grown-up sons of the family.

The value of good housing is threefold. Firstly, it is of immense importance to health, as many diseases...and most strikingly tuberculosis...are actively spread by overcrowding. Secondly, it makes a great difference to the culture and self-respect of the family. Thirdly, especially if the houses have a sufficient number of separate rooms, it assists in maintaining the standards of morality.

CONSTRUCTIVE IMAGINATION

Although housing is very much bound up with the wage question, it must also be considered on its own merits. Even within the present limits of finance available, it is possible to provide either a poor or a relatively good housing scheme. Some towns, for example Pretoria, in its new garden village of Atteridgeville, have shown what can be done by town-planning and the use of constructive imagination. Points that call for study by the Municipalities and their expert advisers are (1) the materials used, that these may give the best value for money possible; [2] the arrangement of the house, a matter on which educated Bantu women should be taken into counsel; [3] the general appearance of the house and village, so that the appearance of rows of barracks may be avoided, since it costs little more to plan a pretty house than an ugly one; [4] the best way of utilising what skilled Bantu labour may be available, possibly by loans to enable plot-holders to build for themselves; (5) the artistic planning of the village as a whole, with due provision from the beginning for Schools, Churches, Shops, Community Halls, and, if possible, a Dairy.

Some thinkers advocate the building of blocks of flats, with communal play-grounds, wash-houses etc., as being the best way of giving really good housing within the limits of the available funds. Recently, the University of the Witwatersrand issued an interestingly illustrated study of this project, a study on which five post-graduate students had worked together. It is worth reading.

FOR CO-OPERATION

Improved Municipal housing is very evident these days, and while one must deplore the many deficiencies still existing, one must be sincerely grateful for what has been done. This subject of housing is one which is peculiarly fitting for the co-operation of Bantu and Europeans in the towns through Joint Councils and otherwise.

Much might be written about housing in the Reserves and on Farms, but the spear-head of the housing question is at present the urban areas.

JAN 1 1 1941

QUESTIONS:

1. On a rough plan of your own town, mark out any areas, within three miles of the centre of the town, which might be made available for Bantu homes.

2. Should rent be calculated on the actual cost of Municipal houses, or on what the cost would have been if they had been built by Bantu labour?

3. Would you favour the experiment of "Workers' Flats" as an attempt to solve Bantu housing problems or not?

Bantu Deterioration

The physical deterioration of our Bantu people since the advent and expansion of other races from overseas is a matter which is of such alarming proportions that it should be no longer viewed as a story that is told and with inaction. A good number of friends of our people have lifted up their voice and warned the country and the Bantu themselves. But the warnings of a few sympathisers is not sufficient when avoidable diseases inflict such havoc upon a people whose services the country can ill afford. Statistics of the Union have provided most alarming information that the Bantu are already suffering and succumbing to such diseases as are avoidable and are successfully resisted by the other sections of the population.

The causes are ignorance and poverty. The remedy is in the hands of the Government to see to it that education and an economic wage should be liberally given to the Bantu as is done for the other racial groups in this country. The news that the number of the Bantu who succumb to malnutrition which is the basis of T.B., and V.D, and is the result of ignorance, is most disquietening and gives cause for the fear that the Bantu as a race may reach a stage in their dwindling numebrs which may stamp them as a dying race.

At the meeting of the Bantu Youth League held the other day at Imbumbulu, most alarming reports were made by Dr. C. N. Dlamini of the Durban Municipal Health Department that the numbers of Bantu sufferers and deaths from the above-mentioned diseases are approximately about ten times that of the other racial groups in the Union.

Another feature which tends to impoverish our people is the increase in numbers of "doctors" who make and disseminate claims for ability to cure diseases hich is beyond their power or training to discharge. This is done by Europeans and the Bantu, mostly those who have no qualifications to heal those diseases. According to the law no qualified medical practitioner may coerce or persuade patients to come to him for treatment, but here in Durban some healers with no qualifications, white and black, have taken to the method of employing several women to stand at corners and tout for them and point any passerby to their masters.

We cannot understand how qualified doctors are debarred from this practice and the others allowed or connived at by the law officers.

Another source of Bantu sufferings and deaths is some practitioners, European and Bantu who take advantage of their ignorance so praise their herbs if they were cure-alls when all the time they know that is not true. Some of these concoctions lay the foundation of diseases which were non-existent but have been caused solely by giving to these sufferers medicines which are not curative but resustless.

We think the time is now due when the health and the lives of our people should be preserved by enjoining that those who aspire to the curative faculty should, at least, have some training and not as is done now when any one may be a doctor without ever having received instruction from a qualified medical pactitioner. It is well-known that here in Natal and the Transvaal there are medical organizations now recognized by the Government. Why are not these bodies given such powers of training and Examinations that they can train aspirants for the position of physicians and issue official certificates for such as have qualified after examination, and all others be debarred from endangering the health and lives of their people by applying such clumsy methods and so called cure-alls which belie their names!

If the father cannot earn enough to keep the family, the mother may try to supplement his earnings. The easiest and most profitable way to do this in many of our town locations is to sell liquor. This is bad from every point of view. The home, particularly in the week-ends, becomes a most unsuitable place for children, and the purchasers of the liquor are very often men from the Reserves, who waste in this way, the money which should be going back to their wives and families there. Wholesale demoralisation results. A woman does not have to sell liquor: some women manage without doing so. None the less, the temptation is great, and an effective raising of wages would go a long way to move it.

Alternatives JAN 4 - 1941

Alternatively, the mother may go out to work in the daytime, or the children may get odd jobs. In both cases, there is a danger of delinquency resulting. When the father and mother are both away all day, the house locked up, and the street the only playground, how can it be expected that children will all be able to avoid those things that bring them into conflict with the law? Much delinquency is directly due to the fact that the father of the family does not earn enough to support his family, though he works hard.

In our work for better wages, therefore, we are directly supplementing the valuable efforts of the churches, the schools, and other associations and individual workers in their struggle to overcome the social evils which have to be encountered in our urban locations.

QUESTIONS: JAN 4 - 1941

1. What are the main causes of delinquency other than the low wage? What can be done to prevent and cure delinquency, other than the raising of wages?
2. Answer the same questions with regard to debt.

XVI: EDUCATION

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In our last article we were considering the question of taxation, and we made reference in it to the special account into which two-thirds of the poll tax and certain other taxes are paid. This "Native Development Fund" which is now linked up with the South African Native Trust Fund, has education as its main item of expenditure.

When the present system of financing Bantu education was introduced in 1925 the four Provinces between them spending £340,000 annually on Bantu education. During the present year, the amount of expenditure is to exceed £1,000,000. It is clear that progress has been made, and very considerable progress. But anyone who has anything to do with Bantu education knows how inadequate the funds are even for the more urgent needs. Sooner or later, we shall have to find a better method of raising funds for this important object. No doubt in the meantime we can go on forcing up the contribution from poll tax. It has already risen from 4s. in the £ to 13s 4d. in the £, and we must try to get 20s. in the £. But even this will be far from adequate. Moreover, the principle that expenditure on Bantu education should be limited by the amount of the tax raised is wholly unsound. What should be done is to fix a grant per head based on school attendance, so that the amount available may rise annually in an automatic way. At present every increase is the subject of negotiations and conferences, and one is never able to plan for more than a year ahead.

This question of the financing of Bantu education is one of the many points for consideration by those who are studying Bantu life. Another point is the question of the control of our schools. Under this term fall to be discussed two different questions: first; to what extent the schools should be directly controlled, by the State, and, secondly, what State department or administration should control them.

As to the first question, almost all our primary schools outside the Province of Natal, and the majority in Natal, are under the immediate control of missionary societies or churches. A certain number are aided financially and inspected by the Government. Others are so-called "private schools", which, owing to lack of funds, do not receive this aid. All our Training Colleges, all our Industrial Schools, all our High Schools going as far as Matriculation, and a number of our junior High Schools are at present under missionary or church control.

Opinions are very divided as to the value of this system. Some Christian bodies, especially the Roman Catholic Church, hold on principle that education is a church matter, and that state schools tend to become secular and to leave out essential religious instruction. Many who do not share these views fully feel that the time is not yet ripe for transfer of primary schools to state control. One consideration which must not be overlooked is the personality of the teacher. A believing head teacher in a government school is more likely to be an effective force for Christ than an unbelieving head teacher in a church school.

One of the reasons why more schools are not under state control is that the state is shirking its financial responsibilities, and is only too glad to allow the missionary societies and churches to help to carry them. Much criticism of missionary education overlooks this vital fact.

To the extent to which the state controls education, directly or indirectly, by what organisation of the state should the control be exercised? For us in the Union this question resolves itself into a choice between three possible controlling bodies—the Provincial Administration, the Union Native Affairs Department and the Union Education Department. The Provincial Administrations are of course the controlling bodies at present with the exception of the S.A. Native College at Fort Hare, which falls under the Union Education Department. Probably the majority of Bantu leaders, if asked for their opinion, would place the three possible controlling bodies in the following order of preference: (1) Union Education Department; (2) Provincial Administrations. (3) Native Affairs Department. Of recent years a determined effort has been made to transfer Bantu education to the Union Native Affairs Department though this has been successfully countered by an appeal to Provincial feeling and the constitutional rights of the Provinces. The changes of a transfer to the Union Education Department in the near future are not great. What is important is that any co-ordinating machinery such as a Union Advisory Board should come under the Education Department and not under the Native Affairs Department.

The reason why so many Bantu leaders object to control by the Native Affairs Department is their fear that semi-political considerations such as theories of segregation will have a disproportionate influence on the educational policy followed, and they prefer to have that policy approached from a more purely educational standpoint.

On The Formation Of Co-operative Societies

MAY 17 1941

"If we do not study and move forward, we cannot complain if the world moves on and leaves us behind."

It has been the experience of most of us to puzzle over a problem alone without finding a solution to it, and then with the help of a friend to find one easily. This happens to so many people that it is a common saying that two heads are better than one. When a man takes the trouble to talk things over with others and compares his reasons with theirs, he forms better ideas, opinions and conclusions than he could all by himself.

MAY 17 1941

This being so, we should all be helped if we came together to talk over our problems in order that we may learn to act more intelligently in relation to them and so help ourselves to better living. There are so many problems which people have in common, especially in these difficult times, and we in our community can solve ours by study ing them to find a solution and then acting together to make the proposed solution work successfully.

TO STUDY IN YOUR COMMUNITY

The geographic position of your community, its resources, the economic conditions of your people, and their attitude and enlightenment will help to determine what projects you should study. Probably a survey of the economic conditions and the economic possibilities should be made. Then a graded programme of things that might be found to be successively possible for you, could be made. The Bantu Social Service League will be glad to help you to make such a survey and such a programme based on the results of the survey. Then it will help you to study the selected projects by supplying you with suitable material, etc.

MAY 17 1941

HOW TO STUDY PROBLEMS.

You should form a discussion group. This is quite easy, for a sufficient number who would be interested in forming such a group will usually be found in every community. It only needs a little leadership from some enthusiastic person to bring them together. Call a few of them and talk things over. Later encourage a few more to join the group till the desired number is secured. Very often a group may be formed in connection with some existing organization, and this is considered quite advisable.

Have a person in the group who is enthusiastic enough to take the lead in getting the group started and to see that it is kept going. Such a person should be appointed leader. On him will depend in great measure the success of the group. By skilful guidance he will see that the discussions are kept to the subject, in order that the greatest progress may be made. He will make sure that every one has a chance to talk. He may ask questions, even if he does not know the answers, so that all will be given a chance to say something. This will help to get the discussions started. Usually it will lead the members to do something like reading and studying at home also.

A good leader does not try to inform the others, but it would be helpful to the group if when he may be able, he would repeat in simple words ideas that may not be clear to others, and he should note difficult points which nobody in the group can clear up and obtain help from somebody in the community from the Bantu Social Service League. But a good leader does not talk too much. He is just one of the group. In some cases when a suitable leader cannot be secured, the position can be filled by the members in turn. This leads to develop leaders and keep the interest at a high level.

3. All members of the group should join in the discussions. They should prepare before going to the meetings by thinking about the subject to be discussed, talking with some one else about it.

In order that every one may join in freely in every part of the discussion, the meetings should be as informal as possible. For that reason the group should not be too large. It should generally consist of from three or four neigbhours or friends who meet at a private house.

4. You should make regular arrangements of the group. A regular time should be agreed on which will be convenient for those who want to be in the group. Do not put the meetings too far apart. Once a week keeps people interested. Once a fortnight is something but once a month, although better than not at all, leaves too much time in between to keep up interest.

Find a place to hold the meetings—in your homes, schools, Hall, under a tree or wherever people can get together enjoyably. Since the success of the group depends largely on the members' feeling at ease, a comfortable, home-like place should be selected if possible. Have somebody to see that the meeting is place ready in time. Meeting should always start punctually and end when the fixed time is up. If meetings are prolonged the attendance will suffer.

5. A vital motive for learning should be in the minds of the members. In these difficult times the most urgent question in the minds of every body is how to assure ourselves of the necessities of life—food, shelter clothing, work and play. Undertake the study of a common problem the solution of which will be of some benefit to all the members. It is advisable for the leader to communicate with the FIELD SECRETARY of the Bantu Social Service League for help in making a choice.

6. Meetings are most successful when you prepare for them before hand. At each meeting the leader should announce the topic to be discussed at the next, and reading matter on the subject should be assigned.

7. You can give variety to your procedure :-

(a) For example, try this suggestion; at one of your meetings put into a hat as many slips of paper as there are members present. Write questions on three or four of these slips and leave the others blank. Pass the hat around and ask members to draw slips. Those who draw slips with the questions will be expected to give a few minutes talk, each on his own question at the next meeting.

(b) If there are several discussion groups in your community or district, they should come together once a Month at a central Hall or School to take part in a joint programme which might be composed in this form:

(1) Report from group leaders, giving a short account of group activities.

(2) Debate or Public speaking contest between two groups.

(3) Short talks by selected local speakers on topics studied in the groups.

(4) An address by an (invited) outside speaker.

(5) Programme of entertainment, such as songs, music, School Children's dialogues and plays.

(6) Do not overlook the social side of your meetings. A little fun at the end of your study period will help to keep the interest of the members. Try some community singing for instance. A One-act play might be practised and staged at one of the joint meetings of the groups in the community.

8. You should study one subject thoroughly before you pass to another. It is better to keep to one subject for several weeks and study it systematically and carefully, rather than deal with a different subject at each meeting.

9. After you have learnt something that you can practise, whether individually or in groups, do not delay to act on what you have learnt as soon as you are sure you are ready for such action. In the case of group enterprise, however, you should be sure that all those who are to participate in it understand and are determined to make it a success. In many communities in South Africa there is a great demand for People's Adult Schools. In case you wish to start one in your community and you are not sure of how to go about. THE BANTU SOCIAL SERVICE LEAGUE will be glad to help you.

Can the grown-up people learn how to read and write and also solve their problems? Yes. Beside our own knowledge, we have the findings of scientific enquiries to inspire us. For example, Professor Thorndyke of Columbia University, studied how age affects our ability to learn and then he wrote a book to tell in detail that we can learn better after we have grown up than we could when we were boys and girls. Not only have we more brain power for learning now, but we are more interested in the things we want to learn, because we feel the need of learning them more than we did when we were young.

The world advances and in time outgrows
The laws that in our father's day were best:
And doubtless, after us, some purer scheme
Will be shaped out by wiser men than we,
Made wiser by the steady growth of truth."

THE BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

JAN 25 1941

8—LAND (BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

If you talk to any European on what he calls "the Native question", the chances are three to one that he will tell you he is in favour of "segregation." What segregation means is not easy to define. To some people it is simply a politer term for domination. For others it represents a genuine philosophy of the colour bar, applied as rigidly as possible. Strictly speaking, however, it should be used, and has most frequently been used by serious writers, to describe a land policy. We understand by segregation, in land matters, that the races are not given the right to buy freely, but that certain areas are earmarked for the Bantu and others for Europeans, with the object of preventing undue racial conflict and friction.

There are two tempting roads down which our feet might stray if we let them. The one is the road of history, when we might describe the evolution of this policy, with the Land Act of 1913 as its main historical landmark. The other road is to argue the pros and cons of this segregation regarding land, about which we may simply say here that while to many of us it seems unjust, and also unwise, to impose a rigid segregation preventing people from buying land where both sides are satisfied with the transaction, yet we must confess that it would be difficult for the less developed tribal sections of the Bantu to retain their land unless their exclusive right to it were protected by law. Turning resolutely from these two paths, however, we shall follow the strait and narrow way of simply describing the land situation as it is.

Land in South Africa may be divided, for our purposes, into four main categories, namely (i) scheduled Native areas; (ii) released areas; (iii) Native-owned land outside scheduled and rleeased areas; (iv) purely European areas. The fourth is of course much the largest of the groups.

1. SCHEDULED NATIVE AREAS: These areas are those which were in Native possession in 1913, and listed as such in the Schedule to the Natives Land Act of that year. They mostly consist of tribal locations and Reserves, but they include also the Mission Reserves in Natal, and a number of privately-owned Bantu farms and settlements, which are not actually tribal reserves, but which are protected on the same lines as tribal reserves.

2. RELEASED AREAS: These areas, comprising altogether some 28,000 square miles, were recognised and defined by the Natives Land Amendment Act of 1936. In these areas Bantu and Europeans may both acquire rights to land. An African wishing to buy land in such an area, and being able to put down the money for it, does not require any special permission of the Government for the transaction. The South African Native Trust, which is the Government acting under a different name and in a special capacity, has been buying land in and adjoining these areas, and has up to the time of writing spent nearly five million pounds in doing so. Note that the Trust may buy land adjoining released areas, but individual Africans need special permission to do this. It is only within released areas that he can buy without permission.

Progressive Bantu farmers would very much like to have better facilities for acquiring individual title to land. They would like the Trust to follow one or both of two courses. The first course is that the Trust, having bought land, should break it up and sell it in individual plots. The other is that the Government should assist the Bantu purchasers of land by loans in the same way that the Land Bank assists Europeans. Provision is made for this under the law, but it has only been done in a small number of cases. None the less, individual Africans who have some money, and find themselves in a position where they could buy land if they had more money, should try applying for a loan of this kind. Applications are made through the local Native Commissioner, and there is an increasing tendency to treat them sympathetically if the aplicant is a man of any substance, or known as a progressive farmer. The areas purchased are being used at present as a supplement to tribal reserves under progressive agricultural management, subject to the payment of an annual rent and the acceptance of certain restrictions, for example on the number of stock owned. These restrictions, though necessary, are not popular with the Bantu.

3. NATIVE-OWNED LAND OUTSIDE SCHEDULED AND RELEASED AREAS: There are still a good many Native-owned farms and settlements outside the released areas. In some cases these are entirely surrounded by a European area, and are sometimes referred to as "black islands". An Act of 1939 gives the Government power to compel people to remove from these "black islands", in which case they would be given the choice between adequate monetary compensation and the offer in exchange of land of equal value. So far this Act has remained a dead letter, and the probability is that it will be used very sparingly. The Government has the right to expropriate "white islands" in Bantu areas, but the situation is not quite as fair as it sounds, because few governments would do this, while it would not be so difficult for a Government to expropriate "black islands".

The cry of the Bantu for more land continues to be an instant one. The day must surely come when individual Bantu will have to be given the right to purchase outside the released areas. In the meantime, the Government on its side should do more to help the Bantu to acquire land inside released areas, while on the Bantu side much has to be done to learn the right use of land, so as to make one morgen produce, under modern methods, as much as four morgen produced under the old, antiquated methods which are still used in so many areas. But this question of the agricultural development and proper use of the land must remain to be considered in our next article.

QUESTIONS:

JAN 25 1941

1. Would you favour (a) a tribe (b) individuals in a tribe having the right to sell or mortgage tribal land? If not, why not?

2. The Government prohibits syndicates of more than six Natives from acquiring land without its special permission. What do you think are the reasons for this restriction? Do you favour it?

XIII. MARRIAGE

BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES

In our last article we dealt with certain aspects of "Native law". We try to check this kind of thing, they saw that one of the great difficulties which we have to face is the relationship between this customary law of the Bantu and Roman-Dutch law. This relationship becomes perhaps more difficult in the sphere of marriage than in any other. Particularly is this the case because marriage is not only an affair of the State, but also of the Church, and even where churches are willing to respect Bantu custom on other points, they are hesitant to do anything which would destroy the Christian ideal of marriage.

The law calls marriage according to the old Bantu rites and customs by the not very happy name of "customary union." Many of us do not altogether like this name, carrying as it does the suggestion that these unions are not true marriages. We shall, however, use the term because it has at any rate the merit of preventing confusion as to whether we are speaking about marriage under Bantu customary law or marriage by Christian rites.

In addition to these alternatives, civil marriage is available for exempted Bantu in Natal, and for all Bantu in the other Provinces. But it is not very popular, nor is it very widely used.

There are many vexing problems which have to be faced in this field of marriage and customary union. We shall select only a few for discussion.

MAR 22 1941

The first is the registration of customary unions. This is common in Natal, but not in the other Provinces. Many groups are now asking for this recognition, and from many different points of view. Even missionary bodies are now pressing for it. One of the reasons is that the woman is not adequately protected at present. The difficulties which arise from not registering customary unions are very clearly illustrated in the less satisfactory side of the life of our towns. It very often happens that a man who has already contracted a customary union, or even a Christian marriage, at home comes into a town and forms a temporary union, under circumstances not covered by either Bantu law or Roman-Dutch law, with a second woman. A single man may also form a temporary union of this kind. When municipalities try to check this kind of thing, they are met by the statement that the parties had been united by customary union, and as, outside Natal, there is no documentary proof, they are compelled to accept the position.

This is on of the factors which go to encourage irregular and even immoral unions in our towns. One of the most serious things in modern Bantu life is the fact of the very high percentage of illegitimate births, amounting, in a few authenticated cases, to more than half the births in a given town location. It would, of course, serve no purpose to deny, or to get indignant about, such accusations; they have been statistically proved correct. What we can deny is that this high rate of illegitimacy is due to a complete breakdown of self-respect, and to widespread immorality. These, unfortunately, play their part, but more significant in numbers than the immoral union is the irregular union. Somehow, we must try to find ways either of preventing this type of union, or at any rate of protecting the interests of the women and children involved in them, who have no legal claim upon anyone as the law is at present.

Very few demands are more urgent, or less likely to win popularity, than the demand upon educated young Africans to take a stand, both by their personal life and example and public witness, against the tendencies to throw away moral standards in matters of sex. The life of the nation is suffering more seriously and fundamentally in this way than even through the oppressive laws against which we all fight.

Closely bound up with marriage is the question of the ukulobola custom which has been referred to in a previous article. Opinion is sharply divided on this issue. One thing which might be noted is that types of contract are coming into existence in our towns which are unknown under either Bantu or Roman-Dutch law—for example, a cash payment to the mother of the bride. It is not my intention to go at full length into this disputed question. The future of Bantu marriage is something which ultimately must be decided by the Bantu, not by any European experts or well-wishers, but it needs far more consistent and honest thought than has been given to it.

XII: BANTU LAW AND THE COURTS ADMINISTERING IT

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In the last two articles we have been considering some of the problems of life in the Reserves. Closely associated with these problems is the question of what is usually called "Native Law". The questions of its recognition and the courts by which it should be administered are matters of real importance in Bantu life chiefly, but not wholly, in the Reserves.

MAR 1 1941

Every nation has its own system of law, which must not lightly be condemned by others. Bantu law, though open to criticism on some points, was a well-worked-out system designed to meet the conditions of tribal society. Some people have held, and some still hold, the view that Bantu law should not be recognised at all. But this, in the eyes of most students, would be considered an extreme view. It is true that we could hardly expect the courts of a civilised country to sentence people to death, possibly death by torture, for being witches, but there are vast fields of Bantu law, especially the law covering the relationship of persons to one another, which are not open to the same kind of objections as the law for punishing witches. The policy of the British Commonwealth has been to recognise throughout the King's dominions the customary law of every nation or tribe so far as that law is compatible with the principles of equity and humanity. So, in South Africa, Roman-Dutch law was recognised from the beginning, and is still the basis of our law. No attempt was made to force English Common law on this country. On the contrary Englishmen coming to settle here were subjected to Roman-Dutch law. In the same way, we have gradually learned to respect and recognise Bantu law in all civil cases between members of the Bantu race.

MAR 1 1941

The great difficulty arises however, that the Bantu are in different stages of civilisation. Concessions which were rightly granted to people living under tribal conditions become mere licence when extended to civilised men. An obvious example is polygamy. Restrictions, probably quite justifiable in tribal life, bear hardly on civilised men. It is, for example, rather hard that a graduate, a professional man, should be subjected on all points to the administrative discretion of an illiterate chief.

Broadly speaking, we have tried to get over this difficulty in two ways. In the Province of Natal anyone may apply for exemption from Native law, and if the Government is satisfied that he is a civilised man may obtain such exemption. On matters such as those referred to above, and on many others, he then falls under the ordinary Roman-Dutch and Statute law of the country, and not under Native law. Under this system a man, however civilised, does not escape from Native law, which in Natal is thrown into the form of a code, unless he has actually been exempted. In the other Provinces, the Courts themselves are given discretion as to the extent to which they should apply Native law to the particular persons before them. Neither system is wholly satisfactory, and very often decisions are given which are felt to be inequitable, though it must, in fairness to the Courts, be admitted that their task is an extremely difficult one.

The kind of questions which arise, and which readers of these articles should be considering for themselves, are whether Bantu law should be expressed in the form of a written code, or left to be built up by the Courts; whether the Natal system of exemption is a good one, or whether it is best to leave the Courts discretion to deal with each case on its merits; and whether there are any parts of Bantu law to which recognition should not be accorded. Under this last head, the most frequently discussed instance is that of the so-called "bride-price" (LOBOLO IKHASI BOGADI). There are those who claim that this custom is of the very essence of Bantu society, and is contrary neither to the principles of humanity nor to Christianity. There are those, on other hand, who claim that conditions have altered so much that, as things are to-day, the custom which our law describes that recognition should be withdrawn from it. Another matter to which we shall have occasion to refer in a later article is the extent to which recognition should be given to the form of marriage according to Bantu custom which our law describes as "customary union". Some people believe that all customary unions should be registered, and that they should be given a higher legal status than they have now.

A last point is that of the Courts best suited to administer "Native law". At present a large number of Chiefs have been given jurisdiction, but with the exception of one small area of the Union, no African is compelled to go to his Chief first. He can choose whether to go to the Chief or the Native Commissioner. If he goes to the Chief, he may appeal to the Native Commissioner.

Appeal from the Native Commissioner lies in all cases to the Native Appeal Courts. There are two of these, one for the Cape and the Orange Free State, the other for the Transvaal and Natal. These Courts have in many instances done excellent work, although critics point out that particularly in those Provinces where the law is not codified, the power of interpreting Bantu law under changing modern conditions gives to the President of an Appeal Court Court the chance of making decisions deeply affecting the Bantu social system, and almost of legislating—powers which should probably rather be in the hands of the ordinary legislative authorities, advised by the Native Representative Council.

Bantu Leadership Wrangle

MAR 29 1941

There is today, amongst the Bantu an undercurrent of antagonism between people of advanced years on one hand and youth on the other, or between what we might call self-schooled men and young men of letters from colleges over the question of leadership in particular. The former group maintains that it has a prerogative of leadership because of its advantage in years and experience in real life, while the latter claims the proragative on the grounds of college education and adaptability of the youthful mind to new conditions and changes.

MAR 29 1941

While there is much to be said for both views, we must, however try to point out where the fallacy lies, its cause and effect. Tackling the subject from the body we first examine the causes.

Conservatism of old age amongst all races has always been the despair of constructive enterprise especially with a people who are not yet beyond the one school they know—the hard school of real life. With old age youth is always ignorant and reckless and in all circumstances must be lead. Traditionally with the Bantu, youth is regarded as inherently irresponsible, and rigid age stages are, therefore, observed for its weaning. Those are few general causes of this leadership wrangle on the part of our elder generation.

Now, on the part of our modern youth there are the natural weaknesses of youth—ambition, impatience and lack of tact in trying circumstances. These are accentuated by the over-emphasis without analysis of leadership in schools and colleges by the teachers. Boys and girls are told over and over again that because so many of their brothers and sisters are still ignorant, they are leaders of their race with the result that they go out into real life with that leadership complex which will brook no interference with its ideals. They want to be accepted at their face value as genuine leaders, otherwise they will resign the company of their so-called educational inferiors, even to the extent of being nonentities in a national sense.

This kind of attitude on the part of our young people directly puts them at loggerheads with their mellow brethern who haven't had the opportunity of high education and, nevetheless, have been so schooled by the world that it put the reins of its affairs in their hands.

Comparisons are usually odious, and it would be futile here to try to justify one group by the faults of the other. In any case, there is no prerogative of leadership for any group, because a leader is not made but is born. Old age will always be venerable and youth admirable, but they never supersede each other in the question of leadership. One born a leader will die a leader no matter what counter-acting influences there are.

If we should be fortunate to discover our leader young no matter in what sphere of national life, let us give him liberal old and tried men to advise him, youthful and enterprising men to keep him company in his national adventure. The same with an elderly leader, he will need enlightened and enterprising young men about him, otherwise he can only be a leader of his generation and no other.

In liquidating this subject we must point out that a leader is not necessarily a polititian as we are accustomed to think. True enough our life is so bound up with politics that it is with great difficulty to keep out of their premises altogether in most of our national organisations. That is an anomaly which we should not allow to develop to a complex. We can have outstanding leaders in matters religious, educational as well as industrial, and perhaps a prodigy in several or all of them.

8. Nutrition and Health

In the course of last few articles, we have been dealing with matters directly or indirectly connected with the wage question. But we have felt it important to point out, for example with regard to housing, that while wages are a very important factor, there are other aspects of housing to be considered. So it is with nutrition, by which phrase we mean simply the proper feeding of the community. The connection of poor wages with malnutrition is very clear, and must constantly be emphasised, but we must not think that we have dealt with the problem of nutrition simply by saying that people should get higher wages. This attitude is very often the result of suspicion. People feel that the suggestion of any remedy other than the raising of wages simply means an attempt to evade paying higher wages. We should put this suspicion out of our mind and decide both to work for higher wages and to consider nutrition and general health on their merits.

Food and nourishment are very different things. Food is what we eat: nourishment is what we get out of it. It is possible for a man to eat a good deal, and yet be undernourished. Take for example, the pure white "refined" mealie meal, which is sold in bags in our towns. It has been publicly pointed out by the Chief Medical Officer of Health for the Union that nearly all the real nutrition has been removed from this mealie meal. Those who eat it might almost as well be filling themselves up with sawdust. When we consider that the staple food of many families in towns consists of this type of mealie meal, white bread and tea, often without milk, it is easy to see that many families may feel fairly well fed without getting anything like the real nourishment that they need. Just as it is possible to spend as much money on an ugly house as on a pretty one, so it is possible to spend as much money on poor food as on good food. Here is one side of the nutrition question which is independent of wages, and where good work can be done. Any householder can buy brown bread for the same price as white, and get far better value for money from it.

There is another aspect, however, of nutrition. Some of the foods which our people most need, particularly fruit, green vegetables and milk, are difficult to get in the towns. We must face that fact that the conservatism of the people sometimes prevents them from using such opportunities as they have for example of buying green vegetables cheaply, and the knowledge that so few people will buy them sometimes tends to discourage storekeepers from stocking them. None the less, there is a real obligation on the part of our Municipalities and other public authorities, to see that foods of this kind are easily available. Particularly is it important that facilities for the purchase of clean milk at reasonable rates should be available.

In these matters, there is much wrong thinking on the part of the Government and of sections of public opinion. Recent developments in our agriculture, such as the control of the sale of mealies and of dairy products, are based mostly on the interests of the producer, i.e. the farmer, and the needs of the consumer are not recognised nearly enough. Some people think that the farmer ought not to get any special protection. This appears to be a short sighted view. Under modern conditions it is not wrong to regulate the sale of farm products, and so help to keep the farmer on the land. This is a good, and not a bad thing. What is wrong is the concentration on encouraging the farmer to export, instead of taking responsibility for the sale of what are called the "protective foods", for example eggs, milk, fruit, at prices which are fair both to the farmer and to the buyer in town. This could be done if we would make up our minds to do it, and it needs to be done.

In the country districts, it is possible to get more milk and vegetables, but even there people need a good deal of education with regard to the type of food that they eat. It is particularly important to try to bring the mothers of the community to the point where they give their children at school a good meal before the day's school work is started. In many country districts all over the Union, children are sent off to school with either no breakfast at all or just a little cold porridge. There are many areas where children get their first real meal of the day at about four o'clock. And this not because the parents are starving, but because of failure to adapt themselves to modern conditions, including school hours. Much of the poor work in our schools is due to under-feeding.

Everywhere we have to face grave questions of health, which indeed would merit a whole series of articles to themselves. Only a few points can be mentioned here.

There are things which the people can do for themselves, particularly with regard to the two great scourges of tuberculosis and venereal disease. Quite elementary care, such as spitting into a special covered utensil, would prevent the passing on of tuberculosis to hundreds of people who get it every year at the present time. Stricter morality, and also the use of the clinic that are already available, could reduce our venereal disease figures by several thousands every year. On the other hand, there is much to be done from the Government side. District surgeons vary very much as regards their active interest in the Bantu population of their area. Some are very keenly interested. Others do just the bare minimum which their official duties require. There are very large areas of the Union even today where the Bantu get virtually no medical attention at all. In recent years, the Government has done a good deal to meet these needs, first by beginning to train Medical Aids; secondly, by subsidising nurses; thirdly, by building more hospitals; fourthly, by subsidising clinics; and fifthly, by starting two big experiments in preventive medicine, one in the Natal. All this work only touches the fringe of the problem, and we have to press for more and more facilities.

One last word: Bantu communities can help themselves in one important sphere. If they are prepared to find a small portion of the salary of a nurse, the Public Health Department will pay much the greater part of her salary. Very often the Native Affairs Department will assist with grants for building a dispensary and purchasing medicines. I do not think that there is any Native Commissioner in the Union who would refuse to help the people of his district if they are willing to subscribe, say, £2 a month among themselves to help to maintain a nurse.

QUESTIONS:

JAN 1 8 1941

1. Summarise in two columns the points on which more Government action is needed, and those on which self help is possible with regard to nutrition and health in urban areas.
2. Repeat the question for a rural area.
3. Sketch out what you think a good working programme for combatting tuberculosis among the Bantu.

Five scholarships in medicine and dentistry are to be provided for Africans out of the South African Native Affairs Trust Fund. This has been decided upon by the Department of Native Affairs now that a limited number of non-Europeans will obtain full training in medicine and dentistry at the University of the Witwatersrand. The scholarships are open to both men and women and will be awarded on a competitive basis on the completion of the first year course.

BANTU LANGUAGES

ATTEMPT AT UNIFICATION DEPLORED

JAN 25 1941

Sir,

I have read with ever-growing heat the recent articles on Bantu Languages in "The Bantu World." I cannot see why Southern Suto, Setsoana and Sepedi should be considered unifiable, whereas Xhosa and Zulu aren't. I feel certain that on investigation, it will be found that the differences (and they are the problems of unification) existing amongst the languages of the first group, are much more than those between those of the second. Therefore, why not attempt to merge Xhosa and Zulu also, and thus have two South African Bantu Languages?

Why attempt these unifying processes at all? What good can we ever derive therefrom? What's there in a Bantu language? If it's the unity of Africans at large that we desire, how then is the Gold Coast, Uganda, or Equatorial or even Abyssinian African supposed to benefit through this unification? Remember we in South Africa are not the only Africans. Is there, at present, any Commercial, Literary, Economic, or other real value in our Bantu Languages? It is not true that these languages are (1) a tsumbling block to our scholars and teachers? (2) a heavy burden for he Black man's shoulders, as they form a considerable portion of that foundation upon which tribalism is rooted?

In these circumstances I would suggest that we strike the iron while it is hot and copy—without shame in doing so—the example set us by the American Negro, who determinedly trod on his, and—unshamedly again—made his master's language his own, thereby forging his progress and tolerability by a great stroke, a tremendous bound.

Afrikaans and English are both rich in an inexhaustible literature of great educational value. They are the Official languages (which means very much), and we can add to these to their benefit and ours. If there's any action to be taken, why not direct it usefully in a vigorous campaign against the Education Departments, requesting them to see to it (1) That Bantu Languages be done away with after Sub B; (2) That English and Afrikaans be the medium instruction as from Std. I.

This campaign being successful, the results would then be:-

(1)Sounder education amongst Africans;

(2) Better examination results;

(3) Better relations between White and Black;

(4) A common language for Africans as English is universal and also widespread even in Africa.

BANTU LANGUAGES

ONLY ONE NEEDED

Sir,

JAN 25 1941

In regard to "The Bantu World" leader of one of the recent issues concerning Bantu languages, I will remain opposed to the suggestion for the forming of "three languages" as expressed therein. It would not be intelligable enough to create three formidable language forces to be and only to remain opposed to one another as a vexatious problem in the Bantu families for still an indefinite period. Why not discard the malevolence once and for all!

The Rev. H. Maimane's scars have itched unsatisfactory, for they are the result of the 1921 suggestions of uniting the relative languages only, in which some probabilities for some detrimental "unity" of the Bantu remain suspectable. And even the T.A.T.A. of that time were possibly to have been lock-headed by such a theory. In that I would agree with him in the other way round that we have the defference of Bantu languages just as they are.

All I am interested in are some creating a continental or a south cheating a continent or a south of the Equato Bantu language. In this I would candidly call upon our B.A.'s, M.A.'s and all our philological experts as opportune mediators for a NEW BANTU LANGUAGE, and should this fail or them failing in the bright course, then I would again suggest that we choose one prominent Bantu language, say Zulu, as the already leading language, to be enforced as the inter-Bantu language in the southern hemisphere.

The opposition, however, has been great, and it shall always be there as it has always been. But a unanimous resolution in the form of a plebiscite by education authorities to mediate, may be indecisively, especally for appositions, would be most appreciable. We should not allow the opposition to gain ground. I know the whiteman is very daring if he favours a thing, in that, he crossed the perilous seas to expand his mission of delight and light for the good of the nations, and so he would once more die to force the Bantu Education Department to lead for this suggested and desired end. This fould not be a matter to satisfy or dissatisfy so and so, but would be for the Bantu end.

I would suggest that the education curriculum be drawn on either of the following mediums:

(1) A new Bantu language, specialised industrially and commercially for the Bantu;

(2) A diffusion of the Zulu language, and Zulu only in the southern hemisphere.

The Bantu In South African Life

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

Closely connected with the problem of wages is that of housing. If the wages paid to the father of a family are not enough, he must either live in slum conditions or be supplied with what is called "sub-economic" housing, that is with a house let at a rent which does not bring in a fair return on the cost of the house.

Opinions are divided on the question of whether it is better to pay a higher cash wage and charge an "economic" rent, or to rely on the "sub-economic" rent to help matters out. My own opinion is definitely that it is always better to pay a wage which makes a man independent and enables him to look after his own interests. It will take time however, before this can be done and in the meantime the provision of houses at specially cheap rentals is doing much to ease the position.

There is another important and interesting point about housing. Kindly friends of the poor and theorists about poverty tend to think in terms of housing. The poor themselves tend to think in terms of food. That is why there is sometimes conflict between progressive and well-meaning Municipalities and the Bantu for whom they are trying to make provision. Beautiful houses—at least relatively beautiful, compared with the slums—are provided miles away from the centre of the town, not only adding transport charges, and using up on them money which might have been spent for food, but also raising the actual cost of food itself by moving the housewife away from the market and competitive shopping area. It is a difficult thing to get Municipalities away from the idea that any Bantu Village ought to be miles from the centre of the town, but in the southern part of the United States of America, where racial segregation also prevails, the Negro quarter of the town is often quite near the business centre.

JAN 1 1 1941

Small wages affect housing, even when it is "sub-economic" and always in the same way, by encouraging overcrowding. Firstly, the houses, even when of a satisfactory and pleasing type, are in the nature of the case small, too small for a large growing family. Secondly, in the endeavour to make ends meet, families sometimes take lodgers in their already overcrowded homes. Local authorities try to stop this by imposing a special Lodger's Fee, and in some areas have aroused great and thoroughly justifiable resentment by classifying as lodgers grown-up sons of the family.

The value of good housing is threefold. Firstly, it is of immense importance to health, as many diseases—and most strikingly tuberculosis—are actively spread by overcrowding. Secondly, it makes a great difference to the culture and self-respect of the family. Thirdly, especially if the houses have sufficient number of separate rooms, it assists in maintaining the standards of morality.

Although housing is very much bound up with the wage question, it must also be considered on its own merits. Even within the present limits of finance available, it is possible to provide either a poor or a relatively good housing scheme. Some towns, for example Pretoria in its new garden village of Atteridgeville, have shewn what can be done by town-planning and the use of constructive imagination. Points that call for study by the Municipalities and their expert advisers are (1) the materials used, that these may give the best value for money possible; (2) the arrangement of the house, a matter on which educated Bantu women should be taken into counsel; (3) the general appearance of the house and village, so that the appearance of rows of barracks may be avoided, since it costs little more to plan a pretty house than an ugly one; (4) the best way of utilising what skilled Bantu labour may be avaailable, possibly by loans to enable plot-holders to build for themselves; (5) the artistic planning of the village as a whole with due provision from the beginning for Schools, Churches, shops, Community Halls, and if possible a Dairy.

Some thinkers advocate the building of blocks of flats, with communal play-grounds, wash-house etc.' as being the best way of giving really good housing within the limits of the available funds. Recently the University of the Witwatersrand issued an interestingly illustrated study of this project, a study on which five post-graduate students had worked hard together. It is worth reading.

Improved Municipal housing is very evident these days, and while one must deplore the many defficiences still existing, one must be sincerely grateful for what has been done. This subject of housing is one which is peculiarly fitting for the co-operation of Bantu and Europeans in the towns through Joint Councils and otherwise.

Much might be written about housing in the Reserves and on Farms, but the spear-head of the housing question is at present the urban areas.

QUESTIONS

1. On a rough plan of your town, mark out any areas, within three miles of the centre of the town, which might be made available for Bantu homes.

2. Should rent be calculated on the actual cost of Municipal houses, or on what the cost would have been if they had been built by Bantu labour?

3. Would you favour the experiment of "Workers' Flats" as an attempt to solve Bantu housing problems or hot?

MAR 22 1941

XI Commerce And Marking

By Senator Edgar H. Brookes.

MAR 22 1941

One of the most acute problems in the life of the Reserves is that of the marketing of products of the soil. By this I do not mean the building up of markets in the narrower sense, such as the holding of a market once a week at a Magistracy or some other suitable point to sell vegetables, etc. This is a valuable and helpful development in the life of the Reserves. When we speak of the marketing problem, however, we are thinking of something rather bigger. How are Bantu farmers to dispose of their surplus products? The problem has been partially solved in the case of a product such as sugar, which can be sent to the nearest mill, although even sugar farming has its difficulties. But where a solution is most needed is with regard to the staple crop of the greater part of the country—mealies. At present, for all practical purposes, the only "market" which the Bantu farmer has for his mealies, i.e. the only place whe he can definitely sell them, is the nearest trading station. What happens in most cases is that mealies are sold at a relatively low price, and later on mealies are repurchased at a relatively high price from the same trader. This aspect of Bantu life has not received the attention which it ought to receive. The only change in recent years, the introduction of the mealie levy, has been very much a change for the worse, increasing the cost of mealies and mealie meal, especially in the towns, and placing all sorts of hampering restrictions on the selling and buying of mealies.

TWO ASPECTS.

MAR 22 1941

This matter of selling and repurchasing mealies has two aspects. First of all there is the question of storage. Undoubtedly the Government ought to do much more, either to provide storage centres, vermin proof and moisture-proof, at suitable spots in the Reserves, or it should assist the people themselves to buy storage tanks. There is a second aspect. Trading in the Reserves ought to be far more controlled than it is. There should at any rate be some control of the price which traders are allowed to offer for mealies and the price at which they resell them. To have a trading station in a Reserve is a privilege, sometimes a very paying privilege, and it is a privilege which should be held subject to the trader making a positive contribution to the life of the Reserve, and not merely a profit out if. Traders differ among themselves as much as do farmers. There are traders whose whole attitude is what it should be. There are others who are trying to make as much profit as they can, and are not too careful as to methods. It must be added that in many areas large numbers of the people have got themselves into debt, and if the trader is their only marketing agent, they find themselves unable to drive a good bargain with him for this reason.

MAR 22 1941

FOR GOVERNMENT TO DO:

What is the future of commerce in the Reserves? A complaint which comes increasingly from the Bantu is the difficulty of getting licences to trade in the Reserves, and, once they have obtained them, the difficulty of trading successfully. We must frankly face the position that some of the latter difficulty arises from lack of training and experience, and, above all, from carelessness in handling money. None the less, we cannot possibly accept a situation by which the greater part of the trading in Native Reserves will remain indefinitely in the hands of Europeans and Indians. With due respect for vested interests, the Government ought to have an active policy for developing Bantu commerce in these areas. This it could do in three ways.

THIS WAY..

MAR 22 1941

The first way would be by giving every encouragement to individual Bantu traders, assisting them to get licences and helping them in every possible way.

A second method would be to assist the people to build up co-operative stores which would aim primarily at service, and only sesondarily at profits, and the profits of which would be distributed among Bantu shareholders.

A third way out which seems revolutionary, but which is well worth trying, is for the Government itself to open up stores, putting in suitable managers and training Bantu for managership. If this were proved to be impossible with regard to ordinary trading, at least Government might well consider setting up its own marketing centres for the purchase and selling of mealies and other products.

MAR 22 1941

QUESTIONS :

1. Of the three methods suggested immediately above, which do you think best, and why?
2. What is your opinion as to the best way of assisting the people to store mealies?
3. In what way could our Schools and College help most in preparing Bantu young men for success in commercial life?

The Bantu In South African Life

X--Problems Of The Reserves

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

MAR 15 1941

We have already seen that, in pursuance of the policy of "segregation," a considerable proportion of the soil of South Africa is specially allocated to the Bantu. While some of this area consists of farms under private ownership, the greater part of it may be described briefly under the heading "Reserves." In Natal this term sometimes has an alternative meaning as suggesting the Mission Reserves in contradistinction to tribal rural locations, but we shall in this study use the term in its widest possible application.

NATIVE COMMISSIONERS

There are administrative and political, as well as economic and social questions to be considered when we think about Reserves. Life in the Reserves is not lived under the ordinary conditions of democracy. Much power has been given to the Native Affairs Department, which, in controlling the Reserves, is as it were "a state within a state." The power of the Native Affairs Department is exercised principally through the local Native Commissioner. Higher officials are in actual fact very reluctant to reverse decisions of the local Native commissioner, or to acknowledge that he has made a mistake. A great deal therefore depends on the personality of the Native Commissioner. If he is harsh and arbitrary, the people of his area suffer many serious inconveniences and have little practical remedy. If he discourages local initiative, it is extremely difficult for Bantu societies or associations to do effective work. If, on the other hand, he is human and progressive, he has the opportunity, with comparatively little restriction, of doing great good.

POSITION UNSATISFACTORY

It is important that this state of affairs should be realised. The position in many areas is not satisfactory. Various remedies suggest themselves. One is calling a halt to the growing tendency to give a more and more restricted power and discretion to the Native Affairs Department and its local officials, and the gradual substitution of clear and definite rules, where possible, for the indefinite powers so often given to the Administration under existing conditions. Another is careful choice and training of Native Commissioners, so that all may learn, as many of the best have learned, to work not merely for the people, but with the people.

MAR 15 1941

A third way out is the widespread introduction of the Council system, which, though not a complete check on undesirable tendencies, does give some chance for the community to expresss itself politically, and affords some machinery for continuous co-operation. The Council system will be dealt with at greater length in a succeeding article.

CONTRADICTORY POLICIES

Turning to the economic side of the Reserves, the first thing that we have to notice is the absence from most of them of a very large proportion of the able-bodied men. Here we must note that the Government is trying to follow two contradictory policies. The first is to try to develop the Reserves so that they will be able to provide more adequately for themselves, and in so doing to restrict the number of Bantu workers coming into the towns in search of employment (this is the policy recommending by the Native Economic Commission in 1932). The other is to supply a continual stream of labour for the farms and the mines. It is clear that neither of these policies can be pushed very far without coming into conflict with the other. From the Bantu point of view, while we should very much regret restrictions on freedom in search for employment outside the Reserves, we ought wholeheartedly to support that side of the Government's policy which aims at making the Reserves produce more. It is not natural, indeed it is not right, that the fathers of families should be separated from their wives and children for long periods every year, and sometimes for many years. Nor can we expect that the agricultural development of the Reserves will proceed at a rapid rate if all cultivation is to be left to women, to old men and to children. That there should be some shortage of labour outside the Reserves seems to be almost the only hope of an increase of farm wages.

WELCOME TENDENCY

MAR 15 1941

We should, therefore, wholeheartedly welcome the marked tendency during recent years for the Native Affairs Department to occupy itself with economic questions and the development of agriculture in our Reserves. The Native Affairs Department is ceasing to be regarded as a purely judicial and tax collecting body, and is making itself felt, especially in areas where the Native Commissioner has captured the sympathy of the people, as a progressive body concerned with the community's whole life. Real efforts are being made to teach the people the best kinds of crops to grow, and how to grow them so as to produce the best results. Agricultural shows are being fostered and markets encouraged. Soil erosion is being fought, and efforts are being made to check the admitted evils of deforestation and overstocking.

CONSULT PEOPLE

In many of these efforts the people could be more co-operative than they are. Intense conservatism hampers the really well meant efforts of the Agricultural Section of the Native Affairs Department to improve conditions, and to save the soil of the Reserves before it is exhausted. On the other hand, the Government itself has much to learn with regard to consulting the people and their leaders, and being willing to consider alternative plans. Too often, well-meant schemes are ruined by some local piece of tactlessness which could quite easily be avoided. Very often there are more methods than one which could be used. The Government quite rightly wishes to deal with the problem of overstocking. But if its particular scheme for achieving this object is rejected, it is apt to think of the Bantu as being merely stupid and conservative, instead of patiently working out with them whether there are alternative schemes which would work in the same direction with the support of the people.

The tendency for more Native professional men and business men to settle in the Reserves is growing, and this should help in what may be called the urbanisation of the Reserves, i. e., the creation of villages which are definitely Bantu villages, where men derive there income from some other source than farming and provide a market for the crops of the families in the neighbourhood. The urbanisation which should be actively encouraged.

BANTU VILLAGES

Most of the Reserves are very much neglected as regards health, although thanks to the active support of the Government, clinics are being opened up and rural district nurses appointed in some areas. District surgeons differ from each other even more widely than do Native Commissioners, and I have not hesitation in saying that the interest of certain district surgeons in the health of the Reserves, and their influence upon it, are almost non-existent. The Bantu in remote country districts suffer in two ways. They find it difficult to get a doctor when they are ill, and there is no one who is at work trying to alter conditions so as to prevent illness. The Public Health Department, in opening two preventive clinics, has made a good beginning, which should be followed up.

In the Reserves, finally, the Government has an opportunity of doing a great work of reclamation, of building up both soil and people with a minimum of Parliamentary criticism. Serious and sincere efforts are being made in this direction. Our plea to the Government is to continue and extend these efforts in a spirit of greater co-operation with the people, and to the people themselves and their leaders our plea is to accept the sincerety of the Government's intentions, and to encourage co-operation by themselves working harmoniously with the authorities wherever possible.

By Senator Edgar H. Brookes.

JAN 25 1941

9. -- LAND

If you talk to any European on what he calls "The Native question," the chances are three to one that he will tell you he is in favour of "Segregation." What segregation means is not easy to define. To some people, it is simply a polite term for domination. For others, it represents a genuine philosophy of the colour bar, applied as rigidly as possible. Strictly speaking, however, it should be used, and has most frequently been used by serious writers, to describe a land policy. We understand by segregation, in land matters that the races are not given the right to buy freely, but that certain areas are earmarked for the Bantu, and others for Europeans, with the object of preventing undue racial conflict and friction.

There are two tempting roads down which our feet might stray if we let them. The one is the road of history, when we might describe the evolution of this policy, with the Land Act of 1913 as its main historical landmark. The other road is to argue the pros and cons of this segregation regarding land, about which we may simply say here that while to many of us it seems unjust, and also unwise, to impose a rigid segregation preventing people from buying land where both sides are satisfied with the transaction, yet we must confess that it would be difficult for the less developed tribal sections of the Bantu to retain their land unless their exclusive right to it were protected by law. Turning resolutely from these two paths, however, we shall follow the straight and narrow way of simply describing the land situation as it is.

Land in South Africa may be divided, for our purposes, into four main categories, namely [i] scheduled Native Areas; [ii] released areas; (iii) Native-owned land outside scheduled and released areas; [iv] purely European areas. The fourth is of course, much the largest of the groups.

1. SCHEDULED NATIVE AREAS:

These areas are those which were in Native possession in 1913, and listed as such in the Schedule to the Natives Land Act of that year. They mostly consist of tribal Locations and Reserves, but they include also the Mission Reserves in Natal, and a number of privately owned Bantu farms and settlement which are not actually tribal reserves, but which are protected on the same lines as tribal reserves.

2. RELEASED AREAS:

These areas, comprising altogether some 28,000 square miles, were recognised and defined by the Natives Land Amendment Act of 1936. In these areas, Bantu and Europeans may both acquire rights to land. An African wishing to buy land in such an area, and being able to put down the money for it, does not require any special permission of the Government for the transaction. The South African Native Trust, which is the Government acting under a different name and in a special capacity, has been buying land in and adjoining these areas, and has up to the time of writing spent nearly five million pounds in doing so. Note that the Trust may but land adjoining released areas, buy individual Africans need special permission to do this. It is only within released areas that he can buy without permission.

JAN 25 1941

Progressive Bantu farmers would very much like to have better facilities for acquiring individual title to land. They would like the Trust to follow one or both of two courses. The first course is that the Trust having bought land, should break it up and sell it in individual plots. The other is that the Government should assist the Bantu purchasers of land by loans in the same way that the Land Bank assists Europeans. Provision is made for this under the law, but it has only done in a small number of cases. None the less, individual Africans who have some money, and find themselves in a position where they could buy land if they had more money, should try applying for a loan of this kind. Applications are made through the local Native Commissioner, and there is an increasing tendency to treat them sympathetically if the applicant is a man of any substance, or known as a progressive farmer. The areas purchased are being used at present as a supplement to tribal Reserves under progressive agricultural management, subject to the payment of an annual rent and the acceptance of certain restrictions, for example on the number of stock owned. These restrictions, though necessary, are not popular with the Bantu.

3. Native-owned land outside scheduled and released areas:

There are still a good many Native-owned farms and settlements outside the released areas. In some cases these are entirely surrounded by a European area, and are sometimes referred to as "black islands". An Act of 1939 gives the Government power to compel people to remove from these "black islands" in which case they would be given the choice between adequate monetary compensation and the offer in exchange of land of equal value. So far this Act has remained a dead letter, and the probability is that it will be used very sparingly. The Government has the right to expropriate "white islands" in Bantu areas, but the situation is not quite as fair as it sounds, because few governments would do this while it would not be so difficult for a Government to expropriate "black islands."

The cry of the Bantu for more land continues to be an instant one. The day must surely come when individual Bantu will have to be given the right to purchase outside the released areas. In the meantime, the Government on its side should do more to help the Bantu to acquire land inside released areas, while on the Bantu side much has to be done to learn the right use of land, so as to make one morgen produce, under modern methods, as much as four morgen produce under the old, antiquated methods, which are still used in so many areas. But this question of the agricultural development and proper use of the land must remain to be considered in our next article

QUESTIONS:

1. Would you favour "a" a tribe "b" individuals in a tribe having the right to sell or mortgage tribal land? If not, why not?

2. The Government prohibits syndicates of more than six Natives from acquiring land without its special permission. What do you think are the reasons for this restriction? Do you favour it?

The Bantu In South African Life

X--Problems Of The Reserves

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

FEB 1 1941

We have already seen that, in pursuance of the policy of "segregation," a considerable proportion of the soil of South Africa is specially allocated to the Bantu. While some of this area consists of farms under private ownership, the greater part of it may be described briefly under the heading "Reserves." In Natal this term sometimes has an alternative meaning as suggesting the Mission Reserves in contradistinction to tribal rural locations, but we shall in this study use the term in its widest possible application.

There are administrative and political, as well as economic and social questions to be considered when we think about Reserves. Life in the Reserves is not lived under the ordinary conditions of democracy. Much power has been given to the Native Affairs Department, which, in controlling the Reserves, is as it were a state within a state." The power of the Native Affairs Department is exercised principally through the local Native Commissioner. Higher officials are in actual fact very reluctant to reverse decisions of the local Native Commissioner, or to acknowledge that he has made a mistake. A great deal therefore depends on the personality of the Native Commissioner. If he is harsh and arbitrary, the people of his area suffer many serious inconveniences and have little practical remedy. If he discourages local initiative, it is extremely difficult for Bantu societies or associations to do effective work. If, on the other hand, he is human and progressive, he has the opportunity with comparatively little restriction, of doing great good.

It is important that this state of affairs should be realised. The position in many areas is not satisfactory. Various remedies suggest themselves. One is calling a halt to the growing tendency to give a more and more restricted power and discretion to the Native Affairs Department and its local officials, and the gradual substitution of clear and definite rules, where possible, for the indefinite powers so often given to the Administration under existing conditions. Another is careful choice and training of Native Commissioners, so that all may learn, as many of the best have learned, to work not merely for the people, but wth the people.

A third way out is the widespread introduction of the Council system, which, though not a complete check on undesirable tendencies, does give some chance for the community to express itself politically, and affords some machinery for continuous co-operation. The Council system will be dealt with at greater length in a succeeding article.

Turning to the economic side of the Reserves, the first thing that we have to notice is the absence from most of them of a very large proportion of the able-bodied men. Here we must note that the Government is trying to follow two contradictory policies. The first is to try to develop the Reserves so that they will be able to provide more adequately for themselves, and in so doing to restrict the number of Bantu workers coming into the towns in search of employment (this is the policy recommended by the Native Economic Commission in 1932). The other is to supply a continual stream of labour for the farms and the mines. It is clear that neither of these policies can be pushed very far without coming into conflict with the other. From the Bantu point of view, while we should very much regret restrictions on freedom in search for employment outside the Reserves, we ought wholeheartedly to support that side of the Government's policy which aims at making the Reserves produce more. It is not natural, indeed it is not right, that the fathers of families should be separated from their wives and children for long periods every year, and sometimes for many years. Nor can we expect that the agricultural development of the Reserves will proceed at a rapid rate if all cultivation is to be left to women, to old men and to children. That there should be some shortage of labour outside the Reserves seems to be almost the only hope of an increase of farm wages.

We should, therefore, wholeheartedly welcome the marked tendency during recent years for the Native Affairs Department to occupy itself with economic questions and the development of agriculture in our Reserves. The Native Affairs Department is ceasing to be regarded as a purely judicial and tax-collecting body, and is making itself felt, especially in areas where the Native Commissioner has captured the sympathy of the people, as a progressive body concerned with the community's whole life. Real efforts are being made to teach the people the best kinds of crops to grow, and how to grow them so as to produce the best results. Agricultural shows are being fostered and markets encouraged. Soil erosion is being fought, and efforts are being made to check the admitted evils of deforestation and overstocking.

In many of these efforts the people could be more co-operative than they are. Intense conservatism hampers the really well-meant efforts of the Agricultural Section of the Native Affairs Department to improve conditions, and to save the soil of the Reserves before it is exhausted. On the other hand, the Government itself has much to learn with regard to consulting the people and their leaders, and being willing to consider alternative plans. Too often well-meant schemes are ruined by some local piece of tactlessness which could quite easily be avoided. Very often there are more methods than one which could be used. The Government quite rightly wishes to deal with the problem of overstocking. But if its particular scheme for achieving this object is rejected, it is apt to think of the Bantu as being merely stupid and conservative, instead of patiently working out with them whether there are alternative schemes which would work in the same direction with the support of the people.

The tendency for more Native professional men and business men to settle in the Reserves is growing, and this should help in what may be called the urbanisation of the Reserves, i.e. the creation of villages which are definitely Bantu villages, where men derive their income from some other source than farming, and provide a market for the crops of the families in the neighbourhood The urbanisation of the Reserves is something which should be actively encouraged.

Most of the Reserves are very much neglected as regards health, although thanks to the active support of the Government, clinics are being opened up and rural district nurses appointed in some areas. District surgeons differ from each other even more widely than do Native Commissioners, and I have no hesitation in saying that the interest of certain district surgeons in the health of the Reserves, and their influence upon it, are almost non-existent. The Bantu in remote country districts suffer in two ways. They find it difficult to get a doctor when they are ill, and there is no one who is at work trying to alter conditions so as to prevent illness. The Public Health Department, in opening two preventive clinics, has made a good beginning, which should be followed up.

In the Reserves, finally, the Government has an opportunity of doing a great work of reclamation, of building up both soil and people with a minimum of Parliamentary criticism. Serious and sincere efforts are being made in this direction. Our plea to the Government is to continue and extend these efforts in a spirit of greater co-operation with the people, and to the people themselves and their leaders our plea is to accept the sincerity of the Government's intentions, and to encourage co-operation by themselves working harmoniously with the authorities wherever possible.

He could easily have asked for one language but that would not be as practical as the dual system he advocates. In India, where there are hundreds of languages, only one was chosen to be the main language. The sanity of this is beyond question.

It would be a blessing to the African people if all the Nguni tribes would choose for themselves which language to adopt as the standard. Whether it be Zulu, Xhosa, or Swazi is immaterial to me. BOSTON, Sept. 5.—Dr. James E. McCord, Congregational medical missionary, has returned to the United States after 41 years of putting South African witch doctors and medicine men out of business.

For many years he made little progress among the Zulu natives because of their superstitions. But when he retired in the Fall of 1940 at Durban, South Africa, the people had named after him streets, babies, medicines and a $50,000 hospital.

Dr. McCord established the first hospital for Negroes in the area and was the first to train native nurses and medical aides. A native of Illinois, he will reside with his wife at Oakham, Mass.

THE HUMAN FACTOR

It has been well said that all reforms ultimately deal with both systems and people. While we have not forgotten the individual, we have been devoting our attention in most of the previous articles to systems. To get a balanced view of the situation we must come down to the human factor. We realise more and more nowadays that the best of systems cannot be a success if administered by selfish and undisciplined people, and that even in the worst of systems something can be done by good men. This truth must not be twisted to become an argument against trying to improve bad systems. But it must arouse in us a realisation of the iportance of people and the need of radically changing the attitude of people towards life, not forgetting our own. To take a very simple example. Honesty in the handling of money is fundamental to the success of many efforts to improve Bantu life. You cannot separate finance from life—it is a part of life. The great prevalence of carelessness and embezzlement of Trust funds in South Africa extends to Bantu enterprises and Bantu Societies. In how many cases have the African public lost heart because of the disappearance of the money which they have contributed to some great Society which was to have changed the world, but which, infact, has chiefly enriched its Office—bearers. Such mishandling of Trust funds has not always been deliberate dishonestly. It has often been mere gross carelessness. But the result in retarding progress of good causes and destroying public confidence has been very much the same. The comparative failure of co-operative societies is due to this cause. It is not by any means a purely Bantu characteristic. The history of co-operative societies among Europeans is full of instances of embezzlement.

JUL 5 1941

In the same way the quarrelsomeness which disfigures much of our life is something which no system can remove and which has to be dealt with in people individually—"My brethren, be not many masters" says one of the writers in the New Testament, and the trouble in much of South African life is that we all want to be leaders at the same time. The governing classes may possibly be able to afford the luxury of quarrelsomeness, but a subject race struggling to improve its conditions cannot afford such luxuries.

JUL 5 1941

Even more intimately personal and yet even more vital to the progress of the race are those issues of health and of health and of home life which are affected by impurity, drunkenness and other forms of self-indulgence. Lust and drink, with the natural results of disease, have done far more to harm the Bantu than the most oppressive of laws passed by the most oppressive Governments can do. The remedy for so many of the ills of our society lies in our own hands and to be silent on this topic would make one a very imperfect prophet and misleading expounder of our situation.

When one thinks of much of the hypocricy and inconsistency in our South African Christianity one is not surprised to find revolts against religion. None the less, nothing but a true and living religion lived out in daily life can help us to overcome these individual failures which spell national failure under any system. We dare not end a study of the Bantu in South African life without stressing this factor as from a purely realistic point of view the most important of all.

There is quite anoher side to this matter of human contacts wnich we should remember. So many would—be reformers are apt to think in terms of public meetings and resolutions. But reform must, in a great measure, be brought about by influencing individuals and changing their point of view, thus contact between individuals may be of the very highest value for our cause. Wherever true friendships can be formed across the colour line however humble the individuals concerned, something has been done to remedy our situation. A good deal of our thinking should therefore be devoted to seeing the possibilities of the contacts which we have and endeavouring to make more contacts between individuals possible.

The Bantu In South African Life—Article 23

South Africa And The Wider World

JUL 12 1941

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In all our articles so far we have been considering the Union only. But, it is important to realise that what we do in the field of race relations affects and is affected by a much wider area.

To take a very simple and obvious illustration, our policy, whether good or bad, is bound to have repercussions on the three Protectorates—Bechuanaland, Swaziland and Basutoland. The major factor in determining the attitude of the people of these Protectorates towards incorporation in the Union must inevitably be the way in which the Union legislates for its own Native population Similarly we in the Union are bound to be influenced, at any rate to some extent, by the policies of the Protectorates. If, for example, Basutoland should initiate a progressive programme of internal development offering high wages to thousands of men engaged within the Protectorate farm labour in the Free State is bound to feel the effect and farm wages are bound to rise.

JUL 12 1941

With Southern Rhodesia and the British Colonies and Territories to the north of it we also have an association which we cannot escape even if we should like to do so. There are South African thinkers who envisage the Union as the senior partner in a United States of South-Eastern Africa. We need not go as far as that in our thinking, but our place in Africa, especially in South-Eastern Africa, imposes on us great responsibilities. When we hear people speaking about a Monroe Doctrine for South-Eastern Africa, or in other ways suggesting that the Union should be the dominant power in Africa south of the equator, we must realise that that policy will be either a blessing or a curse to the millions of Africans involved in it insofar as we do, or do not, give the right lead in our legislation and our policies

In the minds of thinking Bantu there is still wider area of which we form a part, the area of the black races the world over including the Negroes of the United States and of the West Indies Some would go further and in their thinking link up the Bantu of the Union with under-privileged racial groups throughout the world. Sound statesmanship would help the Bantu to feel more strongly the bonds of unity with white South Africans and would try to prevent the tendency of the Bantu to consider themselves merely as part of a huge under-privileged group. Because so much thinking among white people in South Africa is superficial, it is difficult to get this thought across and yet reasonable men on both sides of the Colour line must learn to face this issue, and, if possible, to face it together.

Some of us at any rate remember, that as Christians we belong to another world-wide fellowship, which cuts across national and racial barriers. Those who have ever had the privilege of attending a world—wide Conference of Christian bodies such, for example, as the recent Conference called by the National Missionary Council at Tambaran, near Madras, have experienced at first-hand what it is difficult to put on paper—the thrill of the realisation of the unity of Christendom across barriers of denomination, language, race and colour. This is all too exceptional an experience. The fact of our unity remains none the less. Let me again take one simple illustration. When the Anglican Church, for instance, is asked to conform to the behaviour patterns of South Africans on race and colour questions, its world—wide character and the fact that its Bishops in this counry must, as it were, give an account of themselves to the Bishops of the same Church in areas where there is not the same colour bar, makes it impossible for them to decide the question purely on local lines. The same applies naturally to other important religious bodies. Indeed it may be said that the only Church of any size in South Africa which is not compelled by its Constitution to keep this fact in mind, is the Dutch Reformed Church. South African Methodism cannot ignore the feelings and attitude of British Methodism. The Presbyterian Church of S.A. cannot forget its connection with the Church of Scotland. The ultimate policies of the Roman Catholic Church are made, not in Pretoria, but at the Vatican City.

And finally, there is the greatest of all unities, the unity of humanity as a whole. Every scientist, every worker for public health, for improved agriculture, or for technical progress in industry inevitably feels himself so far as his work is concerned part of this wider unity. We must all accustom ourselves to think in this way. The isolationism which some covet for South Africa is simply impossible in the modern world. When we come to reconstruct human society after the war we shall find ourselves inevitably thinking more in general human terms and less in purely national terms. This is bound to have its effect in all matters which affect race relations.

The Bantu In South African Life

Conclusion:

(BY SENATOR EDGAR H. BROOKES)

As we come to the end of this series of articles, the question which each of us should be asking himself or herself is—"How can I help?" There is, as we have seen, an immense field to cover. There is, in the words of Cecil Rhodes, "So little done, so much to do." How can we help?

We can help first of all by knowing our facts. The ignorance with which a few of us have to contend in this regard is colossal. Many Europeans, for example, are almost totally ignorant of the progressive and educated Bantu, and their knowledge of the tribal Bantu is more picturesque than accurate. But there is also very great ignorance among the Bantu themselves. There are a good many of whom it can be said that they only know they are "oppressed" and under this head can give certain instances of discourtesy or injustice, but when it comes to giving facts as a whole they are helpless. Eloquence is a great gift, but it is not enough. For those who aspire in any way to serve their people among the Bantu should accustom themselves to know their facts accurately on a nation-wide scale. When they quote actual facts they are unassailable, particularly if they are careful to quote the facts relating to the good actions of the Government as well as its sins of omission and commission. It is extremely difficult to combat facts presented in such a way. If we want to help we must not only have facts at our disposal, we must also have warm human sympathies. If this is true of Europeans working among or for the Bantu, it is also true of the educated Bantu in relation to the masses whether in town or country whom they are trying to help. If the masses are simply despised as ignorant and superstitious, nothing can be done with them and very little for them.

OUR OWN HOUSE

We can help in the third place by putting our own house in order. There are tremendous fields of Bantu life where self-help is called for. To a very large extent the spread of tuberculosis and particularly venereal diseases is in the hands of the people themselves. Self-help, temperate living, morality, scrupulous observation of the rules of hygiene could do more to stamp out these terrible dangers than either a Government Health programme, or even a wholesale raising of wages.

But this is not enough. There must also be organisation for civic and national purposes. The Bantu need political leadership, and somehow we have to find a way by which the young and capable Bantu men, who are to be found to-day, can be given their chance to assume this leadership, which should not be confined to the other men, nor rely solely on friendly Europeans. Successful political leadership will depend among other things on the ability to keep united, and on being scrupulously careful in the control of the public funds subscribed for this purpose. As has been said in a previous article, an under-privileged group struggling to improve its position cannot afford the luxury of quarrels about leadership. Unity is an urgent necessity.

CO-OPERATION

Fifthly and lastly, we need to forge an ever-increasing co-operation between the Bantu and those European groups which are willing and able to help. The Joint Council movement has tried to provide the machinery of co operation. In the field of research and the collecting of facts, the S. A. Institute of Race Relations is doing similar work. Anyone who wants to keep in touch with the facts would find it well worth while to subscribe the £1: 1s. a year required for membership and send it to the Secretary, P. O. Box 97, Johannesburg. The Institute supplies information continually on every espect of Bantu life, and subscribers would find their money well spent.

THINGS TO PRESS FOR

I do not think that it woald serve a very good purpose to encourage academic discussions on the subject of what South Africa will be like in 500 years' time, or what the ultimate goal of our policy should be. The most fruitful thing to do is what we have tried to do in this series of articles; to survey the facts as they are and to see what steps forward or to be taken in the next five or ten years. The result of our inquiry on these lines has been to show us that we must press to the utmost of our power for Wage Determinations in every industry and area where they are applicable in order that the general standard of living of the Bantu may rise. We must press for the proper organisation of our Bantu Trade Unions. We must work for the bringing up of Municipal Housing schemes to the standard of the best achieved so far. We must work for the utilisation of the doctors and medical aids that are now being trained in a national scheme for preventive and remedial medicine. We must use the machinery now available to us for improving nutrition. We must work both for the carrying out of the Government's promise about the provision of more land. and for educating our public so that the land that they have is better used. We must try to find a fuller place for the Bantu in commercial life, and challenge the ridiculous position by which the African finds it hard to get a lisecence to trade among his own people. We must work for a better system for Native education, for the continual improvement of our schoools, and for the opening up of new careers for our young men and women. In a more purely political sphere we must endeavour to get the number of centres increased to strenghten the powers of the Native Representative Council to secure some sort of representation on Provincial and Municipal Councils, and to move steadily towards the day when a Union—wide franchise for the Assembly may be possible. These are some of the outstanding points which might form our Parliamentary programme for the immediate future. When we have succeeded in attaining these things it will be time enough to argue about more remote possibilities.

The Bantu In South Africnn Life
XV: Taxation
(By Senator Edgar H. Brookes)

APR 12 1941

There must be very few people who do not know what are the special taxes imposed on the Bantu. For the sake of completeness, however, it may be as well to summarise them.

All men of Bantu race over the age of eighteen, unless specially exempted as students or for other reasons, must pay a poll tax of £1 per annum. Those residing in Reserves or rural locations must, in addition, pay a local hut tax of ten shillings per hut per annum, with a maximum of £2. Where quitrent is payable, the tax is abated by the amount of the quitrent paid. Thus, a monogamist paying ten shillings quitrent will pay no local tax. A man with two wives paying ten shillings quitrent will pay ten shillings local tax. A man with two wices paying £1 quitrent will pay no local tax. The local tax is supposed to be earmarked for expenditure in the area where it is raised. Where there is a Council system, it is spent by the Council. Of the poll tax or general tax, two-thirds is paid into the Native Development Account, and the remaining one-third into general revenue. Grants of money from general revenue exceeding the remaining one-third are, however, made to this same fund.

It must be realised that just as expenditure takes place for the benefit of the Bantu, e.g. on public health, apart from the Development Fund, so much taxation is paid by the Bantu apart from the special Native taxes. The fact that a man is of Bantu race exempts him only from certain Provincial taxes. All other taxes apply equally to him, in spite of his having a special tax of his own. Though the number of Bantu whose income is big enough to be subject to income tax is very small, yet any who have such an income must pay income tax, and the poll tax as well.

Probably the most important tax that the Bantu pay is one of which the majority are almost completely ignorant, namely customs and excise duties. Customs duties, it may be explained, are taxes on goods imported into the country, while excise duties are taxes levied upon goods manufactured inside the country. Customs duties are leviable on almost everything: excise duties, on the other hand, are mainly levied on a small number of "luxury articles" such as wines, spirits, beer, tobacco, cigarettes and sugar. These taxes form what is known by economists as "indirect taxation". By indirect taxation they mean that the charge is not really borne by the person who first pays it, but is passed on to others. If you are a smoker, you will notice that your packets of cigarettes have special stamps affixed to them to cover the excise duties. These stamps are bought by the cigarette manufacturers, but the cost is passed on to the merchants, and by them to the individual smoker. Remember that every puff of smoke means a small fraction of a penny going into the Government's revenue.

Take one more illustration. A man buys a suit from an Indian tailor. The tailor arrives at the price by calculating the cost of the cloth as he bought it from the wholesale merchant, plus his labour and profit. The basic figure is the cost of the cloth, but this figure includes the customs duties which the wholesale merchant or his agent at the port has paid. It is probable that at least £2,000,000 is paid by the Bantu population of the Union in taxes in this painless way. If the Government raises the customs duty, the ordinary man has no grievance against the Government: he simply blames the merchant for profiteering.

But though the burden of customs and excise duties in actual figures is much heavier than that of the poll tax, it is not felt nearly so much. There is no resentment about it. This helps us to remember that the method of collection of a tax often matters at least as much as the nature and amount of the tax. For many years the poll tax has been very unpopular, not so much because of the amount, although that is very heavy for certain types of worker, but also because of police raids, and imprisonment. Nowadays the Government is doing its best to reduce police raids, and try every other method of collecting the tax before sending the defaulter to gaol. The number of people going to gaol each year has fallen from about 30,000 in the latter part of 1939 to 7,000 in the latter part of 1940.

There are those who argue that the Bantu should not pay any special tax at all. They say that it is contrary ho sound policy for the poorest section of the population to pay taxes. Others argue that a community which pays no direct taxation suffers a loss of prestige, and is deprived of any chance of exercising political influence. It has been the writer's experience to find tribal Bantu earnestly opposing the abolition of of the poll tax on these grounds. Perhaps wiser methods of collection, and an adequate and flexible system of exemption for those who really cannot afford to pay, may make the tax a bearable one. Until the theory has been discarded which says: that special services to the Bantu must be met out of special taxes paid by the Bantu, it would be a mistake to abolish the tax, which finances the greater part of our education and our agricultural services.

It is, of course, the theory that is wrong. No class of the community should find expenditure on it limited by the amount of taxes which it pays. It must be considered whether the interest of the State calls for expenditure, and, if so, the expenditure must be made, irrespective of whether revenue is coming in or not. We do this, for example, with regard to our farming community and to the Poor White group. Nobody suggests that the expenditure on them should be limited by the amount of direct taxes which they pay. When this doctrine of "fiscal segregation" is applied to the Bantu, it is a particularly flagrant example of the abuse of the idea of segregation.

QUESTIONS

1. It has been claimed that the poll tax is unfair, in that people with different incomes pay the same tax. Can you suggest any practicable alternative?

2. Is it a sound principle that polygamists should pay a higher local tax than monogamists?

3. Can you think of any other forms of indirect taxation which affect the Bantu, other than customs and excise?

4. Can you think of any general expenditure, i.e. expenditure apart from the Development and and Trust Funds, by which the Bantu benefit?

Bantu Health In Urban Areas

MAR 14 1941

A most startling report has been published on the condition of the health of members of the Bantu race who have left their rural surroundings to spend most of their time in urban areas. This is contained in a report recently made by Dr. G. D. H. Wallace, the Durban Venereologist, who has declared that 'twenty per cent of the adult Bantu inhabitants of Durban are already tainted with the dread disease of syphilis while another ten per cent are probably gonorrhea infested. The statement further reveals that 3,000 cases a month are being dealt with and there is an influx of about 900 new cases each month."

The report continues, "We have 200 in-patients, all highly infectious who are detained in hospital and our attendance at each clinic varies from 100 to 300 outpatients." He attributes the cause of this woful increase to the fact that most sufferers treat this disease very lightly and while valuable propaganda work was being done in locations, factories and hostels, there was no royal road to the eradication of V.D."

The report further reveals that "the primary cause of this woful state of affairs is linked up with other social problems such as housing, poverty, prostitution and low wages." It is to the good that the report recognizes the bases of this sad state of affairs. This dreadful disease is foreign to Africans and the proper methods for its cure are not fully known by most of the Bantu medicine men who think they have cured the disease when the outside symptoms have apparently disappeared—being ignorant of its inner persistence in spite of the apparent so-called cures.

If there is any piece of news that should make the Government take prompt action and do all in its power to save our race from extinction, it is this. This being a foreign disease it cannot be fully dealt with succesfully by those who merely tamper with its cure since they ere not conversant with the methods leading to its complete eradication.

The new condition of life which the Bantu find in urban areas largely contribute to the spread of these dire diseases. As Dr. Wallace clearly points out, the incidence of the diseases is bound up with other social problems such as housing, poverty, prostitution and low wages, all of which are ominous. When the Bantu come to seek work in urban areas, the majority of them come not knowing anything about the life in the new surroundings and they fall an easy prey to the ravages of these dreadful diseases. A municipality like that of Durban can not plead lack of means to provide adequate housing for its Bantu labourers, considering the amounts of money it is able to collect from this class of labourers.

Poverty should not be so rampant among the Bantu labourers if they were fairly paid for their labour. Prostitution, one of the sad conditions of life now sadly taking hold hold of our people, was formerly unknown in their old surroundings as their womenfolk were not exposed at home to such conditions as have come with foreign economics.

We urge mosi earnestly the Administration and the Municipalities to view this matter as a very urgent one in order to advert and prevent the destruction of an erstwhile noble race of people whose physique was formerly second to none.

THE BANTU IN SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE

XIV THE FARMS

APR 12 1941

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In previous articles we have discussed the position of the Bantu living in Reserves, and in our references to wages, housing, and nutrition we have paid considerable attention to the Bantu living in urban areas. But a very large proportion of our African people do not fall under either of these heads. They are distributed over thousands of European-owned farms. Their problems are among the most difficult of all. It is harder to help them, and it is harder for them to organise to help themselves.

It must be frankly recognised that a larger number of farm dwellers are not where they are through their own free will Particularly is this the case in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, where adequate locations were never laid out, and where the land was broken up into farms and sold, in some cases, while still in actual tribal occupation In this way it occasionally happened in the Transvaal that a man might be transformed overnight from an occupier of tribal land into a "squatter" on a European-owned farm. It must also be frankly admitted that the natural desire of farms to secure an adequate supply of labour has greatly influenced Parliament and the Government, so that through the pass system, and in other ways, it is made difficult for farm workers to leave their farms. There is no question of forced labour, none the less, the Government has never made adequate provision for the whole rural Bantu population in Reserves, precisely because it does not want to denude the farms of labour.

It is very difficult indeed to generalise about farms. Conditions vary markedly even as regards wages, much more as regard kindliness and thoughtfulness of treatment. There are many happy families living on farms and not at all anxious to leave them. There are others who would gladly leave if they could only see a way out. Perhaps the variation in treatment may be illustrated by a personal experience. The writer once spent a holiday in the Northern Transvaal in the course of which he visited a farm where the farmer had, at his own cost built a school for the children of his Bantu employees, in which the farmer's wife was teaching without pay. In the same district he picked up a farming journal which contained the advertisement of a farm for sale in twenty lots The last item read as follows, and it is quoted without comment: "LOT 20—piggeries and Kaffir quarters The piggeries are in excellent condition."

To come to some concrete points, the greatest difficulty of those living on the farms is probably the question of tenure. So far as the law can do it, security of tenure has been destroyed for the Bantu living on farms. That is the law has rendered it illegal to rent land to the Bantu, whether for a cash payment or on the basis of sharing crops. The law is of course sometimes evaded, and there are a few previleged cases of pre-1913 arrangements specially protected. As far as new arrangements go, the Bantu can legally be on farms, uless the Governor-General's special permission is given to the contrary, only as paid labourers or as labour tenants." The labour tenant is expected to render so many days of service to the farmer every year in order to purchase the right of farming his own plot on the European's land. The trouble is that the law does not define the period of service as CONTINUOUS days. In this and other ways considerable power is thrown into the hands of the farmer, which unscrupulous farmers can use as a lever to extort their own terms. For example, although the labour tenant's wife and children are not included in the obligation to render service, yet the fact that the farmer can terminate the arrangement without giving any reason means that he can, if he wishes, secure very cheap female or child labour. The whole situation regarding tenure is unsatisfactory and Bantu interests ought to be better protected.

We next come to the wage question. Actual cash are almost everywhere very small. This is partly due to the fact that, especially in remoter parts, farmers work less on a cash basis than any other group in the Union. In some parts the cash wage is unreasonably low. Whatever additional privileges are given 10s a month as an actual cash wage is very adequate for a man who must pay his tax in cash and who must pay cash for certain for other objects, for example the education of his children. A low cash wage may be partly compensated for by the provision of other benefits. Farmers often claim that if you could give a cash value to these, the actual farming wage would be higher than that paid in the fields of work. Such research as has been done on this subject—admittedly not enough has been done—tends to disprove this contention.

It is difficult to see how the level of farm wages generally can be raised. Individual employers have sometimes been led, through the awakening conscience by a religious experience, to raise wages Particularly progressive farmers have sometimes done so for purely economic reasons, realising that in the long run better pay means better work. The great majority of farmers, however, are either unable or unwilling to raise wages Humanly speaking, there is only one way in which they can be brought to do so, since farming is excluded from the operation of the wage Act, and therefore from all wage determinations. That one way is an increasing shortage of farm labour. The development of mining and industries, and the growth of urban population, on the one hand, and the development of our Reserves and rural locations on the other hand, must inevitably lead to such a shortage in time. Then wages will have to be raised, unless farmers import cheap, more or less indentured labour from the North. Already this is being done surreptitiously and one of the biggest battles which will have to be fought on

REJOINDER TO MR MOHLAMMES' LETTER

APR 9 1941

Sir,

If I were in Mr. J. R. Mohlamme's boots I would discontinue this Bantu Segregation plea, because it gives such a bad and selfish impression upon the writter.

I would like to make it clear to Mr. Mohlamme that we in the High Commission Territories live comparatively the happiest life in South Africa. We are not barred against this and the other as is the case with Mr. Mohlamme.

Personally, I think it would be a good idea for the Bantu in the High Commission Territories and Union Ubran Areas to work and live cheek by jowl with one another, and that any responsible position should be open to a worthy African irrespective of whether his or her birth place is urban or rural or protectorate.

I am afraid Mr. Mohlamme's ideas seem to those of a man who lives in his imagination taking no cognisance of what goes on around him. He talks of Bantu Park Towns in urban areas when the very municipalities he seems to have so much respect for hardly countenance Bantu private owned stands within their jurisdiction. The sooner Mr. Mohlamme realises that such things as Bantu Park Towns are more likely to exist in the despised Native Reserves than in urban areas which are selfishly reserved for European settlement. Urban locations or townships, however beautiful they are cannot be called Bantu Park Towns as they are the sole property of municipalities. Mr. Mohlamme should please note that.

The Bantu In South African Life

XII: BANTU LAW AND THE COURTS ADMINISTERING IT

MAR 29 1941

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

In the last two articles we have been considering some of the problems of life in the Reserves. Closely associated with these problems is the question of what is usually called "Native Law." The questions of its recognition and the courts by which it should be administered are matters of real importance in Bantu life, chiefly, but not wholly, in the Reserves.

MAR 29 1941

Every nation has its own system of law, which must not lightly be condemned by others. Bantu law, though open to criticism on some points, was a well-worked-out system designed to meet the conditions of tribal society. Some people have held, and some still hold, the view that Bantu law should not be recognised at all. But this, in the eyes of most students, would be considered an extreme view. It is true that we could hardly expect the courts of a civilised country to sentence people to death, possibly death by torture, for being witches, but there are vast fields of Bantu law, especially the law covering the relationship of persons to one another, which are not open to the same kind of objection as the law for punishing witches. The policy of the British Commonwealth has been to recognise throughout the King's dominions the customary law of every nation or tribe so far as that law is compatible with the principles of equity and humanity. So in South Africa, Roman-Dutch law was recognised from the beginning, and is still the basis of our law. No attempt was made to force English Common Law on this country. On the contrary, English men coming to settle here were subjected to Roman-Dutch law. In the same way, we have gradually learned to respect and recognise Bantu law in all civil cases between members of the Bantu race.

DIFFICULTIES

The great difficulty arises however, that the Bantu are in different stages of civilisation. Concessions which were rightly granted to people living under tribal conditions become mere licence when extended to civilised men. An obvious example is polygamy. Restrictions, probably quite justifiable in tribal life, bear hardly on civilised men. It is, for example, rather hard that a graduate, a proefssional man, should be subjected on all points to the administrative discretion of an illiterate chief.

Broadly speaking, we have tried to get over this difficulty in two ways. In the Province of Natal anyone may apply for exemption from Native law, and, if the Government is satisfied that he is a civilised man may obtain such exemption. On matters such as those referred above, and on many others, he then falls under the ordinary Roman-Dutch and Statute law of the country, and not under Native law. Under this system a man, however civilised, does not escape from Native law, which in Natal is thrown into the form of a code, unless he has actually been exempted. In the other Provinces, the Courts themselves are given discretion as to the extent to which they should apply Native law to the particular persons before them. Neither system is wholly satisfactory, and very often decisions are given which are felt to be inequitable, though it must, in fairness to the Courts, be admitted that their task is an extremely difficult one.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The kind of questions which arise, and which readers of these articles should be considering for themselves, are whether Bantu law should be expressed in the form of a written code, or left to be built up by the Courts; whether the Natal system of exemption is good one, or whether it is best to leave the Courts discretion to deal with each case on its merits; and whether there are parts of Bantu law to which recognition should not be accorded. Under this last head, the most frequently discussed instance is that of the so-called "bride price" (LOBOLO, IKHASI, BOGADI) There are those who claim that this custom is of the very essence of Bantu society, and is contrary neither to the principles of humanity nor to Christianity. There are those, on the other hand, who claim that conditions have altered so much that, as things are to-day, the custom which our law describes is incompatible with present conditions of living that recognition should be withdrawn from it. Another matter to which we shall have occasion to refer in a later article is the extent to which recognition should be given to the form of marriage according to Bantu custom which our law describes as "customary union." Some people believe that all customary unions should be registered, and that they should be given a higher legal status than they have now. A last point is that of the Courts best suited to administer "Native law." At present a large number of Chiefs have been given jurisdiction, but with the exception of one small area of the Union, no African is compelled to go to his Chief first. He can choose whether to go to the Chief or the Native Commissioner. if he goes to the Chief he may appeal to the Native Commissioner. MAR 29 1941

CRITICS

Appeal from the Native Commissioner lies in all cases to the Native Appeal Courts. There are two of these, one for the Cape and the Orange Free State, the other for the Transvaal and Natal.

BANTU LANGUAGES

The Editor "Umteteli."

MR. JACOB R. MOHLAMME, Eastern Native Township, Johannesburg, writes: Sir,—Even the law of the State is being modulated from time to time. And if the people cannot understand the modulation of suggestions, then they are poor in mind; if men cannot change an iota in what they previously wrote, whilst recognising the development of thought, then they are poor in mind. If the people should believe that people differing in languages will eventually unite, then they are poor in mind. If "the psychological and anthropological importance of man (person)" should be a barrier to adapting oneself to means of unity and progress, then it was nonsense and useless for Nature to create the world subject to evolution by the refinement of matter. Opposition will die out very soon.

When the Europeans first came to South Africa they had some difficulties in causing the Bantu to live as human beings in peace and respect alongside one another. They have done their duty; and now the job is left with us. And sure enough, as a nation, the biblical parable of the men's failure to build a tower is practised and has befallen us through our numerous languages. This is the fact: Bantu languages sever relations between the Bantu themselves, and their unity is thereby threatened.

The Bantu languages have become a flop, unless one, "Esperanto" is possible, if attempted ambitiously.

Just now, in the gold and coal mining industry on the Rand, there are 391,042 Bantu labourers of various nationalities, and Esperanto is the medium of expression year in and year out. And for assurance sake, there is even a book compiled in the very language and it is circulating about the Rand.

The Europeans' advantage is that while they inhabit the same continent with different languages they have independent Governments concerning such differences. On the other hand the Bantu disadvantage is that while they inhabit the same continent or part of a continent, they have the same government, the same rank and depend on the same master, but with differences at their roostings.

The Bantu In South African Life

XIV: THE FARMS

APR 1 2 1941

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES).

In previous articles we have discussed the position of the Bantu living in Reserves, and in our references to wages, housing, and nutrition we have paid considerable attention to the Bantu living in urban areas. But a very large proportion of our African people do not fall under either of these heads. They are distributed over thousands of European-owned farms. Their problems are among the most difficult of all. It is harder to help them, and it is harder for them to organise to help themselves.

It must be frankly recognised that a larger number of farm dwellers are not where they are through their own free will. Particularly is this the case in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, where adequate locations where never laid out, and where the land was broken up into farms and sold, in some cases, while still in actual tribal occupation. In this way it occasionally happened in the Transvaal that a man might be transformed overnight from an occupier of tribal land into a "squatter" on a European-owned farm. It must also be frankly admitted that the natural desire of farmers to secure an adequate supply of labour has greatly influenced Parliament and the Government, so that through the pass system, and in other ways, it is made difficult for farm workers to leave their farms. There is no question of forced labour: none the less, the Government has never made adequate provision for the whole rural Bantu population in Reserves, precisely because it does not want to denude the farms of labour.

WITHOUT DAY

It is very difficult indeed to generalise about farms. Conditions vary markedly, even as regards wages, much more as regards kindliness and thoughtfulness of treatment. There are many happy families living on farms and not at all anxious to leave them. There are others who would gladly leave if they could only see a way out. Perhaps the variation in treatment may be illustrated by a personal experience. The writer once spent a holiday in the Northern Transvaal, in the course of which he visited a farm where the farmer had, at his own cost, built a school for the children of his Bantu employees, in which the farmer's wife was teaching without pay. In the same district he picked up a farming journal which contained the advertisement of a farm for sale in twenty lots. The last item read as follows, and it is quoted without comment: "LOT 20—piggeries and Kaffir quarters. The piggeries are in excellent condition."

APR 1 2 1941

SECURITY OF TENURE

To come to some concrete points the greatest difficulty of those living on the farms is probably the question of tenure. So far as the law can do it, security of tenure has been destroyed for the Bantu living on farms. That is, the law has rendered it illegal to rent land to the Bantu, whether for a cash payment or on the basis of sharing crops. The law is of course sometimes evaded, and there are a few privileged cases of pre 1913 arrangements specially protected. As far as new arrangements go, the Bantu can legally be on farms, unless the Governor-General's special permission is given to the contrary only as paid labourers or as "labour tenants". The labour tenant is expected to render so many days of service to the farmer every year in order to purchase the right of farming his own plot on the European's land. Trouble is that the law does not define the period of service as CONTINUOUS days. In this and other ways considerable power is thrown into the hands of the farmer, which unscrupulous farmers can use as a level to extort their own terms. For example, although the labour tenant's wife and children are not included in the obligation to render service, yet the fact that the farmer can terminate the arrangement without giving any reason means that he can, if he wishes, secure very cheap female or child labour. The whole situation regarding tenure is unsatisfactory, and Bantu interests ought to be better protected.

SMALL WAGES

We next come to the wage question. Actual cash wages are almost everywhere very small. This is partly due to the fact that, especially in remoter parts, farmers work less on a cash basis than any other group in the Union. In some parts the cash wage is unreasonably low. Whatever additional privileges are given, 10s a month as an actual cash wage is very inadequate for a man who must pay his tax in cash, and who must pay cash for certain other objects, for example the education of his children. A low cash wage may be partly compensated for by the provision of the benefits. Farmers often claim that if you could give a cash value to these, the actual farming wage would be higher than that paid in other fields of work. Such research as has been done on this subject—admittedly not enough has been done—tends to disprove this contention.

It is difficult to see how the level of farm wages generally can be raised. Individual employers have sometimes been led, through the awekening concsience by a religious experience, to raise wages. Particularly progressive farmers have sometimes done so for purely economic reasons, realising that in the long run better pay means better work. The great majority of farmers, however, are either unable or unwilling to raise wages. Humanly speaking, there is only one way in which they can be brought to do so, since farming is excluded from the operation of the Wage Act, and therefore from all wage determinations. That one way is an increasing shortage of farm labour. The development of mining and industries, and the growth of urban population, on the one hand, and the development of our Reserves and rural locations on the other hand, must inevitably lead to such a shortage in time. Then wages will have to be raised, unless farmers import cheap, more or less indentured labour from the North. Already this is being done surreptitiously, and one of the biggest battles which will have to be fought on behalf of the Bantu will be that raging round the question of cheap farm labour from the Rhodesias and Nyasaland.

POOR DIET

A further point is diet. Here again conditions vary very much On some farms an excellent diet is provided, but on many the diet is extremely unsatisfactory, unappetising and insufficient in nutriment. It is fairly well established now that stock theft bears a direct relation to the absence of meat from the diet of farm labours.

Within our restricted space it is hardly possible to discuss all questions regarding the life on the farms. Obviously the provision of schools and of adequate medical attention are important points. There are others. In general terms, we can see that the position of the Bantu living on the farms is not satisfactory. For improvement we must look to the slow operation of economic forces, for example higher wages in towns, and to changes in public opinion and practice, bringing up the worse farms to the level of the better ones. No group would rejoice more than the group of really progressive farmers if this could be done.

XV: TAXATION

APR 26 1941

(BY SEN. EDGAR H. BROOKES)

There must be very few people who do not know what are the special taxes imposed on the Bantu. For the sake of completeness, however, it may be as well to summarise them.

All men of Bantu race over the age of eighteen, unless specially exempted as students or for other reasons, must pay a poll tax of £1 per annum. Those residing in Reserves or rural locations must, in addition, pay a local hut tax of ten shillings per hut per annum, with a maximum of £2. Where quitrent is payable, the tax is abated by the amount of the quitrent paid. Thus, a monogamist paying ten shillings quitrent will pay no local tax. A man with two wives paying £1 quitrent will pay no local tax. The local tax is supposed to be earmarked for expenditure in the area where it is raised. Where there is a Council system, it is spent by the Council. Of the poll tax or general tax, two thirds is paid into the Native Development Account, and the remaining one-third into general revenue. Grants of money from general revenue exceeding the remaining one-third are, however, made to this same fund.

It must be realised that just as expenditure takes place for the benefit of the Bantu, e.g., on public health, apart from the Development Fund, so much taxation is paid by the Bantu apart from the special Native taxes. The fact that a man is of Bantu race exempts him only from certain Provincial taxes. All other taxes apply equally to him, in spite of his having a special tax of his own. Though the number of Bantu whose income is big enough to be subject to income tax is very small, yet any who have such an income must pay income tax, and the poll tax as well.

Probably the most important tax that the Bantu pay is one of which the majority are almost completely ignorant, namely customs and excise duties. Customs duties, it may be explained, are taxes on goods imported into the country, while excise duties are taxes levied upon goods manufactured inside the country. Customs duties are leviable on almost everything: excise duties, on the other hand, are mainly levied on a small number of "luxury articles" such as wines, spirits, beer, tobacco, cigarettes and sugar. These taxes form what is known by economists as "indirect taxation". By indirect taxation they mean that the charge is not really borne by the person who first pays it, but is passed on to others. If you are a smoker, you will notice that your packets of cigarettes have special stamps affixed to them to cover the excise duties. These stamps are brought by the cigarette manufacturers, but the cost is passed on to the merchants, and by them to the individual smoker. Remember that every puff of smoke means a small fraction of a penny going into the Government's revenue.

Take one more illustration. A man buys a suit from an Indian tailor. The tailor arrives at the price by calculating the cost of the cloth as he bought it from the wholesale merchant, plus his labour and profit. The basic figure is the cost of the cloth, but this figure includes the customs duties which the wholesale merchant or his agent at the port has paid. It is probable that at least £2,000,000 is paid by the Bantu population of the Union in taxes in this painless way. If the Government raises the customs duty, the ordinary man has no grievance against the Government: he simply blames the merchant for profiteering.

But though the burden of customs and excise duties in actual figures is much heavier than that of the poll tax, it is not felt nearly so much. There is no resentment about it. This helps us to remember that the method of collection of a tax often matters at least as much as the nature and amount of the tax. For many years the poll tax has been very unpopular, not so much because of the amount, although that is very heavy for certain types of worker, but also because of police raids, and imprisonment. Nowadays the Government is doing its best to reduce police raids, and try every other method of collecting the tax before sending the defaulter to gaol. The number of people going to gaol, each year has fallen from about 30,000 in the latter part of 1939 to 7,000 in the latter part of 1940.

There are those who argue that the Bantu should not pay any special tax at all. They say that it is contrary to sound policy for the poorest section of the population to pay taxes. Others argue that a community which pays no direct taxation suffers a loss of prestige, and is deprived of any chance of exercising political influence. It has been the writer's experience to find tribal Bantu earnestly opposing the abolition of the poll tax on these grounds. Perhaps wiser methods of collection, and an adequate and flexible system of exemption for those who really cannot afford to pay, may make the tax a bearable one. Until the theory has been discarded which says: that special services to the Bantu must be met out of special taxes paid by the Bantu, it would be a mistake to abolish the tax, which finances the greater part of our education and our agricultural services.

It is, of course, the theory that is wrong. No class of the community should find expenditure on it limited by the amount of taxes which it pays. It must be considered whether the interest of the State calls for expenditure, and, if so, the expenditure must be made, irrespective of whether revenue is coming in or not. We do this, for example, with regard to our farming community and to the Poor White group. Nobody suggests that the expenditure on them should be limited by the amount of direct taxes which they pay. When this doctrine of "fiscal segregation" is applied to the Bantu, it is a particularly flagrant example of the abuse of the idea of segregation.

Questions

1. It has been claimed that the poll tax is unfair, in that people with different incomes pay the same tax. Can you suggest any practicable alternative?
2. Is it a sound principle that polygamists should pay a higher local tax than monogamists?
3. Can you think of any other forms of indirect taxation which affect the Bantu, other than customs and excise?
4. Can you think of any general expenditure, i.e., expenditure apart from the Development and Trust Funds, by which the Bantu benefit?

BULLETIN ON NEGRO AMERICANS NOW READY

NOV 22 1941

ATLANTA, Nov. 19 — (ANP)— The Commission on Interracial Cooperation, with headquarters in the Standard building, this city, announces that "Twelve Million Negro Americans," its latest bulletin on the Negro in American life, is now available to the public. Intended primarily to lay the basis for more intelligent and fairminded interracial attitudes and practices on the part of white people, it is believed that the bulletin will be of equal interest to the members of both races. It will be especially valuable to teachers, preachers, program builders and discussion leaders.

The 24-packed pages of "Twelve Million Negro Americans", it is believed, present the most comprehensive view of the subject to be found anywhere in such condensed and popular form. Subtitled "Backgrounds, Progress and Present-Day Problems", this little volume treats of racial origins; African environment and culture; the Negro's contribution to American life and history; his progress in health, industry, business, education, and the arts; the major problems incident to his presence in this country; and the common fallacies and fears that complicate the situation.

Though selling at five cents per copy, the commission states that a sample copy will be sent without charge to anyone enclosing a three cent stamp for postage.

Harlem Responds To Petition Drive For Earl Browder

NOV 2 2 1941

Many Comment on Browder's Scottsboro Aid; Hail His Anti-Hitler Fight

56a

By Art Shields

It's a pleasure to watch folks signing Browder petitions on the main streets of Harlem. They do it so gladly. They do it with a smile that Browder should see.

I doubt if petition collectors have such a high batting average anywhere else in the city as Harlem. For an hour I watched a group of volunteers at work on W. 135 St. near Seventh Ave. the night before last. I heard them invite scores of Harlem folk to sign the Citizens' Committee petition to set Browder free, and most of them signed.

Men and women stepping along in a hurry stopped to sign. I heard a man tell Abner W. Berry, chairman of the Communist Party of Upper Harlem, that he hadn't time to stop. "I can't be bothered," he said. But he took the Free-Browder literature that Berry put in his hands and glanced at the paper as he was crossing 125th St. at Seventh going south. A headline about "INJUSTICE" caught his eyes and he came back to examine the paper more closely in the bright light from the jewelry store on the northeast corner. He read several paragraphs and cried out: "I'll sign."

FIGHT INJUSTICE

Harlem people will fight against injustice. They sympathize with every one who is oppressed, said one of the signers Wednesday night. But they see more than the personal injustice, suffered by Browder, when they sign the petition. They see their own sufferings as well, said this signer, a progressive young Negro, who is active in the movement for lower milk prices.

NOV 2 2 1941

Signatures came pretty fast onthe northwest corner of 125th St and Seventh when a Negro man began helping the girl signature collector. The man was a stranger to the girl but not to Browder's work. All the time he kept calling to the people to sign petition for the man who always fought for the rights of the Negro people, and the people responded.

Browder's work for the Scottsboro boys wins many signatures.

I watched it win the support of a handsome, well dressed man, who at first had expressed some prejudice against Communists. At first he had said that he wouldn't do anything for Browder because he was a Communist. But when Abner W. Berry asked where the Scottsboro boys would have been if Browder and the Communists hadn't gone to their aid, he signed the petition and signed it most cheerfully.

NOV 2 2 1941

"The Communists didn't do any harm to the Scottsboro Boys. They surely didn't," he said as he signed.

The great majority of signers, however, expressed no prejudice at all. Quite the contrary.

"We should be doing more things like this," said one thin, middle aged man to Berry as he signed.

Signing the petition made him feel so good that he went on talking for ten minutes about the strength and independence that the Negro people had been showing for some time past.

"The Negro people should feel proud of themselves," he said.

The election of A. Clayton Powell, the first Negro councilman, was one of the things that made him feel proud, he said.

Several people on the corner said they were signing the Browder petitions because they hated Hitler.

"I know Browder always fought against Hitlerism," said a man to the girl signature collector. "That's why I sign."

Harlem men and women will sign the petitions when they are asked. The number of Harlem names on the petitions that will be presented to President Roosevelt after Nov. 28 will be limited only by the number of volunteers that are getting them. And the number of volunteers gains day by day.

'Ultimate Victory' Is His Aim

Decree Removes Roman Eagle From Palace

MAY 11 1941

ADDIS ABABA — (SNS) —"I am determined to see that Ethiopia contributes still further to the ultimate victory," Haile Selassie told Prime Minister Churchill Saturday in a message of thanks for British armed support in Ethiopia.

(Mr. Churchill told London newspapermen the message would be conveyed to British and empire forces "who have aided Ethiopian patriots in total and final destruction of Italian military usurpation.")

After five years of exile, Selassie returned to the place Monday and one of his very first decrees resulted in the removal of the stone Roman eagle which stood in the doorway of the royal palace during its occupancy by Italian viceroys.

STUDIES MAP OF COUNTRY

A big map of Ethiopia stretched before him, Selassie told newspapermen Saturday morning "the enemies of Britain are my enemies".

He said he is prepared to attack both nazism and facism. "It is my earnest desire to organize a regular army in Ethiopia," he declared. MAY 11 1941

Health conditions in the country is the current problem and Saturday the reconquering Lion of Judah made an appeal to American Red Cross for medical supplies.

He said a new cabinet will be organized soon. Parliament is expected to meet shortly.

Selassie also discussed the possibility of new road between Ethiopia western provinces and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan to help develop trade westward.

With all the splendor and beauty befitting the return of a king, Halie Selassie, King of Kings, King of Zion, Invincible Lion of the Seed of Judah, Branch of the Tree of Solomon, Implement of the Holy Trinity, and Son of Solomon, arrived Monday at the capitol. He was met by Gen. A. C. Cunningham, commander of the British forces which drove the Italians from the city; by his sons, the Crown Prince Makonnen and the Due of Harrah, andk by thousands of his people.

THANKS GOD FOR RETURN

While priests, soldiers and the common people crowded forward in the courtyard of the Church of the Virgin Mary to make their obeisance to their ruler, Haile Selassie fell to his knees and thanked God for his return to his native land. From the church which is built on the summit of Mount Entotto overlooking the city, the emperor's procession descended the mountain and entered the city through broad avenues lined with eucalyptus trees. East African armored car units headed the procession, followed by an Ethiopian battalion with British officers. MAY 11 1941

Green, gold and red native flags decorated the houses. The emperor entered the city in an open car guarded by local troops, and immediately preceded by Ethiopian police mounted on white horses. African guns fired a 21-gun salute as Haile Selassie later received the crowd's acclamation from the balc[illegible] royal palace.

Although the Italians in the city were under British protection, they remained indoors in spite of the "tollerant" attitude of the Ethiopians.

Haile Selassie Reoccupies His Throne In Addis Ababa

MAY 7 - 1941

HAILE SELASSIE

ADDIS ABABA, ETHIOPIA, May 5.—(Delayed)—(AP)—Haile Selassie returned to his throne today just five years and three days after the Italians drove him into exile from this capital.

The emperor was met on the outskirts of the city by his sons, the Crown Prince Makonnen and the Duke of Harar, and by General A. C. Cunningham, commander of the British troops which took Addis Ababa from the Italians,

Thousands of natives, afoot, astride gaily-bedecked mules or hanging from windows, waved flags and cried out joyously as the bearded little Conquering Lion of Judah rode through the streets. MAY 7 - 1941

His eyes flashing with emotion, the Emperor went to the Grand Gibbi—the royal palace—where he gave audience to British officers and native chieftains.

Italians remaining in the city kept to the security of their homes.

SELASSIE ORDERS ITALIAN SYMBOL EAGLE BEHEADED

MAY 11 1941

By Godfrey H. P. Anderson
(British Journalist)

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, May 10. —The stone Roman eagle which surmounted the doorway of Haile Selassie's palace during its occupancy by Italian viceroys has been beheaded by his order.

That was one of the first decrees of the reconquering Lion of Judah on his return after five years of exile.

I talked with him today in the vast ground- loor study of the palace. Stretched before him was a map of Ethiopia. In a corner ticked a grandfather's clock which the late King George V had given him. MAY 11 1941

"The enemies of Britain are my enemies," Selassie answered to a question whether Ethiopia was at war with Germany as well as Italy.

"I am prepared to attack both Fascism and Naziism. It is my earnest desire to organize a regular army in Ethiopia."

Selassie said he recognized public health to be Ethiopia's paramount problem and appealed for help from the American Red Cross in developing a national medical service. MAY 11 1941

He mentioned plans to open the Ethiopian Parliament shortly, said he already had decided on selection of a new cabinet and discussed the possibility of new roads between Ethiopia's western provinces and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan to help develop trade westward.

The Emperor Returns

The first two-fifths of the twentieth century have been precarious years for the men and women of the earth who wore crowns. "Uneasy," indeed, has been the rest of those who wielded the sceptres.

Nation after nation have given up their monarchs, not to become republics, but to change them for dictators. Since the beginning of World War Number Two, we have seen many small nations merged into the German Reich, or into obliteration altogether.

It was in 1936 that Premier Mussolini decided to build an East African Empire into which should be included Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, as it is best known. This decision was reached in spite of the fact that both nations were members of the League of Nations, whose signatories had pledged themselves to protect and defend the integrity and independence of the smaller nations.

The appeal of Abyssinia to the other nations, and particularly France and England, to save them from their enemy, or rather to give her the means by which she could save herself, fell on deaf ears. Even neutral America denied the little nation the right to purchase war materials through the sale of oil and other means. And as a result Ethiopia was captured and its king fled to England.

But a lot of things have happened in the five years that have elapsed. Many of the nations which winked at the crime of Italy, saying to themselves, doubtless, Abyssinia is only an unimportant country of black people; why bother about it? But much swifter than they dared expect the hand of ruthless destruction struck them down, and they suffered the same terrible fate that had overtaken Abyssinia.

But while other nations have been crushed under the iron heal, Emperor Haile Selassie has reclaimed his throne and reestablished his rule over the nation whose history ante-dates that of most of the other nations. Thus he becomes the first of the rulers to regain his throne. When the Greeks were sweeping through Albania, it looked like King Zog might come back, but the Nazis changed all that. So Selassie is the lone wolf, who can write after his name the words, "The Emperor Returns."

RAS TAFARI BACK IN ABYSSINIA

THE news of the defeat of Mussolini's armies in Abyssinia, and the consequent return of the Emperor Haile Selassie to the throne of his fathers, has been received with more than ordinary interest.

The fortunes of the Abyssinian Emperor and his country since the evil days when the Italians invaded it, have been followed closely by Africans. And, as news flashes across Africa from time to time recording the daring exploits of the Emperor's patriot army and their European allies, the prospects of Haile Selassie regaining his throne are discussed with zest.

Haile Selassie's kingdom is one of the oldest Christian countries, Christainity having been introduced into Abyssinia earlier than 200 A.D. His ancestral origin is traceable to King Solomon, son of David, and the Queen of Sheba, it is claimed.

It is interesting to speculate what form the Abyssinian government will take after the reinstatement of the Emperor. For, before the conquest by Mussolini, Haile Selassie's government was virtually a one-man affair, although he had a Cabinet. He was Chief Justice, Foreign Minister and Minister of the Interior; Commander-in-Chief of the Abyssinian army and High Priest.

Ras Tafari, who boasts a French education, was crowned Emperor when he was only 24 years old. That was in November, 1930, when he was declared "Emperor Haile Selassie, Lord King of Kings of Ethiopia, Ras of Rases, Elect of God, and Conquering Lion of Judah."

The coronation ceremony was one of pomp and splendour, the priests and other church dignitaries dressed in purple robes and all the finery beloved of their class. Many important visitors from Europe and America were present, and the Royal House of England was rspresented by the Duke of Gloucester.

On that day, incidentally, Ras Tafari rode on the coach which formerly belonged to Kaiser Wilhelm, the ex-German Emperor.

Friends of Ethiopia

FRIENDS OF ETHIOPIA held a rally at Livingstone House, Westminster, last Saturday, to celebrate the return to his capital of Haile Selassie, the Emperor. For five years these people had supported the Emperor's cause through apparently hopeless failure, by agitation, speeches, and a newspaper founded ad hoc. Now they had their reward.

What of the future? asked Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, who presided. The Emperor had explicitly asked for British co-operation in the restoration of his country, particularly in the intellectual and economic fields. Well and good; but, said Miss Pankhurst, emphatically, at the end of the war we must see to it that the future of Ethiopia is not hampered by international politicians who would destroy what had been achieved.

There must be no "international co-operation"; Ethiopia must be free to decide her own policy and to carry it out in her own way. There must be no secret agreements made behind her back, no economic subtleties to her disadvantage.

Haile Selassie has proved himself worthy to rule by his conduct during his five years' exile. Ever since he had landed in England with the Princess Tsahi, his two sons, and the faithful Ras Kassa, he had held to his ideals, demonstrating serenity in misfortune, undaunted courage and patience, and great faith in the triumph of good over evil.

Miss Pankhurst said that the Ethiopian patriots had had to arm themselves from the enemy. One method was to let loose swarms of bees upon the Italians; then, while they were thrown into confusion by the vicious insects, the Ethiopians raided rifles.

A warm tribute was paid to Captain Arnold Wienholt, who served in East Africa during the last war and had now lost his life in the Ethiopian cause. During the Italian campaign he had done great work for the Ethiopian Red Cross. After the Italian conquest he returned home to Australia, but when the present war broke out he went to Jibuti and thence to Ethiopia, dying in her cause.

Ethiopian Empress, Wife of Haile Selassie, Will Advocate Equality Between Men and Women When She Returns to Abyssinia.

MAY 10 1941

(By Our London Correspondent)

LONDON, England, May 8—"I am exceedingly happy that Ethiopia, the first victim of totalitarian aggression, has had her freedom restored. I am grateful to God and the British Empire."

This is how the Empress Menhen, wife of Haile Selassie, expressed her feelings when she heard the news of the fall of Addis Ababa.

The Empress lives in a small house at Bath with her younger children and her widowed daughter as well as the Princess Tshai, a qualified British nurse.

Since the return to Africa of the Emperor accompanied by his sons, the Crown Prince and the Duke of Harar, the Empress has been making preparations to join them.

MAY 10 1941

She followed the military events especially the fighting of the Abyssinian Patriots under the leadership of her husband very closely, studying maps and reading communiques and reports translated into Amharic.

The Empress also receives reports direct from the Emperor in the field by telegrams via Cairo. These messages keep her in close touch with the Emperor's plans. She hopes to proceed to Africa at an early date so as to be present with her husband when he rides into Addis Ababa at the head of his native army.

DEMOCRATIC CONSTITUTION AND VOTES FOR WOMEN

The Empress let it be known that during her exile in England, she has been studying the suffragette movement and will advocate equality between men and women when she returns to Abyssinia.

She also wants Ethiopia to have a democratic constitution, votes for women and women members of the Abyssinian Parliament. In other words, the Empress wants to see her country transform from semi-feudalism into a modern state like Turkey since the last World War.

"I also intend to organize compulsory education and have a school in every village. "I plan to work 24 hours a day for the rehabilitation of my country," declared the Empress.

Switching Masters In Ethiopia

• Emperor Haile Selassie, according to press reports, has ridden into Addis Ababa to reclaim his throne.

MAY 7 - 1941

But the press says nothing about the freedom and independence of the Ethiopian people.

Instead there is an army of occupation in Ethiopia, and it is there to do the will of British imperialism, not the will of the Ethiopian people. Already it has promulgated an order banning the Ethiopian people from bearing arms. (Although it was alright for them to have arms when they were fighting Britain's imperialist rival!) Moreover, Mussolini's army of occupation passed the same kind of order when it took over the country.

MAY 7 - 1941

Britain does not intend for this Negro nation to have its freedom, because it would inspire the liberation movements within South Africa and other slave pens of the empire. London has taken the heel of Rome off the necks of the Ethiopians, only to place its own heel there. Either it will try to make a puppet of Emperor Selassie, or it will use commissions with high-sounding names to block Ethiopia's freedom for years to come.

MAY 7 - 1941

In New York, the Daily Worker alone has raised the slogan of Full Independence for Ethiopia, thus shattering the hypocritical claims of the other newspapers that this is a "war for democracy." It is plain that if Ethiopia, or any other small country, is to have its independence, it will be in struggle against both imperialist camps.

Biography of Haile Selassie

MAY 9 - 1941

By J. A. Rogers

But the accession to full power gave Haile Selassie by no means a free hand to carry out his reforms. He had first of all to contend with the great Rases, or rulers of provinces, who were as jealous of their power as the various states of the American union are of theirs.

MAY 9 - 1941

Another internal obstacle was the swarming Ethiopian clergy, which is very powerful and as opposed to science, innovation, and even modern methods of healing as were their European brethren in the Middle Ages.

Some of the chiefs were subject only in name, and were actually hostile, while the lack of roads and communications made it impossible for the Emperor to check them at short notice. Wild tribesmen prompted by these, too, to invade the territory of adjoining nations, thus bringing reproach on the central power, and causing the payments of indemnities.

Haile Selassie also had to contend with incessant foreign intrigue for the economic control, and even the direct seizure, of his country that went on not only abroad but in Ethiopia itself.

His economic difficulties were tremendous. Ethiopia, though rich in natural resources, is yet in the stage of primitive agriculture. Her coinage, such as Haile Selassie found it, was unstable and being of silver was of small value on the purchase of modernizing implements in the gold countries. Further, such reforms are usually effected by foreign loans, but Ethiopian policy is not to borrow abroad. Haile Selassie knows that the first step towards losing his independence would be to owe money to Europe or America. Money to carry out his reforms has been and still is his great handicap.

Yet working under these and other disadvantages, he has instituted a Parliament and modern courts, has built roads, hospitals, schools, installed electric lighting in the streets, improved the commerce and international relations, all the while steering a diplomatic course between opposing actions and religions in his own land.

As for his daily duties they are manifold. He receives the diplomats of the various nations, attends to some minute details of the government or the army; gives orders and inspects the erection of a building or the installation of machinery, and the like, all in addition to being the chief justice of the empire. Each subject, however lowly, has the right to direct appeal to the Emperor.

In the meantime he keeps an almost housewifely eye for other details. Passing along in his red Rolls Royce he will sometimes descend to instruct the Gouragi road-workers and might lift a stone, himself, to put it in the proper place. Truly he is the guiding spirit of his nation in the fullest sense of the word. He is the rare spectacle nowadays of the monarch being the greatest in the land not only in name but in worth, ability, and vision. Far more than Mussolini, he is the maker of his country.

As one writer has said, "The weight of the whole empire rests upon the shoulders of this quiet but iron-hearted little soverign.

MAY 9 - 194

"Night and day he is beset by a thousand different problems and a thousand different worries and perplexities. Even while he eats he transacts state business. Even while he sleeps he has no respite.

"His secretary sleeps at the foot of his majesty's bed ready at any moment to take the Emperor's orders in the event his majesty awakens and thinks about something he had forgotten during the day.

"Under terrific strain, he is trying almost overnight to transform his medival empire into a modern state."

It is amazing how he manages to do all this, for he is frail in appearance. Like Napoleon and Gandhi, he is small, being about five feet tall and weighing about one hundred and ten pounds.

Haile Selassie's outstanding accomplishment, however, has been his fight against slavery, which had existed in Ethiopia from time immemorial. He began by freeing all the slaves in his palace; after which he made laws for the gradual emancipation of the remainder in the empire. He provided free education and clothing for the children of slaves and ex-slaves, together with appointment to government posts, depending upon individual ability; founded an anti-slavery society and an anti-salvery court; and made slave raiding punishable with death.

In 1935 he issued a proclamation wiping out slavery forever. In all his reforms Haile Selassie has had to go slow. He cannot change the psychology of his people or educate them over night. One recalls the fate of King Amanuallah of Afghanistan, who tried to hasten progress in his own land. Moreover, most of Haile Selassie's people are anti-European in their ways. They know that the [illegible] did all the rest of Africa.

In disposition he is firm, [illegible] countrymen call him "Arno" (The Wise) for when he believes he is right he is unyielding. In March, 1936, when Mussolini demanded a diplomatic apology and indemnity, and the saluting of the Italian flag at Addis Ababa over the Walwal incident, Haile Selassie sent him a flat refusal. And he did the unprecedented thing of giving out his reply to the press before he gave it to Italy, thus giving Mussolini no chance to make it appear otherwise to the Italian people.

MAY 9 - 1941

When George Bernard Shaw suggested that he yield to Italy and become a protectorate, he replied.

"I would rather kill myself, like Emperor Theodore sixty years ago, than become a puppet under the Italians.

"I would be unworthy of my great ancestors, beginning with Solomon, if I submitted to Italian vassalage. Nor can I, as Sovereign of the oldest empire in the world, which had its beginnings before the Flood, accept a British protectorate or an Anglo-French regime.

"We cannot cut up Ethiopia like a cake, handing sugared parts to this and that country just to win their armies and satisfy their sweet tooth.

"Would England or any other sovereign nation give up territory so willingly? No! I have taken an oath to the memory of the great Menelik to defend the empire until God calls me unto Him."

In manners, Haile Selassie is pleasing and most affable, yet full of natural dignity. His face radiates intelligence, serenity, kindliness, good nature and immense reserves of power. He smiles frequently, or used to until the slaughter of his people by Italy began. A true Christian, he observes the noblest injunctions of his faith.

When a man who had tried to assassinate him was sentenced to death, Haile Selassie not only refused to sign the warrant, but forgave him. He has also abolished public hangings; mutilation for habitual thieves; and is endeavoring to supplant the old Mosaic law by which a murder is handed over the victim's next of kin, with modern law. But it is also said that he never forgets an enemy.

MAY 9 - 1941

The above is the opinion of nearly every one who has come in contact with His Majesty. Karl Von Wiegand, newspaper correspondent, wrote in the Cosmopolitan Magazine (March, 1936): "I know of no king or emperor who surpasses him in natural dignity, graciousness, refinement, and ease. I have seen a number of white monarchs who do not even approach him in qualities or perhaps even in intelligence."

His features are exquisitely chiselled and reflect the refinement, culture, amiability, and intellectual shrewdness within. No picture of him that this writer has ever seen has been able to catch his true spirit. In his general expression he has been truly described as a "black edition of the pictured Christ."

His beard and curly hair show unmistakable proof of his African ancestry. In color he is a lightish black-brown and considerably darker than the published pictures of him. In the United States he would be immediately taken for an Afr-american.

In his family life Haile Selassie differs from more Eastern and African monarchs; he has no concubines and only one wife. In 1912 he married Weyzero Menen, who has borne him five children. The Empress is a great granddaughter of Menelik, and a niece of the deposed emperor.

SELASSIE TO EASE BRITISH ARMY TASK

Intends to Release Troops Engaged in Ethiopia and Lend Aid Elsewhere

MAY 13 1941

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, May 8 (Delayed) (AP)—Haile Selassie declared today that he intended to release British forces from their task of reconquering Ethiopia from Italy and aid them in their defense elsewhere against "cruel attacks."

In a message to President Roosevelt and the people of the United States on the occasion of his return to his capital Haile Selassie declared that "it was fitting that the first victim of Axis greed should be the first to be delivered."

Since "the unprovoked aggression of 1935 proved to be the forerunner of all later aggressions," he said, he prayed that "its atonement" may prove to be the beginning of disaster for all aggressors.

The message, given to newspaper men, said:

"At this time of trouble and distress for all peoples who love liberty of conscience and justice to small nations, I know you and the people of the United States of America will share our joy in the restoration of the freedom of Ethiopia.

"The creed of stupid brutality, which uselessly destroyed the liberties of Europe and now seeks to spread its cancerous growth through all lands, has met here in Ethiopia its first decisive defeat.

"For neither I nor my people have ever accepted the immoral conquest nor ceased to appeal to the judgment of God and the consciences of the world by offering our lives for freedom.

"It was fitting that the first victim of Axis greed should be the first to be delivered, and that the cynical disregard of the verdict of fifty-two assembled nations (the League of Nations) should first be punished.

MAY 13 1941

"The unprovoked aggression of 1935 proved to be the forerunner of all later aggressions—a herald of world war—and since this first offense began a train of disaster, may its atonement prove to be the beginning of the deliverance for all who love righteousness.

"First among these stands Britain, who is fighting as one who valiantly defends the liberties of us all amidst cruel attacks.

"This brave nation found means to come to the aid of the Ethiopian force still fighting in its mountain stronghold and, in happy unity of effort, drove the enemy from our borders.

"It was a source of joy to me that I was able, before the final assault, to be in the field at the head of my own forces and to reconquer all my country lying west of the Nile.

"Elsewhere other patriots helped forward the brilliant advance of British forces which in Eritrea destroyed the enemy's sure stronghold, while from the south they drove him with a speed unequaled in the history of war from his frontier defenses, though this capital and beyond

"It remains now for us and labor first to recompense our great ally by releasing his forces, helping his defenses, and secondly to build here a State founded on the fear of God, liberty of conscience and democratic institutions."

American Aid Sent Ethiopia

3,000 Tons of Food Shipped to Africa By Red Cross

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia—Allocation of more than 3,000 tons of foodstuffs to Ethiopia by the American Red Cross on or about July 30, is the first indication that aid by the United States to Ethiopia had been contemplated.

AUG 9 1941

According to Ralph Bain, U. S. Red Cross agent in Cairo, about 500 cases of dried milk had been shipped to the Ethiopian capital, and that large shipments of other articles of food and supplies would be kept pouring into the country until the scarcity which now prevails is relieved.

The help of the American Red Cross is ample proof that the "parched earth" theory preached by Stalin and his aides in Russia had been put into practical application long before the Nazi moved against Poland or attacked the Soviet Union. Ethiopian farmers refused to plant crops with which to feed the Italian invader, and as result of this "parched earth" program, the country was on the verge of a nation-wide famine when the Italians were driven out.

HAILE AS A HARBINGER.

MAY 8 1941

What may be a minor news note in the thunder of world events reveals the first of the exiles back home and [illegible] his throne five years almost to the day after Haile Selassie, the Lion of Judah, fled from Mussolini's invading army he is back in Addis Ababa. One is uncertain whether to include the king of Ethiopia as the ruler of a democracy. He was known as a liberal minded man and was recognized in the league of nations as the ruler of a sufficiently civilized country.

When Mussolini tested out the stability of what was then a new world order by jumping on the neck of his fellow club member in the league, among those watching attentively to see what would happen was Adolf Hitler. Nothing but words happened and Adolf decided that tanks and stukas could lick lexicons.

Ethiopia passed into the new Roman empire. Mussolini decorated his probably indifferent king with the title of the old emperors. Haile, having paid some back dues to the league and having received the cold shoulder, retired to England to take his place among the landed gentry. His book appeared to be closed. Now he is the first to regain what was lost. He has it again, the first of the democrats to be rescued—a harbinger for whatever it is worth.

Selassie a Symbol

MAY 10 1941

Restoration of Haile Selassie to the throne of his ancestors in Abyssinia may be a significant symbol. Five years have passed since he was brutally attacked by Italy and driven into exile. Now it is the Italian army and colonists who are to move.

MAY 10 1941

The Lion of Judah is the first victim of the Axis to regain his homeland, but he may be the head of a procession. Certainly the tide will have turned whenever the United States gets into its full stride in aiding the democracies of the world.

The 'Little Man' Comes Back

Haile Selassie has ridden in triumph into the capital from which the Italians routed him in 1935. There's an omen in that for those who care to see it—the beginning, perhaps, of the long road back for the little nations which have been set upon and momentarily conquered.

MAY 10 1941

When Haile Selassie left Addis Ababa he didn't appear to have even a remote chance of ever returning. Appeasement was just getting into its stride and nobody thought then that all which was Italy's boasted might was just so much straw and no more.

A lot of bloody water has flowed under the international bridge since then, and even hard-pressed major democracies haven't the right yet to think much of the far-future when so much of the immediate present is so threatening. Nevertheless, there's something tangible for the future in just having the little man with the big umbrella back in the picture of things international. That's a little bit of something of things as they should be. It may inspire some of the others to begin thinking that maybe they, too, can "come back."

Perhaps Haile Selassie's return to the throne is somewhat of a limited symbol, yet he was one who was terribly wronged by the bigger democracies in that they turned no hand to save him when the jackal sprang on him. That they have at last balanced the scales for him cannot be regarded as insignificant. He was the first to suffer under the totalitarian plan of aggression and the first to be given back what was his.

The umbrella of appeasement is gathering the dust of the ages, but an Ethiopian umbrella becomes now the symbol of justice. Perhaps we are making too much of little, yet if there remains nothing in which to find source for hope and faith our present struggle can hardly be worth while.

Haile Selassie Emphasizes Christian Principles as He Ascends Ethiopian Throne

Says Italians Are Safe in Hands of 'Tolerant' Ethiopian Hands; His Policy Is 'Render Not Evil for Evil'

MAY 30 1941

LONDON BUREAU,
ASSOCIATED NEGRO PRESS.
By RUDOLPH DUNBAR.

LONDON.—(ANP) — It is, indeed, rather significant that only a few weeks ago I pointed out in these columns, the conspicuously act of humanitarism shown by the Abyssinian patriots in their policy of "render not evil for evil." The emperor, upon his triumphal entry into Addis Ababa, fully outlined these Christian principles again.

MAY 30 1941

He said: "Let us, therefore, rejoice, but in the spirit of Christ. Do not reward evil for evil. Do not indulge in the untimely atrocities which the enemy, even in these last days, has been accustomed to practise against us. Do not shame Ethiopia by acts worthy of our enemies. I shall see that they are disarmed and given a safe passage to the place from which they came."

The superlative excellence of this statement can be compared with any of the declarations made in the sermon on the Mount.

Ethiopians 'Ttolerant' With the Enemy

In reading the admirable article of the London Times' Addis Ababa correspondent, which I report below, I was delighted to see that he mentioned the fact that the Italians were safe in the hands of the "tolerant" Ethiopians. This point cannot be too greatly emphasized for throughout the whole of the Abyssinian war, certain elements in England used as arguments against the application of sanctions to Italy, fabricated stories about the barbarity of the Abyssinians.

MAY 30 1941

Conform to Etiquette

In spite of the appalling treatment meted out to the most patriotic Abyssinians by the Italian conquerors, the patriot troops often fighting on their own and, uninfluenced by the restraining hands of British officers, have shown that they are fully capable of conforming to the etiquette as practiced by the most chivalrous foes in European history. The detailed account of the Times' correspondent in Addis Ababa permeated by a spirit of obvious friendliness towards the Ethiopian people can but give pleasure to the millions of Negroes in the British colonies and the Western hemisphere. When Haile Selassie takes his seat once more in a future League of Nations, none of the readers of this article can doubt the moral qualities of the Abyssinians. Qualities shared by all Negroes the world over and which fully justify Ethiopian rights to play their part in re-establishing of civilized standards of existence after the defeat of Hitlerism.

Emperor Selassie Gives Thanks and Weeps

FROM THE LONDON TIMES SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT IN ADDIS ABABA: (MAY 5 —DELAYED).—On the summit of Mount Entotte, above Addis Ababa, in the inner sanctuary of the Church of the Virgin Mary, Haile Selassie kissed holy ground and gave thanks to God this morning for his return to Ethiopia. Tears welled in his eyes as he was leaving the dim sanctuary for the light of day. Outside his second son, the Duke of Harar, affectionately passed his arm round his father's shoulders as he walked down the steps to the crowded courtyard of the famous mountain church

MAY 30 1941

Priests, soldiers, and common people bowed in front of the emperor, kissing Haile Selassie's boots and the soil of Ethiopia on which he was treading after five years in exile. Tiny children dressed in costumes of gay peacock colors passed before him singing and waving palm fronds. The emperor was escorted by richly dressed chiefs under silken and gold-fringed umbrellas of gorgeous crimson, blue, and mauve.

The sacristan, with a halo like a lion's name, entrusted with the whip of maintenance, was nominally but unnecessarily enforcing religious discipline. Near the old stone gate of the church a welcoming arch spanned the road, beside the pillars of which stood, like statues, two deacons wearing gold crowns and glowing raiment.

People of Black Kingdom Have Longing for Religion

It seemed as if I was privileged to withdraw from the troubled world to the remote heights of Entotte to watch the heart of Ethiopia swell to welcome the emperor with fervent and touching religious sincerity and rich splendour. An inborn longing for religion is one of the deepest things in the Ethiopian's national character, and on the mountain-top Haile Selassie again became head of his people and the fount of their inspirations. The mountain ceremony and the endless stream of the wild mop-haired army patriots, riding on mules, and the great and swelling crowds of white-clad singing women and children winding down the steps of the mountain road through the eucalyptus groves was for me the real centre of the exiled ruler.

MAY 30 1941

Lining the streets and houses among the groves of all trees, they came in the thousands, crowding in the procession, headed by East African armored cars, followed by a British colonel on a white Arab horse, leading the escort of an Ethiopian battalion in front of which marched two typical British officers, one a South African Rhodes scholar, the other an East African, workmanlike in their field uniforms as if this were just an interlude in the war.

Police Procede Emperor

Colorful Procession Ends Struggle For Liberty

Ethiopian police in khaki uniforms with white gloves, riding on white chargers, preceded the emperor. He rode in an open car with the commander of the local forces. The car was driven by a picturesque major, whose transport at the beginning of the Gojjam campaign was one of the romances of the Ethiopian struggle for liberty. A brigadier, who is famous as the leader of the British mission which organized the resistance of the patriots, was also in the entourage with the crown prince and the Duke of Harar. The faithful Ras Kassa and the indomitable Ras Abeba occupied places of honor and the troops including representatives of the Sudan Frontier Defence force, and guards of honor of South African, East African, and West African troops were drawn up at various points on the route. The procession passed under a gay cloud of green, gold, and red Ethiopian flags. The trilling voice of the women and the deep boom of drums, storms of handclapping, and the notes of flutes and zithers filled the air, while flowers were dropped into the emperor's car from those on the roadside. The balcony of Menelik's royal palace was the scene of the official ceremony, and after being welcomed by Gen. Cunningham the emperor looked down on the vast cheering crowd and the forest of Ethiopia and British flags beneath the drifting smoke of the salute of 21 guns fired from African artillery with Italian ammunition.

The acclamations died as the emperor stood in a dramatic silence to make a speech in Amharic. After recalling that it was five years since the Fascist forces entered the city, he said: "It is with a sense of deep thankfulness to Almighty God that I stand today in my palace from which the Fascist forces have fled. It is my firm purpose to merit the blessings I have received: first, by showing my gratitude to my Allies, the British for my return and for the benefits I have received by the release of imperial troops for warfare on other fronts and by my supplying them with armed forces wherever they may need them; secondly, by establishing in Ethiopia Christian ethics in government, liberty of conscience and democratic institutions."

A Day For Rejoicing No Time For Atrocities

MAY 30 1941

This was a day of rejoicing and triumph, he said. "Let us, therefore, rejoice, but in the spirit of Christ. Do not reward evil for evil. Do not indulge in the untimely atrocities which the enemy, even in these last days, has been accustomed to practise against us. Do not shame Ethiopia by acts worthy of our enemies. I shall see that they are disarmed and given a safe passage to the place from which they came."

Urged Forbearance

The emperor urged forbearance towards enemies and the treatment of allies with the kindness shown to a brother. He called on the Ethiopians to unite in everlasting friendship and amity with Great Britain to oppose the dragon of Godless brutality which was assailing mankind.

Then the emperor, wearing the khaki field uniform of a general of his army entered the palace, where, among rich carpets and seated on an ornate green, gold, and red throne, he received the British officers. There Gen. Cunningham drank to the future peace, prosperity, and health of the emperor and his family.

When I left, the emperor was again alone with his people as I had seen him a few hours earlier on the mountain top. Soldiers and people together were coming towards him bowing low and joyfully kissing each other and kissing the emperor's feet.

While the Italians under British protection and safe in the hands of the tolerant Ethiopians were listening in their own houses to the revived spirit of freed Ethiopia, the Conquering Lion of Judah, the first victim of the Axis to be restored by the British and their Allies in this war for human freedom was triumphantly re-instated among his rejoicing peoples. Tonight his patriots are feasting on raw meat in the hills. Haile Selassie remembers that his country is still at war and that the war is the grim background of his return. To final victory he will bend all his energies and his indomitable spirit with the support of his people.

Hailie Selassie Returning To His Throne

APR 9 1941

The news that the Ethiopian flag was hoisted on "Menelik's glass-fronted Parliament" after the capture of Addis Ababa by the South African and Imperial forces will be received with great joy and gratitude by all intelligent Africans. It is a well known fact that after the conquest of Abyssinia by the Italians, Africans became so depressed and so disheartened that they could not visualize the return of Emperor Haile Selassie to the throne of the King of Kins, after five years of his exile. They thought that Abyssinia, the only country in Africa which up to 1935 had remained an African state ruled and controlled by black men only, had slipped out of their hands into European hands. That, indeed, was the general belief and no one dreamed that the conquering Italians would not be allowed to reap the fruits of their victory over a practically defenceless nation of black warriors. No one dreamed that Marshals Badoglio and Graziani would live to see the restoration of Ethiopia to its original owners. Nor did anybay anticipate that Signor Mussolini would be unable to defend his new empire "with a forest of million baynets."

But the miracle has happened. Ethiopia has been freed because there is a Power in the universe mightier than the mightiest power on earth. Neither Hitler nor Mussolini can overthrow the forces of righteousness, justice and truth. In this war they will undoubtedly, do a great deal of damage but in the end they will share the fate of all the tyrants of history. They have chosen the path of destruction and they cannot escape the Nemisis of retribution, because "those who rely on the sword will perish by the sword."

Little did Mussolini dream that before the wounds which his "army of civilisation" had inflicted upon Africa, had healed, Hailie Selassie would be returning triumphantly to the throne of the Lion of Judah. He himself had planned to enter Addis Ababa in triumph immediately after the Italo-Abyssinian conflict, but the unbroken spirit and soul of the Abyssinian people prevented him from undertaking this project. And, thanks to the magnanimity of the British Government, Hailie Selassie will soon enter Addis Ababa with the pomp and glory that will mark a turning point in the history of Abyssinia. Both he and the Empress are planning a new order for their country. No doubt, they recognise the importance of freeing Abyssinia from the chains of custom and tradition in order to westernize her life. In the past Ethiopia has been accused of perpetuating the system of slavery. This accusation has been made not only by tht enemies but also by the the enemies but also by the friends, of Abyssinia.

It is gratifying, therefore, to note that the Emperor has decided to create a new order with the help and advice of Great Britain and it is to be hoped that slavery would be abolished, thus removing a blot on the good name of this ancient kingdom. The Emperor no doubt, remembers that one of the reasons advanced by Mussolini in justifying his unprovoked attack upon the independence of Ethiopia, was that she was barbarous and, therefore, needed the civilising influence of Rome Of course, this was only a pretext, but it cannot be denied that in this civilised age no country can retain its primitive life without becoming a prey to the vultures of civilisation. The new Ethiopia must be a land that will play its part not only in the advancement of the African continent but also in the creation of a new order in the world.

The task before the Emperor is a gigantic one, but it is a task that must be performed, if Abyssinia is to occupy her rightful place among the nations of the world. The Emperor should follow the example of the leaders of Japan and Turkey who, finding that the backwardness of their countries was due to ignorance and to stagnation brought about by customs and traditions, decided to westernize their peoples by giving them education which in turn give them freedom of thought and action.

Ethiopia must be uprooted from the anchor of its ancient life, and be started on the road to civilisation. And we are glad that both the Emperor and the Empress recognise this important fact.

ON TENDER FEELINGS

Consider the Abyssinians, Says Pegler

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—At a time when the King of Kings is chasing the Bum of Bums out of Abyssinia it is fitting to suggest that the feelings of any Abyssinians who are among us deserve the same consideration as the tender sensibilities of those who insist on regarding themselves as Italians, though Americans, too.

WESTBROOK PEGLER.

Nevertheless, there is still a superstition that to applaud the Negus and the Greeks and British and laugh at the Duce in full flight is to create disunity in the United States.

In Providence, R. I., in fact, an alien settlement giving devotion to the Duce, or Bum, has succeeded in excluding from the local American press articles which fail in respect to Mussolini and his vanishing invincibles. Such consideration for a foreign group, loyal to a potential and more than half-declared enemy of the United States, is elaborate courtesy, to be sure, but is equally as rude to our Abyssinians, if any, and our Greeks and Britain, as it is polite to the Italians.

Is there any other country so devilled by fears of hurting the feelings of persons who profess to be loyal citizens but, at the same time, resent and attempt to punish expressions of opinion concerning its enemies?

What Rights Have Italians?

If there are Italians in this country, what rights have they here which Americans in Italy are not accorded? And why should anyone in the United States be expected to speak or write kindly or refrain from expressing himself unkindly regarding the Duce, or Bum, and the Italian people? Should this country go to war, the Italian people will be the enemy along with Mussolini.

It is persistently argued that the conduct of the Bum's invincibles on all fronts is not a measure of their soldierly qualities. Aside from the fact that both the French and British said years before this war that Mussolini would need two M. P.'s for every soldier, the fact remains that these persons who have been advancing to the rear with such irresistible dash are indubitably Italian soldiers. They are not Swedes, Spaniards or Russians but Italians, most of whom have been trained for soldiering ever since they were children, and they have indubitably been running like thieves and, to make matters more humiliating, running from a breed whom the Bum of Bums described as miserable cowards, to wit, the British.

Why Should They Be Spared?

So what does that make the Italians and why should the Italians, alone, of all peoples, be spared appropriate comment by a people whose form of government, institutions and character have been vilified by the Italian government for years?

And if we are to concede that Americans may be, in some degree, Italians, too, then it follows that other Americans may be Abyssinian, Greek or British in the same degree and entitled to equal consideration. That being granted, it was a serious discourtesy to them to refrain from recognizing their remarkable exploits against the Bum of Bums at the expense of the Italian soldiers.

What, for example, are the feelings of a Greek-American, granting for the sake of argument that hyphenism is consistent with American citizenship, when he is asked to pretend that the enemy are not Italian soldiers but, in the language of the old lynching stories, a crowd of unidentified men?

Our Greek-American friend wants to emit a few cheers for the home folks, and in doing so he certainly wants to give them full credit for slapping the ears off the most bombastic and ridiculous fourflusher that the world has ever known, who happens to be an Italian, the ruler of the Italian nation and the commander of an Italian army which has been strutting and bragging for 15 years.

They Should Take It.

It does seem that anyone who remains, somehow, loyal to the Bum and Italy should be sportsman enough to take it, now that the Abyssinians, those scabby, semi-savage dog-eaters, the Greeks and the craven British have exposed the fraud. But, in any case, anyone calling himself American who still persists in being somewhat Italian, cannot erase the fact that those are Italian soldiers who have made this humiliating failure after so much threatening and boasting.

And one may be sure that if they had won a couple of these campaigns nobody would be explaining that, after all, they weren't Italians. Nobody said that when the Bum of Bums took Addis Ababa from the King of Kings five years ago.

Some of the issues are new in design and all differ from the old issues in bearing the overprint "Libre" (free), in token that French Equatorial West Africa pays allegiance to Free France.

Emperor Abolishes Slavery, Serfdom In Sweeping Reform

By Our Foreign Correspondent

LONDON—(Censored)—Oct. 23—Special—Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, will go down in history not only as one of the greatest statesmen of his generation who towered head and shoulders over his contemporaries in an age of deception and double crossing, but as a great Emancipator like Lincoln and Wilberforce.

In an imperial decree issued from his palace in Addis Ababa, the Emperor has declared the abolition of slavery and serfdom throughout his realm.

The Emperor has also ordered the creation of an Anti-Slavery Bureau and special courts to supervise the execution of his edict.

This action culminates the great reform instituted in 1924, when Haile Selassie was Regent and known to the world as Ras Tafari. In that year he promulgated a law as a first step to the emancipation of slaves and invited the Anti-Slavery Society in England to send him advisers. This commission was headed by Lord Noel-Buxton, grandson of the abolitionist, Buxton.

WAR HALTED REFORMS

From 1935, Haile Selassie faced with war with Italy was unable to complete his social reforms and when Mussolini's hordes over-ran Abyssinia, the Fascists destroyed all the initial work instituted by the Emperor. In order to win the support of the races and other feudal elements, the Italians permitted and encouraged the old abuses to be practiced. Now the Emperor has had to start all over again.

Accompanying the law abolishing the legal status of slavery, Haile Selassie has ordered the reform of the "Gabar" system. This is an old-established part of the feudal social structure of Abyssinia handed down from the middle-ages. In future all "gabars" or serfs must be paid. Whereas formerly they tilled the land of their feudal masters without payment receiving part of the crop for services rendered.

REFUGEES LEAVE JERUSALEM

The last batch of Abyssinian exiles are now on their way back to Ethiopia. They constitute the remnant of those who followed the Emperor into exile and settled in Jerusalem, where the Coptic church owns much property and maintains a religious community.

The party consist of ex-Ministers of State, noblemen and priests together with their families.

From the Old Order to the New

From Our Special Correspondent in Addis Ababa

Addis Ababa to-day is a curious place. The streets of the capital of Ethiopia are thronged with British soldiers and officials, who are maintaining order and government in the country, but the outward façade of the Italian régime remains. Streets and buildings still bear their Italian names. Fascist slogans catch the eye from the walls of the houses. The leading shops, cafés, and hotels are served by their Italian staffs. Meanwhile the Emperor Haile Selassie, surrounded by his Ministers and retainers, rules in his palace, a monarch in more than name, though without formal sanction.

This anomalous situation is typical of the transition through which Ethiopia is passing. The Italians, of whom there are upwards of 40,000 in the country, not counting prisoners of war, are to disappear as soon as their evacuation can be arranged. It is the Emperor's wish to rid the country of every possibility of Italian influence. Ethiopians are to be substituted so far as possible for the Italian shopkeepers and artisans, and where Ethiopians of sufficient experience are not available their place will probably be taken by Greeks, Armenians, or Indians, these being the foreign races other than Italian which have gained the strongest footing in the country. However, while waiting for the ships to take them away, the Italians are much in evidence. Apart from their role in the towns they are found driving lorries or supervising road-gangs on the country roads, or even occasionally surviving as settlers on their plots of land, though most of their stock has usually been annexed by Ethiopian neighbours. It is fair proof that the average Ethiopian is not possessed of a revengeful spirit that the Italian, provided he has got nothing worth appropriating, can live and move about in the country in comparative security.

DUAL CONTROL

An adjustment is also to be made shortly in the indeterminate relations between the Emperor and the British authorities. As things are at present the responsibility for the government of the country rests on the British officials, but inside this framework the Emperor is in process of setting up his own administration, which is beginning to function, sometimes concurrently with, sometimes independently of, British authority. This species of dual control, the difficulties of which can be understood, is to be ended by the conclusion of an agreement between the Emperor and the British Government in which the sovereignty of the former will be clearly recognized, but which will also include guarantees that the assistance which Great Britain is ready to give the Emperor in establishing order and good government in his realm will be used to the best advantage.

The terms of the agreement are taking some time to work out, but its general form can be discerned from the means already established to accomplish them. British officers have begun to train a new Ethiopian army and police force. The former, which is to include small technical units and artillery, is designed as a handy striking force which could be used to quell any local revolt or disorder. The policy pursued in raising this force is to discard the "patriot" formations which played a useful part in the reconquest and recruit afresh. There is no lack of material, for the Ethiopian has warlike instincts. His chief drawback in European eyes is his intolerance of discipline. Nevertheless a useful start has been made, particularly with the police force, in the recruiting of which a standard of intelligence as well as physique has been imposed. Addis Ababa is now exclusively patrolled by these Ethiopian policemen. They present a smart appearance on duty, and under a well selected band of British officers have already done much to check the licence and marauding which at first prevailed after the Italian collapse.

Another successful instance of British-Ethiopian collaboration has been the institution of mixed courts, presided over by British Judges, to try criminal cases. British with experience as barristers are acting as public prosecutors in these courts. Here is a feature new to Ethiopian justice. Previously all cases were fought out between accuser and accused. The Ethiopian Judges welcome the innovation, the usefulness of which they have been quick to appreciate.

The Emperor is plainly chafing at the delay which prevents him from being formally recognized as the independent ruler of his people. So long as the agreement remains unconcluded he feels that he is being kept in leading-strings and is inclined to resent it. For their part, many of the British officials who are due to enter Ethiopian service are uncomfortable because they too have no formal standing. They are the Emperor's servants without having been appointed by him, and can make only a moral appeal to his authority. It is in the interest of both parties that an end should be made as soon as possible to this ambiguous state of affairs.

A FINAL DANGER

Nemesis has overtaken the Italians, and they have lost the work of five years on which they had poured out millions. Some of it will benefit the Ethiopians, but by no means all the results of the Italian occupation can be counted as blessings.

The Italian conquest deprived the Emperor of several of his most trusty rases. Still more deplorable is the loss of many of the educated youth, who were deliberately murdered by the Italians as a reprisal for the attempt on Graziani's life.

Finally the war, which is not yet finished on Ethiopian soil, has stimulated lawlessness and disorder. Free rein has been given to the instincts for pillage of large sections of the population. Quantities of arms and ammunition have fallen into the hands of men who may use them to defy the Emperor's authority if they find it irksome. If anybody imagines that Haile Selassie's schemes for the advancement of his country will go forward smoothly and progressively now that it is rid of the Italians they are doomed to disappointment. There are bound to be checks and setbacks.

To compensate for the increased difficulty in putting his house in order the Emperor has now gained an ally in Great Britain. It is important that the collaboration between the two should be smooth and regular. The British Government intend to give the help required in the most effective and practical form. Upon the Emperor himself depends the use made of it. He is naturally somewhat jealous of his new-found sovereignty and apprehensive of his country becoming a mere protectorate. The establishment of such relations between him and his British counsellors as will admit of advice being regularly conveyed and accepted without disturbing harmony may be a delicate matter, but the experience of Egypt and Iraq shows that this form of diplomacy, though not always easy to sustain, can produce the desired results.

Trade Prospects in Ethiopia

The most encouraging sign that Ethiopia is settling down to peaceful pursuits is the revival of trade, which is beginning to assume promising proportions. Exports to date amount to about £45,000, which, considering that the marketing of coffee is at present very restricted, is by no means a bad beginning. After hides, coffee is Ethiopia's principal export article.

Import licences granted to date exceed £450,000; this figure is inconclusive, since goods applied for are not invariably ordered, but, in addition to goods imported against licence, a considerable quantity crosses the frontiers of Eritrea and Somaliland uncontrolled. A large part of the import trade is for the use of the army of occupation, but there is a strong demand for cotton goods and other necessities from the interior. One leading firm reckons to have sold £37,000 worth of cotton sheeting last month, a fair result for one month of the rainy season so soon after the cessation of hostilities.

Trade is at present greatly hampered because Jibuti is closed to traffic. Goods arrive chiefly through Berbera, a slow and costly route which necessitates transshipment at Aden. Nevertheless, it is gratifying that importers are prepared to risk capital to this extent under present conditions, and argues a fair measure of confidence in the future of the country."—Times telegram from Addis Ababa.

ETHIOPIA'S FUTURE IS TAKING SHAPE

Law and Order Under British Guidance Is Being Re-Established

ALL ITALIANS ARE TO GO

Meanwhile More Than 40,000, Not Counting War Prisoners, Can Come as Usual

NOV 4 1941

The correspondent of The Times of London, who entered Addis Ababa with the British troops a few months ago, recently wrote about the Ethiopian capital and the dual form of government now in vogue throughout the country:

"Addis Ababa today is a curious place. The streets are thronged with British soldiers and officials, who are maintaining order and government in the country, but the outward facade of the Italian regime remains. Streets and buildings still bear their Italian names. Fascist slogans catch the eye from the walls of the houses. The leading shops, cafes and hotels are served by their Italian staffs.

Meanwhile, the Emperor Haile Selassie, surrounded by his Ministers and retainers, rules in his palace, a monarch in more than name, though without formal sanction.

"This anomalous situation is typical of the transition through which Ethiopia is passing. The Italians, of whom there are upward of 40,000 in the country, not counting prisoners of war, are to disappear as soon as their evacuation can be arranged. It is the Emperor's wish to rid the country of every possibility of Italian influence.

NOV 4 1941

Natives to Take Over

"Ethiopians are to be substituted so far as possible for the Italian shopkeepers and artisans, and where Ethiopians of sufficient experience are not available their place will probably be taken by Greeks, Armenians or Indians, these being the foreign races other than Italian which have gained the strongest footing in the country.

"However, while waiting for the ships to take them away, the Italians are much in evidence. "As soon as the agreement is signed, it is foreseen, the Deputy Chief Political Officer for Ethiopia will assume the title of British Agent, while his staff of experts on finance, trade, justice, etc., will rank as advisers to the Ethiopian Government in their respective spheres.

"Similarly the district political officers, at present distributed at the rate of three or four to a province, will remain at the elbow of the local ras, or governor, to stimulate the growth of a more modern and regulated administration than existed in the old days before 1936.

SELASSIE HOPE IN BRITISH PLAN

African Opposition To Foreign Control Is London's Problem

NOV 7 1941

BY RUSSELL LANDSTROM

LONDON — (Correspondence of the Special News Service)—The British government is working with Haile Selassie to accomplish a rebirth of Ethiopia as the African leader of Africa.

The Foreign Office, relying heavily upon the amenable "king of kings," believes this can be brought off successfully.

Sober judgment elsewhere in Britain's capital is inclined to agree.

British military commanders, fresh from East Africa, have brought to London assurances that English-Ethiopian collaboration is a happy augury for the post-war future of a land sorely tested.

Editorial writers in Fleet Street have commended Whitehall's cautious policy, saying that haste should be made slowly.

But all is not sweet concord. In both London and Addis Ababa voices have been raised against "foreign control," however benevolent, of Ethiopia, nothing less than an immediate and full restoration of the country's ancient independence would be satisfactory, these objectors protest.

In strongly patriotic Ethiopian quarters, British policy regarding Ethiopian affairs is described by some as Indian-giving.

The issue was projected into public and private discussions after the recent meeting of the Inter-Allied War Council. Persons of authority were asked why Ethiopia was not represented on the council. Inspired by the earlier careful political definitions of Anthony Eden, secretary of state for foreign affairs, the reply was that "no one was qualified" to sit for Ethiopia at such a conference, that until such time as Ethiopia was reinvested with sovereignty it should be assumed that Britain was looking after her interests.

Foreign Control Opposed

Not long ago a staunch champion of autonomy in Ethiopia asserted that "the political battle" to restore the nation's old independence appeared to be only beginning.

"At present attempts are being made," this source said, "to compel the Ethiopian government to agree that in all cases the emperor and his government will accept the decision of such foreign advisers, not necessarily British, as the British military control or his majesty's government may decide to appoint.

"This is tantamount to foreign control of Ethiopia and the death of her ancient independence."

On the face of it, however, Haile Selassie looks more to the future than to the past. Broadcasting to his people on the occasion of the Feast of Maskal recently, he said:

"People of Ethiopia, we shall not desist from working for the good administration of our people. But you must all realize that time is necessary to restore a house that has been in ruins for five years.

"You are doubtless aware that discussions are in progress with the government of Great Britain that will enable us to achieve our goal.

"The work that we are carrying out for our good people must not lead to spurious liberty but to real liberty."

The celebration of the Feast of Maskal, which falls at the end of the rainy season and the beginning of Ethiopia's second Spring, coincided with the disclosure that the Italian garrison at Wolchefit had surrendered and that the warfare in East Africa was practically over.

Thus the way was paved further for something approximating long-range planning of a new Ethiopia, which authorities believe is bound to be essentially different from the old regime of absolutism.

Tribes Subdued By Cruelty

The autocracy of the modern Ethiopian empire was established by Emperor Menelik before the turn of this century, and cruel and fearful, according to historians, were the methods he employed to subdue the various native tribes. He dealt no less harshly with the Italians when they marched in only to be soundly beaten.

Menelik's successor, his grandson, Lij Yasu, accused by the Allies of playing ball with Germany and Turkey in the World War, was dethroned by the revolting Ras Tafari, who assumed the kingship as Haile Selassie.

Haile Selassie, a nephew of Menelik and a legendary descendant of Solomon and Sheba, had the absolute powers of his predecessors, but in him the Oriental conception of monarchy was qualified by a willingness to apply Western ways.

Consequent changes in political and economic affairs were introduced; yet there scarcely was a foreshadowing of democratic institutions. Subject peoples of the empire continued to live under despotic scorn and slight.

Mussolini's invading legions destroyed that empire, forced Haile Selassie to seek refuge in England and took their own brand of modernism to Ethiopia.

Guided by British advisers, and himself enjoying a greater prestige than ever before, Haile Selassie has set out to preserve whatever accomplishments of the Italian conquest may be deemed beneficial, to work toward a national integrity and security far beyond those existing before the conquest.

The status of the emperor, as well as that of his country, is ambiguous. Attended by his ministers and retainers, he holds sway in his palace, less than a formal emperor and more than puppet king.

Many Supporters Restive

Is Ethiopia, in effect, a British protectorate, and Haile Selassie largely a monarchial instrument of British will? Those are not official descriptions; rather are they the inferential terms of persons hot for immediate removal of all alien influence from Ethiopian affairs.

Despite repeated assertions that Haile Selassie sees eye-to-eye with the British on the question of Ethiopian policy, that he favors compromise and a cooperation which limits his authority, many of his supporters, it is reported, have grown restive.

Recent information from Addis Ababa said that the emperor was impatiently awaiting the day when he would be formally proclaimed an independent ruler.

The same reports call attention to similar feelings on the part of British officials in Ethiopia.

Meanwhile, British talent and counsel admittedly are needed to maintain the modern systems of communications installed by the Italians; to train the emperor's troops and police; to continue the work of improving the administration of justice in the courts; to carry on the job of evacuating thousands of Italians; to stamp out outlawry and disorder which still flourish among some groups of the population; to handle competently the dozens of problems arising from a difficult period of transition.

40,000 Italians Wait Ouster by Selassie

NOV 15 1941

ADDIS ABĀBA — (ANP) — While British officials have taken over the job of maintaining order and government here, Emperor Haile Selassie is in the process of setting up his own administration which is beginning to function concurrently with, and independently of, British authority.

5-6a

The Emperor's first job will be to rid the country of the 40,000 Italians still remaining and every indication of Italian influence.

Jobs to Ethiopians

Ethiopians will be substituted as far as possible for Italian shopkeepers and artisans. Where Ethiopians of sufficient experience are not available, their places will be taken by Greeks, Americans or Indians.

Many Italians, in the meantime, while waiting for ships to take them back to Italy, retain jobs of driving lorries, supervising road gangs on the country roads, and even have plots of land, although most of their livestock has been taken over by Ethiopian neighbors.

with, and sometimes independently of , British authority.

The streets, which are thronged with British soldiers and officials, still bear fascist slogans. The Italians are also leaving behind a system of mails and telegraphs which will be temporarily maintained by the British.

It is the Emperor's wish to "rid the country of every possibility of Italian influence," the Times journalist states.

Ethiopian Emperor Runs Sub-State Under British

NOV 15 1941

Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia is operating his government within the framework of the British authority, according to a statement appearing in Tuesday's New York Times, quoting a London correspondent who entered Addis Ababa with the British a few months ago.

The writer states that the more than 40,000 Italians in the country, not counting war prisoners, are being evacuated as quickly as possible with their positions being taken over by Ethiopians.

When there are no natives available, Greeks, Armenians or Indians, the strongest non-Italian foreign elements in the country, take the positions.

Want No Italians

Responsibility of government, says the correspondent, is with the British, but the Emperor, surrounded by his ministers and retainers in his palace, is setting up his own administration, which sometimes functions concurrently

BRITISH PLAN TO MAKE ETHIOPIA A PROTECTORATE

NOV 15 1941

(By Our London Correspondent)

LONDON, England, (censored), Nov. 13—British policy in Abyssinia, which has been the subject of discussion in the House of Commons recently, is explained by Prof. A. Berriedale Keith, foremost authority on Constitutional law and international affairs at Edinburgh university.

(1) In this crisis of our affairs, when American sympathy is essential, it is disconcerting to learn from The Times special correspondent in Addis Ababa that the Emperor is to be required to enter into an agreement utterly inconsistent with the first point of the Atlantic Charter, in which we disclaim aggrandisement, territorial, or other.

PROTECTORATE FOR EMPEROR

(2) It is stated that under the new regime the Emperor himself is to be required to accept the advice of a British agent, while the local governors will equally be required to act as instructed by British political officers. We are, in effect, to exercise a protectorate, such as Lord Cromer exercised over Egypt, or as is now exercised in Malaya.

(3) Our protectorate is not justified by the aid we have given to the Emperor to regain his kingdom. It seems to have been forgotten that we are still under the obligation, sanctioned by Act of Parliament, of Article 10 of the League Covenant to "respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence" of Ethiopia, and that the assistance we have given to the Emperor was evoked by the urgent necessity of securing his assistance in our task of saving our territories and the Sudan from Italian conquest, and securing our hold on the Suez Canal. Lord Milner and Lloyd George as far back as 1919 had warned the Cabinet of the gravity of the danger to the Empire if Italy became possessed of Ethiopia.

TO BE MADE PUPPET RULER

NOV 15 1941

Concluding his appeal to the Foreign Office that Haile Selassie should not be turned into a puppet ruler but treated as a full sovereign, Professor Heith says: 'It is to be hoped this plan of placing the Emperor under tutelage will be abandoned, and that we will forthwith adopt the only course compatible with honor by concluding a treaty of alliance and establishing diplomatic relations, with arrangements for the grant of advice and aid in external and internal affairs alike, the Emperor to remain free to accept or reject that advice. He should be given as he desires, the aid of skilled officials to replace those massacred by the Italians, but they should be his servants, and execute his policy, not the orders of the British government.

"His enlightenment is well known and his action regarding slavery has received just praise. . . The difficulty of the rapid eradication of domestic slavery is sufficiently shown by the fact that it was abolished in the British territory of Sierra Leone only in 1926, and that legislation against it was found necessary in 1930 in the Gambia and the Gold Coast."

HAILE'S VERDICT TO DETERMINE NATION'S FATE

England Places Judges, Prosecutors In Courts; Disarms Troops

NOV 22 1941

(By Our London Correspondent)

LONDON — (Censored — Abyssinia is facing a new political crisis. Pressure is being brought upon the Emperor to accept a British administration under an agent with compulsory power in the capital and European administrators in the province.

Should Haile Selassie agree, Ethiopia's independence as a full sovereign state will be destroyed. Commenting upon the grave situation facing the country, the Ethiopia News says that "The administration of Ethiopia is in the hands of British Crown Colony official soldiers not working under the Foreign secretary (Mr. Eden) as would be the case if Ethiopia were recognized as an allied country, but under the war office as though Ethiopia were still a part of Italian territory, just like Italian Somaliland, Eritrea, and Lybia."

Patriots Disarmed

Ethiopian armies are being forcibly disarmed, and "The Times" has disclosed it is intended to disband the Ethiopian patriotic troops, including (1) the patriots who fought for five years alone against the Italians; (2) forces trained in the Sudan and other British territories under Anglo-Ethiopian auspices; (3) forces trained by British missions sent into Ethiopia to assist Ethiopia resistance to the Italians. Aready force has been used to disarm our Ethiopian Allies, who gladly welcomed British troops but refused to disarm . . .

"The Times" says it is intended to raise new armies in Ethiopia, not under the auspices of the Emperor, but under the British agent.

British judges have been appointed to preside over Ethiopian courts with British barristers as prosecutors.

NOV 22 1941

The administration is, in fact, being taken out of the hands of the Emperor and his people, says the newspaper.

Not To Return

Dr. C. W. Martin, the Abyssinian minister who went to India when the British government refused to restore his diplomatic status following Italy's entry into the war, will not be returning to London.

He is in Dehra Dun, India. He has applied for visas for himself and children to be ready to return to Abyssinia, but the British authorities have refused visas either to proceed to Addis Ababa or to return to London, says the "Ethiopia News."

Dr. Martin's eldest sons, Joseph and Ben, were murdered by Italian Fascists during the massacre of Abyssinians in Addis Ababa following an attack upon Marshal Graziana, Viceroy, in 1936. Both boys were engineers and studied in England before they returned to Abyssinia to serve in the air force against the Italians.

Ras Gugsa Fights British

Selassie's Daughter To Make Appeal in Broadcast

FEB 22 1941

LONDON — An appeal to America on behalf of the Ethiopian Red Cross was scheduled to be made in a special broadcast at 10:30 a. m. (Eastern standard time) Thursday, February 20, by Princess Tsahai, daughter of Emperor Haile Selassie. The princess, who will speak over the network of the British Broadcasting Company and American stations, is a graduate nurse of Queen Charlotte's Hospital here.

Princess Tsahai is 19 years old, and expects to return to Ethiopia and establish improved nursing methods there. A British Red Cross unit is already operating in Ethiopia.

ROME—Ras Gugsa, Ethiopian traitor and disgraced son-in-law of Emperor Haile Selassie, is again in the news. This time, according to a report by the Italian official news agency, Stefani, Ras Haile Selassie Gugsa and Ras Seyum Mangasha are rallying their forces "somewhere" in Ethiopia to help the Fascist armies stem the tide of the British and Ethiopian sweep to victory.

Summoning all Ethiopians with the beat of their sacred drums to rise in defense of their conquerors, the Italians, Ras Mangasha, is reported to have declared: "People of Aduwa, know that everywhere — Rome, Addis Ababa, Asmara, I say everywhere—the Italian Government has respected and honored me, showing the greatest courtesy. My devotion to Italy is unlimited and I, followed by yourselves, will go against her enemies bearing the Italian flag in my right hand."

In the Italo-Ethiopian war (1935 to 1936) Ras Gugsa betrayed his country and father-in-law, Emperor Haile Selassie, and went over to the Fascist side. His reward by the Fascists was great. He was made governor of Tigre Province at a monthly salary of 20,000 lire, or $1,010; given to luxurious Fiat automobiles and pompous trip to Italy, where he was promised the throne of Ethiopia, which never matured.

Gugsa, who is about 26 years old, is a pop-eyed and fuzzy-haired individual. He is fond of gaudy uniforms, flashy clothes and sweet-smelling perfumes.

In the meantime, it was unofficially reported here from Cairo that the Ethiopian patriots have ousted the Italians from the important stronghold of Dangela, 175 miles from Addis Ababa and 50 miles south-west of Lake Tana. The capture of prisoners and large stores of war materials has been reported.

U. S. Air Bases In Liberian Republic

DISPATCHES from Washington point out the likelihood of the establishment of an air base in Liberia by the American government. It would not be surprising if another far-flung American defense base were placed in the African republic, for strategic reasons all to well known to readers who've followed the war developments and the statements and actions of President Roosevelt.

It would be rather appropriate for Liberia to be such a base and thereby serve the cause of democracy and freedom, since it was set up as a republic under American auspices so that freed slaves in this country could have freedom, independence, and an opportunity at self-government.

Liberia has not been directly touched by the present war, and probably for the reason of its traditional relationship with this powerful nation.

Liberia is reported reliably to be strongly anti-Nazi, and naturally, for everything about the totalitarian governments is inimical to its interests and foreign to its own principles. If the necessity arises, it can be taken for granted that Liberia will cooperate fully with the United States in any defense move. It would be a gracious gesture of gratitude for it to do so.

Neutrality Is Official State

By ALVIN E. WHITE

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—Liberia, the Negro republic of western Africa, is in no immediate danger from Nazi influence, according to officials of the department of state who have had the situation under close observation for some time.

Immediately upon the declaration of war, Liberia issued a statement on its neutrality, which has been strictly enforced. So much so that the Liberian government has almost bent over backward to keep from offending the warring nations.

British officials, however, have not been very helpful in the enforcement of this neutrality and in one instance there was a very close shave, causing the United States government to back up the Liberians in their stand.

COUNTRY SUFFERS ECONOMICALLY

Economically, the Liberians have suffered from the war in that their trade with the adjacent French possessions has been cut off. French territory almost completely surrounds Liberia with the exception of the northwest border which adjoins Sierra Leone, a British territory.

At the time, the few Germans who were left in Liberia, merchants and traders who had been there for years, were doing their best to keep the little trade they had. Intense trading was done with a product known as 'piassava' a hemp like material which is manufactured from fibers of a Liberia plant. Germany had been buying this when the British stepped in through their charge d'affaires and precipitated a very unpleasant situation.

Because the British maintain a strong blockade of the West African coast, it is almost impossible for any vessels other than those of the British and her allies to enter the few ports Liberia has. At the same time, Britain maintains a widespread blacklist of nations suspected of dealing with the Axis powers and once threatened to put Liberia in this category. Only the insistence of this government is said to have prevented such a step.

Information from this section of the West Coast is rather meager, it is reported, since the United States maintains a man at Daker, in the Sengal and another at Lagos, some thousand miles apart in a rough wild territory.

FIRESTONE RUBBER INTERESTS

United States interests in Liberia are centered in the Firestone Rubber plantations, which have increased their output several hundred percent in the past four or five years; the Bank of Monrovia, and the United States Trading Company. Few Americans are in the country, so no problem of evacuation would be involved should there come a time for such action. Scattered throughut the country are a few Americans—"drifters" as the state department calls them— who would naturally seek to get back to this country in the event of trouble.

A short while ago, there was some trouble about the natives, but this was quickly put down and now Liberia seems to "be on the right side of the fence" according to department.

One of the difficulties Liberia faces, like the United States, is transportation. The lack of facilities to transport the few products of the country has proven a serious handicap. However, it is interesting to note that the development of the port of Marshall, just below Monrovia, has been one of the outstanding achievements of the country to date. Marshall has surpassed Monrovia as a seaport and although a smaller town, has made great progress in the past few years.

STERN MEASURES TAKEN

Little evidence of political intrigue is found in Monrovia, so stern are the measures adopted by the government. Although all of the first class nations have representatives in the little town, there is little political entanglement and the general situation is well in hand.

Entrusted to the care of Lester A. Walton, the affairs of this government are capably administered.

Reports to the state department cover a wide range of topics, much of which is confidential and cannot be released to the general public. However, Liberia has not been considered as a possibility for the construction of air bases, although there have been many reports to that effect.

Any fear the Liberians may have that Germay and the Axis powers are headed toward the country may be dispelled, it is reported, because the Axis has its hands full elsewhre at present, anl any drive on the African counties would have to be a concentrated effort, involving the territory in Africa, but any moves in this direction would involve Germany directly with the United States, which will not brook any infringment upon Libera nor its sovereign rights nor territory.

Columbia S C State

A BASE IN LIBERIA?

An interesting possibility increasingly discussed is an American base in Liberia; the utility of which, obviously, would relate to possible German activities at Dakar and in the Azores and Canary islands. Probably the necessary consent of the Negro republic would be obtainable under some pressure, because it was under American patronage it was founded and the country has continuously enjoyed more or less of countenance and aid from the United States. The establishment of such a base on the west coast of Africa would be regarded by Hitler as definitely an "overt act" against the Axis, which in fact it of course would be. Unprosperous Liberia probably would much prefer not to be drawn into the quarrels of the great powers. Its back country continues undeveloped; there are no railroads and almost no practicable highways, though the construction of a main arterial highway was begun in 1940.

U. S. Protecting Negro Republic, But British Unfriendly

Lester A. Walton, Roosevelt's Envoy, Said Capably Handling Situation Fraught With Danger To Little African Nation

Entrusted to the care of Lester A. Walton, the affairs of this government are capably administered.

Reports to the state department cover a wide range of topics, much of which is confidential and cannot be released to the general public. However, Liberia has not been considered as a possibility for the construction of aid bases, although there have been many reports to that effect.

Any fear the Liberians may have that Germany and the Axis powers are headed toward the country may be dispelled, it is reported, because the Axis has its hands full elsewhere at present, and any drive on the African countries would have to be a concentrated effort, involving the stirring up of the natives. Germany has had designs on regaining its former territory in Africa, but any moves in this direction would involve Germany directly with the United States, which will not brook any infringement upon Liberia nor its sovereign rights nor territory.

Roberts Park, Peake Park

The Housing Authority's selections, on the recommendations of its Negro advisory committee, of Roberts Park and Peake Park as the names of its first two Negro slum clearance projects in Norfolk has the happy effect of connecting these enterprises with old Norfolk history and of commemorating the notable work of two Norfolk-born Negroes of the early 19th Century.

Neither Joseph Jenkins Roberts nor Mary Peake was long associated directly with Norfolk, nor does either appear to have lived here many years, though the one was born here in 1809 and the other in 1823. Joseph Roberts was to spend most of his life in Liberia, to which he had gone as a colonist or as a trader and of which he became the militia commander and, in 1841, the governor. This was during the period when American Colonization Society was in control. He became the first President of the Republic of Liberia in 1848 and remained in office until 1856, and again was President from 1872 to 1876 during difficult days when the freeing of the slaves in the United States had reduced the interest of colonizers in Liberia. There is an abundance of evidence of his contributions to the early growth of this African country.

Mary Peake's life was more sharply restricted. Having had the advantage of education herself, largely because of her English father, she taught Negroes in Hampton in the 1840's and later in Kecoughtan, and she is credited with helping to organize classes in Newport News and Old Point. The WPA Writers' study of The Negro in Virginia records that "the most publicized school for Negro children during slavery was that established by Margaret Douglass, a white woman from South Carolina, who organized classes in Norfolk in 1853 for free Negro children," but it adds that "Mary Peake's school provided the first instruction for all who desired to attend." She died in 1862 at the age of 39.

The housing projects which will carry these two names are yet to be constructed, although both are definitely planned and work on the first will begin this autumn. But the decision that in some sense they shall commemorate these two Norfolk-born leaders of the Negro race is so fitting that it will surely meet with approval among both the white and Negro population of Norfolk.

His Memory Deserves Honor

From the Petersburg Progress-Index

The Norfolk Housing Authority has given the name of Roberts Park to a new slum clearance project in that city in honor of Joseph Jenkins Roberts, a Virginia-born Negro who became the first president of Liberia and probably the most distinguished figure in the history of the Negro republic. The Norfolk Journal and Guide, a well-known Negro newspaper, states that Roberts was a native of Norfolk, and while some writers call him a native of Petersburg, Norfolk is usually stated as the place of his birth. However, President Roberts was reared in Petersburg, attended the old Methodist Church on Union street, and went to Liberia with a party of free Negroes assembled in this section well over a century ago.

That his name should be given a slum clearing project for people of his race is fitting and gratifying, for although the United States was not the scene of his activities he was a credit to the progress of his race in this country and proof of its ability to produce leaders of a high order. The name of Booker T. Washington has been given so many Negro institutions that it is time other leading members of his race be pressed into service for these purposes, and certainly the Appomattox River boatman who ably guided the early history of Liberia is one who deserves such honors.

Native Labour Problem

AUG 28 1941

At a farmers' meeting at Bergville, last week the important question of Native Labour was discussed The Magistrate of the district was asked to address the meeting. He said the Government was of the opinion that in districts where large numbers of Natives were employed on farms, a representative body, nominated by the Local District Farmers' Association, together with the local representative of the Department of Native Affairs and under the Chairmanship of the Magistrat should be formed to deal in an advisory capacity on all matters connected with farm labour.

In our opinion this suggestion was incomplete as an ommission was made in that the section most directly concerned has been left out in the suggestion, that is, the Bantu labourers themselves are left out of consideration and their views are not to be represented. We beg to point out that the suggested representation of the Native Affairs Department may not always represent Bantu opinion. It may be possible that the representative of the Native Affairs' Department views things as the farmers in the District.

The time has now come when the Bantu labourers' views on labour conditions should be sought and favourably considered. This lack of Bantu labour has its causes, many of which may be better expressed by the Mantu himself rather than the representative of the Native Affairs Department for the reason that he lives in another sphere. In our opinion that body should call for Bantu opinion from members of the Bantu race who have obtained those views from the Bantu themselves.

The fact that most Bantu labourers do all they can to escap from farm labour is not without reason. Conditions on the farm are in most cases oppressive to this class of labourers. Housing and food arrangements are mostly far from satisfactory. The Muntu labourer prefers to go to work in towns because there he can at least work under favourable conditions. They are expected to work not less than eight hours a day and in summer they begin work at six o'clock and continue to six o'clock in the evening.

Long service is not always considered on monetary terms. A man with a family to feed, clothe and educate as well as supply with medicine in case of illness, is not taken account of on the farm.

In that meeting the suggestion was made that it would be advisable to consult Bantu chiefs, but in our opinion this advice would also not be fair if the chiefs had not first consulted the people directly concerned, that is, the labourers themselves.

AUG 28 1941

Some farmers do not deserve a good labour supply by reason of their cruel treatment of their labourers. The truth of this is revealed in the fact that some farmers do not have to beg for labourers while some are always in need of it. This is due to the way they themselves treat their farm labourers. The other class think a humane treatment of their Bantu labourers is spoiling them and thus want to get their labour under slave conditions.

SUCCESS OF THE

W.N.L.A. BAND.

MAR 15 1941

One of the first things in the establishment of the W.N.L.A., Band was of course the purchase of a complete set of musical instruments. These were bought from England and were of the best kind. At the same time African bandsmen were advertised for, and there were many applications, because it was known that the band would be a good one, there would be "brothers" as fellow-bandsmen, and the pay would be regular. Out of these applications, twenty-three bandsmen were chosen. Of these 17 were Basutos, 3 Shangaans, one Xosa, and two Zulus.

You will like to know what manner of instruments they play. Here is the list: One E flat cornet, six B flat cornets, four tenor horns, one baritone and two tenor trombones, one bass trombone, two Euphoniums, two B flat basses, two double B flat basses, one side drum and one bass drum.

—: ooo :—

MAR 15 1941

When you have the good luck to hear this W.N.L.A. Band play you will wonder how the bandsmen learned music so well. The reason is that they had musical "ears"—which means that they would play in tune; moreover, they had a love of music to begin with. That made it all the easier for them to practise patiently and intelligently and perseveringly.

The clever Bandmaster, Capt. Vincent Barwood, has brought out the best in these African musicians. He wrote scales for them in musical notation on a blackboard. They practised hard. He would not allow them at first to play nothing but scales; and these bandsmen grasped the fact that the better they played their scales the better would they play their pieces. In other words, all the good movements, all the evenness that they could show in their scale playing would later be heard to advantage in the rendering of the set pieces. The Bandmaster himself can play any instrument in the band, and the bandsmen have great respect for him. He kept all the men doing scales for six weeks, and then came the day when he gave them a quick march to play. They were proud bandsmen. After that they never looked back. And all the time discipline has been maintained in the band. That is the British way.

WORKING ON THE MINES.
THOUGHT FOR THE NATIVES

Thousands and thouusands of Natives work on the gold and coal mines, and you will be glad to learn that the authorities do all in their power to prevent accidents. The Natives know this; they see for themselves what care the Whie man takes in order that accidents shall be avoided.

Accidents are seribus. nobody wants them; everybody wishes there were no accidents at all, and in 1913 the Prevention of Accidents Committee set to work to impress upon all mine workers, that for their own sakes, they must not allow accidents to happen if it were possible to prevent them. Warnings were put up and pictures were shown, teaching the vital importance of carefulness.

SAFETY FIRST became a motto, and it is not a selfish motto so far as the mines are concerned. It means taking care, using one's eyes, and being thoughtful not only for one's own sake but also for that of others. The result is that accidents on the Mines have for years been fewer and fewer.

Everything reasonably possible is done to prevent accidents on the Mines. The managements, the officials, and the whole of the staffs co-operate in order to ensure safety for the workers; and encouragement and support in these matters is given by the Government's Department of Mines, by the Native Labour Organisations of the Transvaal Chamber of Mines, and by the Prevention of Accidents Committee.

Because of the care thus taken the Mine workers go about their work, and do it, with confidence.

RED CROSS TEACHES THAT THE STRONG MUST HELP THE WEAK.

The Minister of the Interior and Public Health (Hon. H. G. Lawrence), when he recently presented the trophies on the occasion of the final Competitions of the Mine African First Aid Training, said that the Red Cross believes and teaches that the strong and healthy must help the weak and sick, and it is therefore the duty of the strong and healthy Africans on the Mines to learn First Aid, he said the strong and healthy Africans could help those who were unable to help themselves.

Now the Minister had been watching the final Competitions, had seen for himself the Mine Africans going through their difficult tests (attending to "patients" in the same way as if there had been a real accident or serious illness), and in the course of his speech afterwards he said he was so pleased to be present and to watch the Mine Africans preparing themselves for First Aid. He said he thought these Africans were wishing to say "Thank you!" for all that had been taught them in First Aid: and the way, he added, to show this gratitude was to make full use of the knowledge of First Aid thus placed at their disposal.

X X X

It must be remembered that all the teaching given, and all the work done, to advance First Aid on the Mines costs money, and the Minister called attention to this fact. He pointed out that the Mine Africans would not be able to buy the things needed, and therefore gratitude was due, he said, to the Chamber of Mines for giving some of the money required by the Red Cross—otherwise the Red Cross would not be able to do the work it did.

X X X

In the next article we shall give you some facts showing the w nderful progress made by Mine Africans in First Aid.

First Aid is Regarded with Respect

No. 87/22

MAR 1 - 1941

On the Mines, First Aid is always spoken of with respect and even honour, because of what has been proved not a matter about which something is "going to be done", not a matter of "fine words" without any useful action, but something about which there have been the clearest proofs, the most beneficial results. It has all been proved. Instance after instance has occurred where the knowledge of First Aid has been a boon indeed; goodness knows the number of times on the Mines that what looked like a little thing, say a scratch or something like that, has been prevented from getting worse or developing into mischief for one reason or another, simply by prompt application of cleansing (cleang) the flesh near the injury and bandagling if necessary. First Aid has been thoroughly organised on the Mines.

x x x

First Aid once learned is never forgotten altogether but it is necessary at least every three years to refresh ones memory by taking another course of instruction. It is considered that the training remains sufficiently fresh for that period because it is so strict; and after what you have read in past articles and are going to read in these columns, you will say that it is a good thing that the training is strict. The instructons in the subject are all experts, and though they are strict—they have to be in order to win attention and to ensure learners concentrating on the teachings yet they are kind and most encouraging; they have a deep respect for, a love of, First Aid. They know what good it does and can do. They realise that in the event of an accident on a Mine or anywhere) even on the veld or on a road) a fully qualified Native mine worker could and would do the wise thing pending the arrival of the Doctor. Not long ago you read in one of these articles how a motor accident happened in East Griqualand and two Mine workers (Natives) who were on holiday there at the time, happened to be near the scene. They were fully qualified in First Aid, and they rendered help and assistance to the injured until the Doctor came. The conduct of these two Natives was spoken of in the highest terms.

x x x

First Aid is something clean and helpful; something good. There is nothing selfish about it, and the very training in it keeps the mind active and bright. The Native Mine workers who qualify in First Aid are interested in it because they are taught so well. A high standard is set and there is no departure from it: everything must be done well. And the Native Mine workers who qualify realise right from the very start of their study that they are acquiring knowledge, precious knowledge, that will be useful to them as long as they live. All this is true. Is it any wonder then that First Aid is spoken of on the Mines with respect and even honour.

x x x

Next week we hope to give you some figures showing the progress that First Aid has made on the Mines.

"THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC WHEREVER THEY GO".

It was a fine idea to have a Brass Band whose members should all be Africans, under the conductorship of a highly-trained White Bandmaster.

Much thought was given to the formation of this Band, to be known as the W.N.L.A. Band, and, eventually the plans were complete. There were many things to see to and to do, but everything went well. This was to be a Band for the Native Mine workers.

An important step was taken by the W.N.L.A. when they decided to engage Capt. Vincent Barwood as Bandmaster. He was trained at a famous British Army institution, Kneller Hall, and he became Bandmaster of the Scots Greys.

MAR 8 1941

The music that some of the Africans had for the most part was heard from concertinas, Jews' harps, autoharps and calabashes, or from gramophones and the wireless. Any of these is better than nothing, but what a joy it was when the Mine Africans could hear at their Compounds the W.N.L.A. Band, with the cornets, euphoniums, trombones and tubes.

MAR 8 1941

In next weeks' article we will tell you something about the success the W.N.L.A. Band has achieved and how the Native Mine workers appreciate a visit from the Band to the Mines. The music is a joy to listen to.

The listeners appreciate the bright well-rendered music—it makes them walk on air, as it were and at the end of a concert they always want to know "when are you coming again?"

MAR 22 1941

The bandsmen of these occasions always wear uniform, and they have a bearing and behaviour which wins them a good name. When the Mine Natives' First Aid training competitions were held at the W. N. L. A. Compound (headquarters), Johannesburg, last October, the Band entertained the visitors with lovely music, and one of the pieces they played was "There'll Always Be An England", and they played it remarkably well.

MAR 22 1941

This W. N. L. A. Band is another instance of the way that the Mines study the Natives. The bandsmen are all-time musicians. Except on Monday, a day-off for them, they practise every day from 9 to 12 in the morning, and from 1.30 to 4.30 in the afternoon. On Saturday afternoons and Sundays they give concerts as arranged for them, and the Mine Natives at every Compound love to have a visit from the Band. As mentioned, the bandsmen wear uniform, which makes them look smart, and the W.N.L.A. have two buses specially built, one to convey the members of the Band to the Mines for giving concerts, and the other to carry the instruments.

MAR 22 1941

The W. N. L. A. Band has played outside Johannesburg and the Transvaal on important occasions, one of which was the coronation in Basutoland.

The W. N. L. A. Band is a proved success.

This W. N. L. A. Band goes to play at the Compounds on the Mines as often as possible. The Band is in great demand naturally. The listeners appreciate the bright well-rendered music—it makes them walk on air, as it were—and at the end of a concert they always want to know "when are you coming again?"

The bandsmen on these occasions always wear uniform, and they have a bearing and behaviour which wins them a good name.

When the Mine Natives' First Aid training Competions were held at the W.N.L.A. Compound (headquarters), Johannesburg, last October, the Band entertained the visitors with lovely music, and one of the pieces they played was "There'll Always Be An England", and they played it remarkably well.

This W.N.L.A. Band is another instance of the way that the Mines study the Natives. The bandsmen are all-time musicians. Except on Mondays, a day-off for them, they practise every day from 9 to 12 in the morning, and from 1.30 to 4.30 in the afternoon. On Saturday afternoons and Sundays they give concerts as arranged for them, and the Mine Natives at every Compound love to have a visit from the Band. As mentioned, the bandsmen wear uniform, which makes them look smart, and the W.N.L.A. had two buses specially built, one to convey the members of the Band to the Mines for giving concerts, and the other to carry the instruments.

The W.N.L.A. Band has played outside Johannesburg and the Transvaal on important occasions, one of which was the coronation in Basutoland.

"THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC WHEREVER THEY GO".

It was a fine idea to have a Brass Band whose members should all be Africans, under the conductorship of a highly-trained White Bandmaster.

Much thought was given to the formation of this Band, to be known as the W.N.L.A. Band, and, eventually the plans were complete. There were many things to see to and to do, but everything went well. This was to be a Band for the Native Mine workers.

An important step was taken by the W.N.L.A. when they decided to engage Capt. Vincent Barwood as Bandmaster. He was trained at a famous British Army institution, Kneller Hall, and he became Bandmaster of the Scots Greys.

X X X

The music that some of the Africans had for the most part was heard from concertinas, Jews' harps, autoharps and calabashes, or from gramaphones and the wireless. Any of these is better than nothing, but what a joy it was when the Mine Africans could hear at their Compounds the W.N.L.A. Band, with the cornets, euphoniums, trombones and tubes.

In next weeks' article we will tell you something about the success the W.N.L.A. Band has achieved and how the Native Mine workers appreciate a visit from the Band to the Mines. The music is a joy to listen to.

NATIVES KEEP ON GOING THERE.

When you take a long journey you have a reason for doing so. You have given thought to the matter.

Now when a young Native decides that he will go to the Mines to work he has several reasons for making that decision.

First he wants to earn money, and he knows what to do with it when he has saved up. Secondly, he wishes to work where he will be well looked after, kindly, he would like to see something of the great world outside his kraal or dorp or reserve.

About the money a Native earns on the Mines there is no question about it: it is good pay, out of which he can save up. Is not the proof of the pudding in the eatings? Ever so many Natives save up money out of their earnings; and when they go back to their kraals, either for a holiday or to stay there for good, they are better off financially than before. And this is a thing to remember; the Mines encourage Natives to save up.

Saving up some money each month makes the Natives comfortable in their minds, gives them a feeling of pride and contentment as a result of their own honest labour. All this helps to give the Mines a good name.

That the Natives are well looked after on the Mines has been proved. The meals are good and regular, the food being of the kind for health and strength, making fat, and the drink is wholesome and nourishing. Most of the Natives actually weigh more when they go home to their kraals than they do before, and they keep in good health on the Mines because they also sleep well at nights.

Then there is that feeling of adventure about going out into the great world; to see what it is like, to hold one's own in the course of life. Well every mother's son has, in a sense, to fend for himself, but on the Mines there are brothers to keep the newcomers from being too lonely, and there is so much of interest in the way of music, games, and free bioscope every week, that the Natives are glad they decided to go to work on the Mines.

MORE ABOUT EXPERIENCE

When Africans are going to the Mines to work there—when they are leaving their homes for he first time—they are entering upon a phase of life. It is what is known as going out into the great world.

A feeling of confidence comes to the Africans when they meet the Native Recruiting Corporation's Officials at the recruiting stations, because these officials speak the Native language. The Africans can ask any questions they like—and they do—and these are answered in the same language. The fact is appreciated by the Africans.

On the Mines the Africans see so much that interests them, they have their own work to do, and they see others busy at their jobs. Time passes quickly.

Wise Africans choose the right kind of "Brothers" for their close friends. Experince—in the sense of wisdom and good judgement—comes to be their guide in their undertakings, and should it be that they want trustworthy advice or guidance they can without hesitation go to Compound Manager, who knows their language. He is looked upon by the Africans as a "father", and rightly so, for from his boyhood he has known them and their ways and their habits of thought. It is because he understands the Africans and can speak their language that he is often entrusted with the important post of Compound Manager.

THE VALUE OF EXPERIENCE

You are interested, and naturally so, in reading about the Africans working on the Mines; and you are glad to know that they have good food and good drink and well—sheltered sleeping quarters, and that the Mines arrange music on the wireless and once a week a free bioscope entertainment. And besides these things, the Mines encourage the Africans, when they have done their shifts, to play games.

So it is little wonder that your menfolk who are working on the Mines have good health.

And the Africans obtain useful experience, an asset indeed. Africans are by nature observant, and one of the first things they see when they are working on the Mines is the orderly way in which things are done. There is a reason for each piece of work.

On the Mines, as you know, there are thousands and thousands of Africans at work, and yet each has his own particular job to do. They know their duty and do it well and ordeliness (or organisation) is the basic reason for this. Punctuality is, of course, a feature on the Mines.

When men work hard and enjoy their work, they strengthen their minds. They do not feel tired; no, they keep fresh and learn more and more, and one of the things on the Mines to which they take is the study of First Aid. Very many of the Africans qualify in this important subject and take pride in their teams competing in the First Aid Competitions on the Mines. The knowledge of First Aid that these Africans acquire is likely to be useful to them—and others—wherever they are.

IMPORTANCE OF SAVING UP MONEY

You will have understood from these articles what a wise thing it is for Africans to save up money out of their monthly earnings. It is a fact that certain amounts saved up each month mount up to a lot of money. And the knowledge of money thus saved up puts the owners of it in a comfortable frame of mind. They feel that they are worth something; they realise that they have some money not only for themselves, but also for their families.

—: ooo :—

When the time draws near for the Africans to leave—that is, when they are completing the number of shifts for which they are engaged — they can draw enough money on their last two tickets to pay their rail-fares home and their taxes, if necessary, and also any other expenditure that may be absolutely essential. Up to now, as you have read, under the Deferred Pay system they have not drawn the full amount of their pay each month, a portion having been saved up for them each month, and it has become a habit with them to manage quite well on the smaller amount, there being, as already indicated, a feeling of pride that the part of the earnings which they have not drawn is all the time being saved up for them.

And thus, when they are going home they are in a position to buy their railway ticket for the journey and to buy little presents for their families.

It is then in particular that the Africans are so glad that they have had their money saved up for them, and they know that when they present the necessary voucher at the right office they will receive the total amount due to them, without any deduction whatsoever. The Africans have complete confidence that the Mines pay them every penny they have earned. 41/23.

WARM TUNICS FOR ARFICANS WHO WORK UNDERGROUND

Winter has passed, and with the summar sun shining on the veld you do not think of the recent cold days and nights.

But you will be glad to know that the Mines had a thought for your menfolk during the cold weather last winter.

The Mines provide tunics for all the Africans working underground—to keep them warm. These tunics do not cost the Africans a single penny—they are provided free—and ever since they have been wearing them, their chests have been strong and colds have kept away.

Africans living at home in the sun do not wear tunics, and when they go to work on the Mines they may not think it necessary to wear them. But the Mines know that the Africans will have better health by wearing warm, comfortable tunics, and the boss boys are instructed to see that the Africans do not just carry them over their arms when going on or coming off shift, but they WEAR THEM.

• • • •

It is in ways like this that the boss boys are so helpful to their "brothers." It is part of their duty to see that the Africans wear the tunics that have been provided free for them.

Importance of foot comfort

No. 75/2

WHEN a Native goes to work underground on a Mine he has to wear boots, as was mentioned in a former article, you will remember; and you will agree, from what you have already read, that it is absolutely necessary for the protection of his feet that he should then wear boots. Naturally, if he has never worn a pair of boots before, he will feel a bit awkward at first, but he soon becomes accustomed to them.

And here is good news. The Mines have officials who take an interest in Natives wearing boots for the first time.

x x x

During the past few years a very great deal has been done to provide foot comfort for the Natives. This is wise.

The Natives realise what trouble has been taken on their behalf in this matter of Boots. They are able to buy best quality at the lowest possible price.

If ever you should hear that Natives are "exploited" by the Mines over boots, you can laugh at the idea It is simply not true.

The N.R.C. Boot is guaranteed and consequently is the best obtainable, irrespective of price.

When a Native is wearing boots on the Mines for the first time in his life, if his feet at first should "vex" him — if for instance there should be any chafing of the skin, however slight — he can have his feet inspected and receive expert attention. This is not done to "fuss" him; it is done so that his feet can be kept healthy, so that he can be comfortable.

If he does not ask to have his feet inspected and attended to — if he goes about suffering in silence — then it is, to put it bluntly his own fault.

The shape of the "last" and the construction of the boot have gone a long way towards ensuring foot comfort, and after a few weeks the feet of the Natives have got accustomed to the constraint of wearing boots. Natives should suffer no inconvenience when wearing boots in future; in fact they soon realise that it is a pleasure to wear boots.

Readers have been so interested in this subject that more information will be given in next week's article.

W. N. L. A. BAND IS VERY POPULAR.

This W. N. L. A. Band goes to play at the Compounds on the Mines as often as possible. The Band is in great demand—naturally. The listeners appreciate the bright well-rendered music—it makes them walk on air, as it were and at the end of a concert they always want to know "when are you coming again ?"

The bandsmen of these occasions always wear uniform, and they have a bearing and behaviour which wins them a good name. When the Mine Natives' First Aid training competitions were held at the W. N. L. A. Compound (headquarters), Johannesburg, last October, the Band entertained the visitors with lovely music, and one of the pieces they played was "There'll Always Be An England", and they played it remarkably well.

This W. N. L. A. Band is another instance of the way that the Mines study the Natives. The bandsmen are all-time musicians. Except on Monday, a day-off for them, they practise every day from 9 to 12 in the morning, and from 1.30 to 4.30 in the afternoon. On Saturday afternoons and Sundays they give concerts as arranged for them, and the Mine Natives at every Compound love to have a visit from the Band. As mentioned, the bandsmen wear uniform, which makes them look smart, and the W.N.L.A. have two buses specially built, one to convey the members of the Band to the Mines for giving concerts, and the other to carry the instruments.

Opportunity to save up mon

No. 98/2

One of the reasons why Africans working on the Mines are enabled to save up money out of their earnings is because their food and quarters are supplied them free They have no anxiety about where the next meal is coming from; it is there Similarly they do not have to go searching for a room to sleep in; adequate and comfortable quarters are provided for them.

It is very easy to spend money but hard to save it. The safest way to save it on the Mines is to go on "deferred pay". The system is entirely voluntary on the part of the Africans. And they have learned to appreciate its value.

x x x

To help to keep the Africans happy, the Mines have arranged bioscope shows for them once a week in each compound, and the Mines take a good deal of trouble in selecting suitable pictures.

The Africans enjoy the recreattions that in one way and another are brought to them on the Mines where they are working By enjoying these free of cost to themselves, the Africans have the more opportunity to save up out of their earnings

The Mines have a good name for helping Africans to save up.

Services Of Africans Are Recognised

You have read in these articles about Organisation on the mines and what it means, how plans are made for efficient working and how things are done in an orderly manner there.

Africans who work on the mines see for themelves the effect of the orderliness, how it gets things done, how it makes for progress.

The number of Africans working on the mines keeps on steadily increasing Word has gone from kraal to kraal, dorp to dorp, reserve to reserve, that the Africans receive good treatment. That is one reason why they keep on coming to the mines They also know that they can save up money.

x x x

Very many of the Africans, after working the number of shifts which they undertake to do, come back to the mines for another term of service to save up more money.

The wages and conditions of service, the housing, the feeding, the medical care, and the recreation and social amenities on the mines make working there attractive to the Africans

That vital feature Organisation, which you have been reading about helps in the RECREATION of Africans as well as in the working of shifts Hours are arranged for games, for which grounds and material are provided and once a week a night is set apart for a free bioscope entertainment. And, remember, there are many mines; so that much thought has to be given to prevent disappointment on a single mine. The White bosses think of the comfort and happiness of the Africans working on the mines.

Organisation is to be found throughout the Mining Industry. Various Branches are connected with the parent body, which is the Transvaal Chamber of mines, and each year this important body holds a big indaba. This happened the other day, and in his wise words the white man who was President for the year remembered the Africans working on the mines. He said it had been a difficult year but the behaviour of the Africans had been highly gratifying.

The officials conducting the Mining Industry are mindful of their responsibilities towards Africans, and they Appreciate the way Africans carry out their duties on the mines.

How Africans can save up money

No. 99/2

YOU will remember reading in last week's article about it being very easy to spend money but hard to save it.

The Mines are anxious to see Africans save up out of the money that they earn, so that when they take thier discharge and go home, they have something to be able to say of employers, that is of the White bosses who are responsible for the runing of the Mines, that they really do desire to see the Africans saving up. The Mine authorities recognise that Africans who are saving up, that is, putting by some money each month, are happy and contented; more than those who spend their money carelessly and therefore do not have a penny to call their own.

One reason in particular why those Africans who steadily save up are contented and have ease of mind is because they know that, if for any reason money is urgently wanted in their homes, they have got it ready for safe despatch to their relatives.

Another reason why Africans are proud and glad to have saved up is that, when they leave the Mines for home on holiday or to stay there, they have a nice little sum of money to do what they like with, and also they can afford to buy a few small presents which will bring pleasure to their people at home.

x x x

Next week we hope to tell you about what is considered the best way for the Africans to save up out of their earnings on the Mines. It is known as Deferred Pay; and you will be surprised when you learn how much money is paid out in this way to Africans engaged by the Native Recruiting Corporation (NRC) for work on the Mines The Deferred Pay system is entirely voluntary, that is to say the Africans who use it do so of their own free will.

Advantages Of The Deferred Pay System

No. 101/2

YOU have been looking forward to reading more about this Deferred Pay System on the Mines.

No wonder the Africans like it.

They like it because they know their money is safe, every penny of it. They have learned by experience that they can trust the Mines about their earnings and about their saving Up."

Remember, the Deferred Pay is entirely voluntary; that is to say, the Africans need not go in for it unless they wish to do so of their own free will.

But they see the advantages of it, and one of these is that by letting the Mines save up some of their money each month for them out of their earnings, it gradually gets more and more and they can have it when they go back to their homes.

x x x

Very many of the Africans working on the Mines are quick to see that if a large part of their money is saved up for them each month they cannot waste it while away from home. We all know how easy it is to spend money. There is a saying that it burns a hole in the pocket. But if their money is saved up for them each month it cannot burn a hole in their pockets. The money is safe And when the Africans ask for it, either when they are going back to their homes or for any good reason, it is always there for them

x x x

The Mines were very wise to start this Deferred Pay System. It means a lot of extra work for them, but it pleases the Africans and adds to their sense of security and comfort on the Mines

Next week, some more about this Deferred Pay System

Deferred Pay System Helps Africans to Save Up

No. 102/2

Africans who go to work on the Mines soon get to know the meaning of Deferred Pay. They soon realise that by this system they can have a portion of their earnings saved up each month for them till they return to their homes.

Everything is done in a business-like way, the result of organisation; and the Africans know that the Mines treat them honestly over their money.

x x x

The Deferred Pay system is a great success and it has done a great deal to make Africans feel comfortable and contented.

They know they are saving up if they use the system. Good-natured "brothers" are always willing to explain to a recruit anything that he is in doubt about, and if he wishes to have any special information he can always ask the Compound Manager, who is as a "father" to the Africans

But the fact is that when Africans are recruited, the system of Deferred Pay is explained to them so clearly that they know what they are doing.

x x x

The plan of identifying an African—that is, making sure that the right man receives the money is so good that the Deferred Pay which the Mines have saved up for him cannot be paid to the wrong party. Even if the Voucher (necessary document) which the African has had given him should be stolen, it would make no difference eventually, because the right African would still receive the money due to him. It would in due course be handed to him at the office where he has to apply for payment.

The Africans working on the Mines have faith in the Deferred Pay system. It has proved itself to be good.

"LIFT UP YOUR HEARTS TO THE RED CROSS."

As you remember, the work of training Mine Africans in First Aid falls a good deal to the lot of the South African Red Cross Society. And the Minister of the Interior, the Hon. H. G. Lawrence, impressed upon Mine Africans, on the occasion of the finals in the First Aid Competitions, how valuable is the knowledge that they (the Mine Africans) thus gain. He asked them to treasure this knowledge and training. He said this is of national importance, because [and this is a point that we ourselves have made in former articles] it would improve the health of the African people in their kraals. "Take it with you, therefore, into your homes and among your own people," he said

The Minister went on to ask: Why is the Red Cross and the Prevention of Accidents Committee doing this First Aid work, and why is the Chamber of Mines supporting them? And this was the answer the Minister gave to the question: Because they wanted the Mine workers to be healthy and put in a position to help themselves and because they did not want any of the people to suffer unnecessary pain.

GOOD WORK BY THE RED CROSS SOCIETY

The Minister paid a tribute to the work of the Red Cross and asked all his listeners, whenever they saw the Red Cross, to be thankful of it and to respect the fine men and women who kept it going, because throughout the world the Red Cross stands for what is good and beautiful.

There is no Colour question, said the Minister, with the Red Cross, whose workers do not mind whether you are White or Black, whether you are thankful or ungrateful to them; and the Red Cross asked for no reward did not say: "Can you pay us back for what we do?" No; all that the Red Cross asked was: "Are you ill? Are you wounded? Are you in pain?" If anybody was ill or wounded or in pain, then the Red Cross, came and soothed the sufferer. "If," said the Red Cross, "if you are too weak to come to us we will seek you out and come to you."

"Therefore," said the Minister, "lift up your hearts to the Red Cross," and (he added) they should "also be grateful to the Chamber of Mines who gives some of the money that is required by the Red Cross or else it would not be able to do the work."

—: oo :—

There is still something more to tell you about the work of the Red Cross, and you will be glad to read it, because the Mine workers—the men from your homes—have learned so much in First Aid from the Red Cross. Therefore look out for next week's article.

Ever so many Natives save up money out of their earnings; and when they go back to their kraals, either for a holiday or to stay there for good, they are better off financially than before And this is a thing to remember; the Mines encourage Natives to save up

Saving up some money each month makes the Natives comfortable in their minds, gives them a feeling of pride and contentment as a result of their own honest labour. All this helps to give the Mines a good name.

That the Natives are well looked after on the Mines has been proved The meals are good and regular, the food being of the kind for health and strength, making fat, and the drink is wholesome and nourishing. Most of the Natives actually weigh more when they go home to their kraals than they did before. And they keep in good health on the Mines because they also sleep well at nights

Then there is that feeling of adventure about going out into the great world; to see what it is like, to hold one's own in the course of life. Well, every mother's son has, in a sense, to fend for himself, but on the Mines there are brothers to keep the newcomers from being too lonely, and there is so much of interest in the way of music, games, and a free bioscope every week, that the Natives are glad they decided to go to work on the Mines.

SERVICES OF AFRICANS ARE RECOGNISED

SERVICES OF AFRICANS ARE RECOGNISED

You have read in these articles about Organisation on the Mines and what it means; how plans are made for efficient working and how things are done in an orderly manner there.

Africans who work on the Mines see for themselves the effect of the orderliness, how it gets things done, how it makes for progress.

The number of Africans working on the Mines keeps on steadily increasing. Word has gone from kraal to kraal, dorp to dorp, reserve to reserve, that the Africans receive good treatment. That is one reason why they keep on coming to the Mines. They also know that they can save up money.

Very many of the Africans, after working the number of shifts which they undertake to do, come back to the Mines for another term of service—to save up more money.

The wages and conditions of service, the housing, the feeding, the medical care, and the recreation and social amenities on the Mines make working there attractive to the Africans.

That vital feature Organisation, which you have been reading about, helps in the RECREATION of Africans as well as in the working of shifts. Hours are arranged for games, for which grounds and material are provided; and once a week a night is set apart for a free bioscope entertainment. And, remember, there are many Mines. so, that much thought has to be given to prevent disappointment on a single Mine. The White bosses think of the comfort and happiness of the Africans working on the Mines.

Organisation is to be found throughout the Mining Industry. Various Branches are connected with the parent body, which is the Transvaal Chamber of Mines, and each year this important body holds a big indaba. This happened the other day, and in his wise words the White man who was President for the year remembered the Africans working on the Mines. He said it had been a difficult year but the behaviour of the Africans had been highly gratifying.

The officials conducting the Mining Industry are mindful of their responsibilities towards Africans, and they appreciate the way Africans carry out their duties on the Mines.

AFRICANS STILL COMING FORWARD

MAR 29 1941

You may have read or heard that the Africans are going to the Mines in increasing numbers. That is true; and at the end of last January there were as many as 382,933 employed on gold and coal mines in the Transvaal.

This is another record; meaning that never before have been so many Africans working there on the Mines.

X X X

There are reasons for this. One reason is that the Africans working on the Mines send word in their letters to their families that they are comfortable, that they are well fed, and that they are well paid and regularly. If it were not so, the Africans would write differently. But in their letters home they report things as they find them.

Another reason why more and more workers go to the Transvaal is that they get first hand about the conditions on the mines from the Africans who come home on holiday. These reports are trustworthy.

MAR 29 1941

X X X

Good food and plenty of it, good wages which are paid regularly, and health observance — these are amongst the features that make the Mines a popular employment for Africans. The quality of the food continues; the wages are paid with unfailing regularity; and the Africans are encouraged to keep healthy.

On the Mines there is much to interest the Africans; they need not find time hanging on their hands, as the saying goes. For instance, games of different kinds can be played, football, tennis and cricket being amongst these; and they are encouraged to learn First Aid, and by this you have read a good deal in these articles lately. Then every week there is a free bioscope entertainment.

It would not be surprising if, before long, 400,000 Africans are working on the Mines.

NATIVES LEARN TO TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES

Natives working on the Mines learn to use their commonsense and so they keep out of harm's way.

From the time they arrive as "new boys" they are encouraged to follow carefully the instructions they receive about doing their work in the right way. And they wisely obey.

It is by doing their work in the right way that they keep happy—and safe.

The instructions that "new Boys" receive are the result of experience.

One thing that they are told, for instance, is that they must, before going to work underground have a box of matches on them; and another thing is the wisdom of wearing hand guards and hard hats during underground work. These protect the Natives from getting hurt.

Another thing that they are told is—never to enter the working place before the White boss says it is all right. He always examines it and makes it safe before he allows the Natives to enter it.

You have read about the pictures put up at the Mines that tell the Natives what to do and what not to do. The Natives are advised to look at these pictures and learn from them.

All the instructions given to the Natives about taking care of themselves are easy to understand, and by obeying them the Natives, as indicated already, keep well and happy; and if they save up, they have money in hand which they finish their contract and go back to their homes.

Working On The Mines

MUSIC AND DANCING ARE GOOD FOR HEALTH

When the Africans engage to work on the Mines they are likely to know in advance something about the duties that they will be called upon to undertake; some "brothers" are sure to have told them.

Naturally the work comes first; it has to be done and it is done. Working hours are fixed and, as we told you the other week, the Africans soon settle down in their new surroundings. They get accustomed to the discipline which on the Mines means doing things in a systematic, orderly way; and they themselves see the necessity for strictness.

But it is not all work, for just as the hours of duty are regular, so are the hours of play and rest.

Africans can listen-in to music on the Mines and they enjoy it; and if, when the shifts are done, some "brothers" get together and wish to have a sing-song they can do so—and a very good thing it is for everybody to sing, at the right time and in the right place. Indeed, so far back as the year 1588 a great English musician, William Byrd by name, said: "The exercise of singing is delightful to nature, and good to preserve the health of man."

Dancing comes naturally to to Africans. They delight in it, and it makes them glow with health. They are what you might call born dancers. On the veld you can see some of them even walking with a lilt, that is, a spring in their walking movements, and this indicates a cheerful outlook on life, a happy temperament.

The Mines encourage the Africans to dance, at the right times, and the Africans love a special dance. Then their picked dancers perform, and these are watched with interest and pride by their "brothers". If it is an occasion out of the ordinary a number of Europeans are sure to be present.

The Africans display rhythm as they dance, and the great Greek philosopher Plato said two thousand years ago about rhythm: "It is a force that enters most powerfully into the inner recesses of the mind and imposes order and comeliness upon it."

The Africans on the Mines enjoy their dances.

Working On The Mines

WISE AFRICANS GAIN USEFUL KNOWLEDGE

Africans who have previously been living in their kraals, and who now find themselves working on the Mines, have very much to interest them, that is, to keep their minds bright—which is one of the ways to keep well.

They see many many "brothers," and the wise Africans use discretion as to whom they make close friends with.

It is a new life for the Africans, right from the veld, to be amongst a large population. Everything at first seems strange to them. But it is a fact that they soon settle down in their new surroundings. They are interested; they are "curious" in a sensible way about [illegible] and all the time the presence of 'brothers' helps to make them at ease. Then they get interested in their work, and when they have done their shift they enjoy their recreation. Food and drink are always ready for them at regular hours, and sleeping quarters are provided and these are facts that help to make them comfortable in their minds.

What appeals to the Africans on the Mines is the orderly manner in which the work is done. Method is the guide for everything, and nothing is left to chance. All this makes for safety.

The Africans observe this "Safty First," this planning for the protection of all who work on the Mines, and they thus have the opportunity to acquire much useful knowledge—which nobody can take from them.

You have for instance read about the way the Africans learn First Aid. They make progress in this because they are so well taught and because they themselves are willing learners. They are really interested; they are learning things they never knew before.

In many ways the wise Africans, when working on the Mines, acquire knowledge which will be useful to them all their lives.

JAPAN AND THE NEGRO

AUG 16 1941

The popular fallacy that Japan—by reason of its non-Nordic classification—is interested in the black races should be discarded by all those who entertain such sentimental bunkum. Throughout their long history the Japanese have systematically avoided any association with the Negro race that might cause the white world to identify them with the descendants of the dark continent.

They, like their German partners, look upon Negroes as inferior people. This was their attitude long before Hitler published his "Mein Kampf" and Nordicism became a fanatical creed of the Nazis. Many of us can recall the statement made by a visiting Japanese professor who was interviewed on the radio when he arrived in New York some years ago. He was asked in the course of the interview what he thought of the American Negro. This was his reply:

"American Negro? No flag, no money, no consequence."

While there is much truth in this cryptic statement with regard to the position of the Negro in the western civilization, it reveals at the same time the light in which the black man is held in the land of the Rising Sun.

A country which perpetuates its ruling class by a consistent, ruthless denial of economic and political rights to the masses cannot be expected to have much affection for a down-trodden race. Modern Japan's territorial expansion is nothing more than imperialism in an advanced stage. The incorporation of this policy into the ancient eastern program of self-sufficiency is a direct consequence of the impact of western culture and ideals upon the Oriental mind.

The West, however, with the exclusion of the authoritarian states, has laid down some basic political theories which give the masses hope for better days. Although democracy, both in America and England, is yet in the academic stage of governmental theories, it affords a sound political premise from which the common people can argue their claim to political, economic equality and social freedom. Whereas Japan with an inflexible consitution offers no such outlook to its propertyless, poverty-stricken masses.

Thus when Tokyo joined the Rome-Berlin Axis, it was a natural alliance of like-minded rulers. All three share in common the belief that the individual is subservient to the state. Having practiced for years its own brand of Fascism, Japan entered into the fold of the western totalitarianism without any reservation.

Nazi Germany has devoted special attention to the propagation of the theory of inferiority of the Negro race. Since this is one of the fundamental tenets of the Fascist philosophy, it goes without saying that by accepting membership in the Axis powers, Japan accepted also their anti-Negro policy.

Those of us who have observed Japanese students on the campuses of such universities as Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Chicago, Illinois and Southern California know that they have nothing to AUG 16 1941 with Negro students. They are even less friendly than the hard-shell southerners from Georgia or Mississippi. Such an attitude is a demonstration of a deep seated antagonism that is nurtured by the Nipponese against the sons of Ham.

DUPING THE JAPS

Hitler has won his successes to date by following the hoary maxim of divide and conquer. In this he has been aided immeasurably by the stupidity of his opposition. Nations distant from him have hoped that someone else would win the war for them, in some cases have actually swallowed pacts of non-aggression and alliances with the conqueror. Having neutralized distant victims until their time comes, Hitler than concentrates upon the immediate objective close at hand. Those forced to bear the brunt of his attack unaided feel themselves deserted, betrayed by others who should be their friends, while those far away are drugged by promises, or a false sense of security derived from distances alone.

OCT 22 1941

A notable example of Hitler-duped nations is Japan. With the Nazis fantastically championing Aryan supremacy, making no attempt to conceal contempt for anyone not of their own particular branch of the Caucasian race, the Japs have none the less become their allies. As The Baltimore Evening Sun observes:

OCT 22 1941

"What mystifies students of Hitler's racial theories is why the Japanese leaders have persuaded themselves that an Axis triumph would mean anything good for Japan. All the records show that Hitler and his fellow fanatics have nothing but contempt for the Japanese and intend that they should ultimately have no part in ruling the Orient. Just now Japan enjoys favor on the well-known Hitlerian maxim 'murder one enemy with the help of another' but after a Nazi victory we may be sure that Hitler would revert to his original feeling about Asiatic races."

OCT 22 1941

Yet, with the tragic example of Italy before her as evidence of what happens to anyone who pals around with Hitler, Japan is playing his game in the Far East. She seems on the verge of committing hari-kari as the tool of a hypocritical ally whose aim is world domination and whose concept does not tolerate the idea of equals anywhere.

The Yellow Peril

DEC 8 - 1941

'It Has Come at Last'

World-Telegram N.Y./N.Y.

By GEORGE WITTE,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Many older-generation Americans nodded their heads sagely today and announced to their friends with the satisfaction that comes of a long period of unfruitful waiting:

"What have I been saying all these years? The Yellow Peril! It has come at last."

It was soon after the Spanish-American War, which saw the Stars and Stripes planted in Japan's front yard—the Philippines—and led to John Hay's historic proclamation of America's Open Door policy toward China, that talk first arose of "the inevitable war with Japan."

Japan's triumph over Imperial Russia in 1905 added fuel to the dark prophesies of the American Cassandras and the next year a book entitled Banzai, which told of a clash in the Pacific between the United States and Nippon, gained wide circulation in this country and fired the imagination of zealous patriots.

It was not until 1908, when California, disturbed by the influx of cheap Japanese labor, enacted legislation restricting the entry and residence of members of the yellow race that the possibility of war passed from the realm of fiction to that of realism.

The California law and the intense anti-Japanese feeling accompanying it placed President Theodore Roosevelt and his administration in an embarrassing position. There were angry demonstrations against the United States in Tokyo and other large Japanese cities and the Japanese press fanned the people's indignation by bluntly declaring the California law had been dictated by a feeling of superiority by the white races over the yellow races, which they branded as an insult to the Japanese.

Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State in the Taft administration, however, succeeded in calming the perturbed Nipponese in 1911 to the extent that the Tokyo government signed a "gentleman's agreement" voluntarily to limit emigration to the United States. This was a typical Japanese "face-saving" compromise, since it still permitted some Japanese immigration and Japan "voluntarily" imposed the restrictions.

Largely as a result of Japan's being on the side of the Allies and against Germany, talk of the Yellow Peril died down during World War I and the subsequent post-war period. It was not until 1931, when the Japanese inaugurated their present Greater East Asia program by invading Manchuria in a surprise attack similar to that carried out against Hawaii yesterday, that Americans again began to look upon Japan as a potential menace of peace in the Pacific.

Henry L. Stimson, the present Secretary of War, who then was Secretary of State in the Hoover administration, was the first to foresee the perils to the Western powers if Japan's imperialistic ambitions in China were not nipped in the bud. He drafted a sharp note to Tokyo. But the British government failed to back it up and the Japanese ignored Mr. Stimson's protest beyond sending a polite note of acknowledgment.

* * * DEC 8 - 1941

Despite Japan's invasion of Jehol and attack on Shanghai in 1933, the United States as well as the European powers and the League of Nations took no effective step toward stopping her in the appeasement period before 1939, and this passive attitude gave the Tokyo military the green light for their attack on China.

The Yellow Peril was gaining gigantic proportions only in the last few weeks that the possibility of gasoline and scrap iron for Japan's war machine across the Pacific until a few months ago. It was American people.

Yet the United States continued to ship war with Japan was again brought home to the

NEGRO YOUTHS STUDY OFFER TO FLY FOR CANADA

JAN 10 1941

Rap 'Broken Promises' of U. S. Defense Chance.

[Reprinted from yesterday's late editions.]

Three hundred Chicago Negro youths who have the required two years of college and the physical qualifications for acceptance as flying cadets in the army are seriously considering enlistment in the Royal Canadian Air force, according to A. L. Foster, executive secretary of the Chicago Urban league. The league is an agency working for the betterment of Chicago's colored population.

Several of the young men already have made plans to go to Canada. One, who finished third in a flying course conducted last year by the Civilian Aeronautics bureau at the University of Minnesota, has been approached by the British consul here with an offer that he accept full expenses to the nearest Canadian recruiting station, Foster said.

Broken Promises Charged.

"Our boys have grown mistrustful of the administration," Foster said. "Too many promises made just before election time remain unfulfilled."

JAN 10 1941

Foster referred to President Roosevelt's announcement last Oct. 9 that, as part of his expanded defense setup, he would maintain the strength of the Negro personnel of the army on a proportionate population basis; establish Negro organizations in each major branch of the service; accelerate the training of Negroes as pilots, mechanics, and technicians in aviation, and form Negro aviation units.

"The administration has made nothing but empty gestures thus far," said Foster. "In an attempt to pacify us it gave us a fine Waco training plane at the Harlem airport. [The Civil Aeronautics bureau and the army air corps jointly conduct a special flight instruction project for Negroes there.] This is the same type of training plane in use at the flying fields for white boys. We appreciate having it. But thus far only 20 boys have been accepted to use it."

Protests Against Discrimination.

The young men accepted for this special project undergo many hardships, Foster said. They do not receive the $75 monthly paid to flying cadets at other fields, they are not supplied with uniforms or other flying equipment, and they are deprived of the advantages of medical and dental attention, board, and lodging, he said.

"All of the boys at the Harlem field wear the same flying suit," he said. "Training flights are delayed while one boy takes off an outfit and another one gets into it."

The large percentage of Negroes on Chicago's relief rolls was cited as the best argument for accepting more Negro youths at the recruiting offices. The Chicago Relief administration reported yesterday that 27 per cent of Chicago's Negro population is on relief compared with 3½ per cent of the white population.

The lack of training facilities for Negro draftees was cited by State Draft Director Paul H. Armstrong recently as the reason why only a limted number of Negroes will be called for service in January.

Do They Mean Negroes?

It has always seemed funny to us that certain business institutions and places of amusement go to such length to advertise using the public press and the radio, then when someone who has read the ad or heard the invitation turns up, he is refused because of his color or for some other reason.

This was brought to mind because of an appeal from the army for 16,500 men for the air corps. A dispatch from Washington contained this story:

FEB 8 1941

"The army asked for 16,500 volunteers today (January 26) for the expanding Air Corps and related branches, stressing that men registered for the draft were eligible.

"Instructions to recruit this number for three-year enlistments by March 1 were dispatched to the nine corps area commanders in the continental United States.

FEB 8 1941

"Regardless of the rapid expansion, there is to be no reductions in qualifications for ground crews men with at least a High School education are still sought for enlistment.

"A substantial backlog of applications from young men who want to be military fliers promises an ample number of cadet candidates at the start of efforts to increase the annual rate of training from 7,000 to 12,000 pilots a year.

"The fledgling flier must have two years college education or its equivalent."

While the army is begging for this number of men for the air corps, Negroes, well qualified in every respect are being forced to go to Canada to join the Royal Air Force if they insist on serving their military life in the air corps . . . and they are passing the rigid physical and technical tests without difficulty. We urge Negroes, who are still interested to volunteer for this service, and if they are refused, we'd like to hear about it. We have been told there is NOT to be any jim crowism in our National Defense program.

Canadian Negro Youth Looks To United States

FEB 13 1941

TORONTO, ONTARIO—(ANP)—That a number of capable, progressive young Negroes here are migrating to the United States, and that others who consider themselves less fortunate continually look towards their sister country to the south as a land of opportunity and are bending every effort towards eventually getting over the border also, was brought out by Mrs. Viola W. Carter in a recent speech at Toronto university.

Mrs. Carter, prominent social worker of New York City, newly appointed director of the Home Service association, a welfare agency ministering to the Negro population of this city stressed the fact that Negroes in Toronto are denied work opportunities in virtually every vocational field.

Such discrimination against them has naturally led to a low standard of living and is the cause of crime and delinquency in the Negro community.

CANADA'S VITAL DEFENSE ABSORBS COLORED YOUTH

Industries Are Rapidly Training Negro Citizens

MONTREAL—(A N P) — In a special interview with Dr. K. I. Melville, colored assistant professor of pharmacology of McGill university Medical school and one of Montreal's leading citizens, it was learned that Canada's defense industries are rapidly training and absorbing Negro youths as fast as they qualify and apply.

The brilliant and noted scientist said, "Heretofore colored youths after finishing high school had to be contented with whatever porter or red cap employment that was available. The doors of industry were definitely barred in general to Negroes save in a few exceptional cases. Today, he is welcomed at the various Montreal Technical institutes and trade schools where he is taught whatever trades he desires to learn. Machinists, tool makers and pattern makers are a few of the crafts in which he is rapidly becoming proficient."

Continuing, Dr. Melville stated, "After finishing, he is given employment in his craft in one of the war connected industries. A number of them have already been assigned to the Vickers Aircraft and the Fairchild Aircraft."

The munitions industry which is expected to reach its peak by summer will take many more.

At present in St. Paul-Armint, Quebec, there is being constructed a vast munitions plant. This will be a city within a city housing, feeding and employing probably between 75,000 and 100,000. The Foundation Company of Canada is one of the leading contractors for this project.

Thus war conditions have resulted in definite progressive steps being made by the Canadian Negro. Already a factor in the Army, he is participating as skilled artisans and technicians and in this manner is becoming an integral part of Canada's defense.

The Negro In Canada

(What is Canada like from a Negro's point of view? Is it the land of freedom from prejudice and open opportunity of which we sometimes hear? Jim Hewlett, Associated Negro Press correspondent, has just made a study of Queec, the portion of Canada inhabited by French-speaking Canadians. His story of how the 5,000 Negroes living there fare is absorbing, factual, and informative.)

MONTREAL, Quebec—(By Jim Hewlett for ANP)—The Negro of the province of Quebec has no political power. He is economically important. He lacks a virile, aggressive, intelligent leadership and it is legal to discriminate against him in the province.

SEP 29 1941

There are no Negroes in the provincial or city government service.
; a)?t(n9se

There is not a single colored medical doctor, lawyer, or dentist reported practicing his profession in the province and only one church, the United Church of Canada presided over by Rev. Estes.

There is no branch of the NAACP. The Elks are inactive. The Canadian Legion post has lost its charter. There is some activity manifest in the UNIA and Odd Fellows, but aside from the Negro Community centre of which D. P. Sykes is secretary, there is no organization to combat the increasing wave of prejudice and to concern itself with the problems of the youth which are indeed manifold.

Of the million and a quarter inhabitants of Montreal, the teeming metropolis of the province, there are approximately 5,000 Negroes consisting of a large number of British West Indians, Canadians from the provinces and a few Americans. One family was reported living in Quebec City but practically all of the rest are concentrated in Montreal or its localized ghetto walling the Negroes within as in such typical American cities as New York and Chicago. They can be found in practically every section of the town except the ultra-exclusive sections which maintain a color bar.

The result is the colored brother lacks a racial consciousness and is too widely scattered to be a political significance. Integrations has produced some interracial association and intermarriage at the expense of a feeling of racial unity.

The working population consists mainly of pullman porters, red caps, garage mechanics, musicians and lavatory attendants in night clubs. The Canadian Civil Service has no Negroes in its employ. The employes must be bi-lingual, i. e., be able to speak both French and English because of the large French-speaking population in the province. This plus the lack of initiative acts as a deterrent to those who might apply.

At the present time defense work has given a few more employment.

Negroes have fared better in the business world. Rufus Rockhead, daper West Indian and proprietor of Rockhead's Paradise. has enjoyed a marked success during the past 10 years in the cabaret and tavern business. At times he has furnished employment for over 100.

Dr. Grant of St. Louis, is a successful chiropodist with a suite in the Marine Building, on the corner of Peel and St. Catherine, the heart of Montreal.

Fletcher Gray, a tailor, noted for his expert weaving, usually has from eight to ten in his employ.

Wilson's Boston Cafe, Morman's Barbecue, Lancey's Shoe Repair and the Snack Shops of Madison and Packwood have done their bit to dispel the idea that Negroes can't succeed in business if they ''deliver.''

Outstanding other personalities are Dr. Melville, noted scholar and assistant professor of pharmacology at McGill University and James A. Gay, veteran newspaperman who has been in Montreal for 36 years.

Wth regard to the twin evils, prejudice and discrimination, there is less on the surface than in the states. A few years back, Frank Christie was refused service on the grounds of color in the York tavern, connected with the Montreal forum, a sports arena. The defense lawyer contended ''He was not a fit person to be served'' leaving the color angle out. Christie won in the lower court and the tavern was fined $25. On appeal by the defense, the supreme court of Canada sitting in Ottawa, ruled with the York Tavern's defense lawyers and reversed the decision of the lower court. Thus it is legal to discriminate in the province.

SEP 29 1941

Summing up, the future of the Canadian Negro would seem to lie in the establishment of efficient small businesses catering to all since the white Canadian suffers no qualms in spending with those who give service. The encouragement of the youth to become qualified and apply for positions in the civil service and finally to arouse himself from his inherent apathy and lethargy and utilize the benefits and opportunities coincident with integration to the best of his ability.

Martinique May Be Key Defense Point

JAN 18 1941

Seizure of the Island Advocated By Officials

WASHINGTON, D. C., (ANP) —Unless diplomacy of the highest type is used by the United States will find itself involved in the European war in spite of the declarations of leaders that such will not be the case, and in this instance the entry point will not be Europe, but a little island said to be the key to the entire defense of the Panama canal, now a possession of what is left of France. That island is Martinique.

Possessed of a great harbor at Fort-de-France, one of the best on the hemisphere, Martinique has now become the topic of general discussion.

Officials of the government are advocating the seizure of the island, which won fame as the home of one of the wives of the famous Bonaparte. One editorial writer says, "same as to Martinique and the rest of the fragments of the French empire in this part of the world. Only we shouldn't ask Marshal Petain to give these places to us; we should simply take them."

AGGRESSION URGED

Writing in Collier's Magazine, Frank Gervasi, crack writer on foreign affairs, says that the island itself is no bargain and the chief city is populated by about 50,000 Negroes and 3,000 whites.

He also advocates the seizure of the harbor, but not the adoption of the natives who would then become wards of the government and another economic problem to the United States.

Imbued with French nationalism and ideals and customs, it would be difficult, says this writer, to transfer these islanders to American standards, basing his deductions on the situation in Porto Rico, where he avers the Porto Ricans still cling to the Spanish traditions and customs and language.

WOULD BE PROBLEM

Martinique would present an even more difficult problem, it is said, for the 250,000 people, the majority of which are Negro in general racial characteristics, are the victims of disease, leprosy being one of the chief scorges; syphilis and other contagious sicknesses. The diseases also have made seriou inroad in the white population which has degenerated into a type slightly above the beachcomber, according to Gervasi.

However, none of this has to do wit hthe splendid harbor which would furnish admirable landing areas for hydroplanes and roads for warships to lie at anchor.

In the interior, the roads are mere paths, with one road being in a fair condition, but of little use as far as military usage is concerned.

JAN 18 1941

So the island of Martinique, with its one good harbor and its hundreds of drawbacks, looks to be the fatal step the United States would take to enter the great European imbroglio, regardless of all intentions to remain outside the fighting business.

And, if Uncle Sam takes this fine harbor, he will take unto himself another slice of empire inhabited in the main by a vast Negro population.

Panama President Would Castrate Colored Residents

NEW YORK — President Arnulfo Arias of Panama, in preaching a doctrine of race hatred, has gone so far as to advocate castration of all Negroes there, according to Richard O. Boyer, newspaper correspondent who has just returned from a visit there. JAN 4 - 1941

According to Boyer, Arias, who is definitely anti-American and pro-Nazi, does not consider Negroes and Chinese born in Panama to be Panamanians. His chief advisor and private secretary is Carlos Yasaza, former consul to Hamburg and a reputed Nazi sympathizer.

Boyer reports:

"The Panamanians hate the Americans but they hate to an even greater degree the Jamaica Negroes who have been imported by the American government to do common labor on the canal and its defenses.

"The Americans declare that the Panamanians are loafers, that they can't do or won't do a good day's work."

70,000 PANAMAIANS LOSE CITIZENSHIP; NO SPANISH BLOOD

JAN 10 1941

PANAMA CITY, Jan. 9 (ANP)— When Panama's new constitution became effective Thursday, it left 70,000 to 90,000 persons without a country. They are the children of Negroes whose language of origin was not Spanish, and the children of Asiatics.

The constitutional provision is retroactive, denying citizenship to persons of those bloods born after Nov. 3, 1903, the date of Panamanian independence from Columbia.

The majority of those denationalized are of British West Indian extraction, descendants of laborers imported to help dig the Panama canal.

BRITISH DEMOCRACY

JAN 25 1941

Asserting that citizenship of the British Empire was the greatest heritage of the black man, Chief Justice Graham Paul of Sierra Leone, West Africa, ordered the imprisonment of two native editors for publishing seditious matter in the African Standard.

The two young men, George Thomas and Sydney Beyle, editor and assistant editor respectively, of the organ of the West African Youth League, were tried during the September sittings of the Supreme Court on charges of reprinting in the African Standard an article taken from a New York paper criticizing the British government for sending Wallace Johnson, an African trade union leader to a concentration camp under the colony's defense regulations.

The prosecution found that such an article published during wartime amounted to sedition. But before passing sentence, Judge Paul addressed the accused, saying:

"I make these sentences concurrent so that you will both have purged your offenses in time to start the New Year with a firm resolution to make yourselves loyal and exemplary citizens of your country and the British Empire. And, if in the years to come, you have anything to do with the Youth League, I hope you will direct your energies in making that League worthy of being allowed to shelter behind that other Youth League — the greatest youth league in the history of the world—I mean the league of these young people from all parts of the world different in race, creed and colour, who are today wearing His Majesty's uniform, and who are leaving their homes, enduring privations and hardships, risking even losing their lives in defense of what is their greatest heritage—citizenship of the British Empire. Now that you are on your way to prison, I hope that you will take your punishment like men—be the better for it and come out determined to earn the respect of your loyal fellow countrymen and the whole community."

It seems that Britain has one law for the colonies and another for the motherland. For, no attempt, as yet, has been made to even silence such London dailies as the Times and the News Chronicle which continue to criticize in unrestrained terms various acts of the government. If just criticism of ill-considered governmental acts is seditious then most London editors should be imprisoned. But England, unfortunately, still believes in democracy for the wealthy white citizens, and slavery for the poor blacks. No, Justice Paul, liberty is the black man's greatest heritage—not British serfdom.

NMU Asks Hull to Halt Jim-Crow in Venezuela Ports

Negro Seamen Refused Shore Leave, Smith's Letter to Secretary of State Declares—Urges Action to Protect Men

JAN 3 1941

The National Maritime Union today requested Secretary of State Cordell Hull to use his office in seeking to halt discriminatory practices of Venezuelan civil authorities against Negro seamen on board American vessels calling at Venezuelan ports. In a letter to Hull, Ferdinand C. Smith, NMU secretary, said that Negro seamen on American ships were being refused shore leave in Venezuelan ports by order of the Venezuela Government.

He enclosed copy of a notice posted by Captain John F. Charlton, of the S.S. Gulfhawk on a recent voyage informing the crew that the following crew members were not to be allowed shore leave:

1. Citizens of belligerent countries.
2. Members of the Negro race; and
3. Members of the Yellow race.

LETTER TO HULL

Smith's leter to Hull follows:

"I am writing to you at this time, in behalf of the membership of the National Maritime Union, concerning a situation which should be brought to your attention for immediate adjustment.

"An act of gross discrimination is being perpetrated against Negro citizen seamen entering the ports of Venezuela. I am enclosing a copy of a notice placed aboard the M.S. Gulfhawk, Gulf Oil Corporation, by the master of that vessel, which already has given rise to much ill feeling and discontent among all the members of the crew.

"Such a practice is, to say the least, inconsistent with the democratic ideals and principles of the American people, and I sincerely trust that you will take the necessary steps to have it discontinued and to afford proper protection to these citizens of our country."

"COLORED NATIONS DRAW COLOR LINE AGAINST NEGROES"

Noted Historian Calls It "Craziest Thing In This Crazy Modern World"—Says Latin-American Republics Have Laws On Matter.

JAN 4 - 1941

By J. A. ROGERS
(Noted Historian and Columnist)

NEW YORK, Jan. 2—Of all the crazy things in this crazy modern world, color prejudice takes the cake. And when colored folk and those nations, which are predominantly colored, draw a color line against colored peoples there is hardly a name for such insanity.

I am thinking more directly of the growing tendency of the Latin-American nations to imitate Australia, an original black man's land from which all colored people are now barred. Most of the Latin American republics have laws written and unwritten, barring foreigners of African ancestry.

Until recently, and perhaps even now, Aframerican tourists had considerable difficulty getting into Cuba. Nevertheless, the Negro's role in the winning of Cuban independence was second to none. Cuba's most renowned commander was a Negro—Antonio Maceo. And his greatest white commander and her first president, Maximo Gomez, was also of Negro ancestry, according to Sir Harry Johnston.

Mexico too, used to make it difficult even for Negro tourists to enter. Thanks to the efforts of the West Indies National Council, the N.A.A.C.P., and the radical Cardenas government, this ban has been removed. The Lawyers' Association of Mexico, itself, took up the case and denounced the ban as unconstitutional and unjust. It pointed out further that the greatest Mexican leader in the fight for independence, one for whom a Mexican state was named, and who was also Mexico's third president. Readers of Your History will recall this Negro's name.

Panama, whose population is much mixed with Negro and Indian, and which also had a Negro president, discriminates strongly against foreign-born Negroes. Its immgration laws permits free entry of white people but bars all Negroes whose original language was not Spanish. It has gone even further.

In 1940, Panama wrote this most unjust discrimination into her constitution...and made it retroactive. Now a Negro, even though born in Panama, cannot be a citizen, if the mother-tongue of his parents was not Spanish. Thousands of native-born Panamaians have thus been de-citizenized.

Talk of grandfather clauses and Hitler's anti-Jewish laws! And what's worse? The Jews, who are strong in Panama, were in favor of the anti-Negro law.

Still another nation who has long barred Negro migrants is Venezuela. Yet Negroes did more than any other to free Venezuela from Spain.

GREATEST MILITARY GENIUS IN VENEZUELA

Venezuela's greatest military genius was a Dutch West Indian mulatto — Manuel Carlos Piar — whose victory over the Spaniards at San Felix turned the tide of battle in favor of the rebels. Piar was named second in command by Bolivar but, Piar, feeling that he ought to be first, and stirred also by the injustices to the Negroes who were fighting with the rebels, incited the Negroes to revolt, and was shot by Bolivar.

Still another great Venezuelan general was Laurencio Silva, a full-blooded Negro, who, despite the strong prejudice against blacks, received from Bolivar, the latter's own aristocratic niece, Felicia, in mariage. Yet another Negro famed in Venezuelan history was Pedro Camejo, a giant black, better known as "El Negro Primero," because he was always the first in battle. Once when Bolivar asked him to name his reward he said, "All I want is a little tobacco from the enemy's camp."

Again, but for the help given to Bolivar by Alexander Petion, first president of Haiti, Venezuela might not only not have been free but Bolivar's own career might have been cut short. Twice when Bolivar was almost down and out, and took refuge in Haiti, Petion gave him money enough to carry on the fight, asking only that Bolivar free the slaves of Venezuela, when independence was won. Petion's monument stands in Venezuela today. I could go on to name a score of illustrious Venezuelan Negroes, at least five of whom were presidents.

Finally, Bolivar, who was one of the three great liberators of the New World...the other two being George Washington and Toussaint L'Ouverture...is said to be of Negro ancestry himself. But, says S. G. Inman, an authority on Latin-America: "It is often considered unpatriotic to say so...this, no doubt, because of the desire to appear well in the eyes of the European and the North American."

COLOR DISCRIMINATION EXISTS IN LATIN AMERICA

There has always been color discrimination in Latin-America. But it was never anything like that of the United States, which, prior to what has just happened in Panama, was the only country in the New World to have laws on its statute books against its own native-born citizens.

Why this growth of Negrohobia in Latin-America now? Largely to please white Americans and white American capital. The United States, strongest of the republics, is "white," and if the Latin republics are to get American support, they too must be "white," that is, meet white Americans as equals.

Abraham Lincoln, when he thought of the injustices of slavery, said that the Civil War would go on until every drop of blood drawn by the lash should be repaid by one drawn by the sword. Similarly, I am wicked enough to hope that this war will go on until Fascism based on a white epidermis shall be shattered into a million pieces.

Along with Hitler and Mussolini must also be swept out jim-crow, the Anglo-Saxon god, which existed centuries before Hitler, and which, unless we act militantly now and unite our forces, will continue to grow long after Hitler is gone.

The Black President of Guatemala

Believe-It-or-Not Ripley pointed out recently that Rafael Carrera, president of the Central America Republic of Guatemala (just south of Mexico) for twenty years, officially bore the title of "Neustro Senor" or Our Lord.

Rafael Carrera

That makes him a spiritual predecessor of Father Divine, but more than that, Rafael was what was known as a half-breed. His father was Indian and his mother was African ("Negress," Ripley says).

MAR 8 . 1941

Dana G. Munro, the American historian, seems to agree with Ripley. He calls Rafael a half-breed, a peasant who led a popular uprising, became president for life in 1844 and died in 1865.

Disagreeing, an English historian, W. H. Koebel, calls President Carrera a full-blooded Indian, a strangely powerful man.

Both historians agree that during his rise to power, whites were massacred ruthlessly, as was the case in Haiti. It's funny that historians should disagree about the parentage of Guatemala's president, but here is where we come in.

MAR 8 1941

We look to our own professors of history at Howard, Lincoln, Morgan State, Hampton, and Virginia State to give us the facts and the evidence.

From Plymouth Rock to the Straits of Magellen, one-half of the history of African participation in America has not been told.

They must not leave us to depend upon occasional friends like Ripley or inaccurate observers who have little or nothing at stake.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Dream's End

Recurrent dream of many a homeless European and most refugee relief organizations is of pioneering colonies in the New World where refugees may live off the land, build themselves self-supporting communities. So far the only place this dream has come even close to reality is the Dominican Republic, whose boss, Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, offers land and conditional citizenship to sponsored immigrants. There nine refugee settlements have been set up, eight for Spanish Republicans, one (mostly) for German Jews. But last week, looking the colonies over, reporters found the realities none too pleasant.

MAR 3 - 1941

Of the eight Spanish colonies, started in 1939, five have already folded. Reasons: disease and barren land. On the remaining three are settled 400 of the 1,300 Spanish refugees in the Republic. On the northern Atlantic shore is the Sosua colony where about 250 refugees from the Nazis live, supported largely by charitable U. S. Jews.

At a Spanish colony, newsmen found conditions only a degree better than a concentration camp: 120 people without adequate tools, medical supplies, clothing or food trying courageously to coax a living from 20 arid acres, four milkless cows, a few pigs and chickens. A political fight has frozen the funds supposed to support the colony, which sinks deeper in debt every time it buys the meagre rations of coffee, rice and beans it lives on. Only bright spot was the morale and spirit of the colonists themselves who, ridden with anemia and malaria, work desperately hard, hold classes for natives.

At Sosua, backed by a bankroll of more than $1,000,000, things are somewhat better. The colonists have a good-sized dairy herd and some hope of raising cash crops on the excellent land. But Sosua, too, has problems. The colony has been expensive, unproductive to date, and is now in the throes of reorganization. There are 124 unmarried colonists, only twelve unmarried women, and around the settlement stand frantic signs saying "We Want Women." The non-Spanish-speaking refugees are continually getting into small squabbles with the Dominicans. The colony needs more farmers and fewer intellectuals. Above all it needs some kind of agricultural miracle to raise it above the poorhouse economy of the Caribbean.

Casting up accounts, observers decided that refugee colonies need more than dreaming. Concretely: cash, expert planning, hard-headed management.

STATE DEPT. PROBES COLOR BAR AT VENEZUELAN PORTS

JAN 19 1941

NEW YORK, Jan. 16—The state Department has asked the American Embassy at Caracas, Venezuela, to investigate the barring of Negroes and Chinese seamen from any port of entry to that country where American ships may call.

Announcement of the action taken by the State Deaprtment was contained in a letter sent to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People by Harold D. Finley, assistant chief of the Division of American Republics. The association had asked Secretary Hull to persuade the Venezuelan government to withdraw an order, a copy of which was posted on an American vessel, "U. S. Gulf Hawk," denying passes to Negroes, Chinese, and any member of the ship's crew belonging to a "belligerent nation."

The State Department's action represents a departure from the position taken on a previous occasion when the N. A. A. C. P. protested the barring of American Negroes from a South American Republic with which our government was on friendly terms. In October, 1939, when the association protested the immigration law operating in the Republic of Panama, which barred American Negroes, Chinese, Arabs, Turks, Hindus, Syrians, and Lebanese, the State Department refused to interfere on the ground that international practice would be violated, since the United States also regulated the entry of nationals from other countries into America. In the case of Mexico, where early in January, 1939, the N. A. A. C. P. protested against regulations governing American Negro tourists entering Mexico, it developed that Mexican consular agents had adopted American practices against Negro tourists entirely without the authority of the Mexican government. The Mexican government several months ago, made it plain that its consular agents were directed to permit travel passes to Negro tourists into that country without hindrance.

Julian Passes Final Tests, Now In Canadian Air Force

JAN 12 1941 567 war JAN 12 1941 JAN 12 1941

.. By JOHN H. THOMPSON

NEW YORK—(A N P)—Col Hubert Fauntleroy Julian, erstwhile Ethiopian air ace, who achieved this distinction by never fighting an air battle while in Ethiopia and styled Harlem's 'Black Eagle" by ridiculing daily papers, jubilantly announced to reporters this week that he had passed the final tests at Ottawa, Canada, as a pilot in the Royal [illegible] Force. He received his commission this past week.

Attired in an expensive flying coat of real leather, direct from his Bond street tailors in London, minus the monocle he cutomarily wears, Julian told reporters he hoped to be in London within the next few weeks, wanted to fight his heralded air duel with Reichmarshall Goering at the first opportunity, berated the Associated Negro Press for sending out articles which he said held up his exploits to ridicule.

Said the redoubtable "No-Way

Says He Hopes To Be in London Within Few Weeks

Corrigan," whose first and only attempt at a non-stop crossing of the Atlantic ended in Flushing Meadows, "I don't give a hoot for all the Negro papers in the world. The white press is what makes me. No matter what the Negro papers say about me I am still the biggest Negro in the country, have more money than any other Negro and don't ask any one for favors but the white people. As long as the white papers give me a spread once in awhile I am satisfied."

Considerable mystery has been evinced here in Harlem as to the probably sources of Julian's seemingly unlimited supply of funds. The veil of mystery was partly lifted here this week when Julian hinted that he was involved in one of the numerous espionage rings now operating in this country. He also passed out hints that he was not going to England to engage in flying but would be a member of the British Intelligence Service.

It is known here that Julian was called into the secretary of state's office in Washington recently and reprimanded for talking too much about affairs of state. It was wondered here why a private citizen of any country would be called down by a government official unless his activities as an espionage agent were known. An unknown citizen's utterances on any question could not have any bearing on any international situation, it was pointed out.

JULIAN SILENT

And Col. Julian, the best dressed, most expensively attired Negro in Harlem, gives no inkling to the true facts. An incidentally, in an effort to ascertain what country Julian claims citizenship, he was last listed as a citizen of Turkey. A native of the BWI, he changes citizenship like a snake does his skin and with less apparent effort. No matter what country to which he claims allegiance, he finds no difficulty in coming in and out of the United States. It is known he refused citizenship in Italy following the conquering of that country.

He recently gave a demonstration of his flying ability for reporters of the Amsterdam News, a local weekly.

Julian is reported to have had to use considerable influence to win his commission in the RAF.

West Africans In The R. A. F

FEB 3 - 1941

Mr Ernest C. T. Herman, the writer of this article, is a Native of Warri.

He passed his London Matriculation in 1936 and was formerly a Tutor and Scout Master at the Baptist Academy, Lagos.

Mr Herman is now studying Electrical Engineering in Manchester, England.

"These are fine fellows," said a man to me as we switched our conversation to the contributions of the coloured peoples of the Empire to the war.

Five West Africans have been in the news lately.

They have enrolled in the Royal Air Force and are soon to commence training.

The young men are Messrs. V. A. Oke, S. K. Nelson, C. O. Williams, J. B. Amissah and G. Nanka Bruce.

Incidentally, the first three are Nigerians and the last two are from the Gold Coast.

It is believed by some that they are the first West Africans, and perhaps the first Africans for that matter, to enter the R.A.F.

To the city of Manchester, therefore, belongs the honour of being the first to enrol Africans in the R. A. F.

FEB 3 - 1941

The "Daily Sketch" created a sensation of surprise and admiration when it published the news of these daring men and a photograph showing them as they were signing the papers.

Many friends have spoken to me about these men and have expressed hopes that they would succeed in the great adventure to crush Hitler.

This is indeed a promising beginning and an indication that Africans may hope for better times under the aegis of the Union Jack after we have won the war.

The African has always been willing to offer his hope to fight in a noble cause, especially where it is for the right of life, liberty and the enjoyment of abundant happiness.

FEB 3 - 1941

He has descended from a long line of fighters, men who ruled more gloriously than the barbarous dictators of our century, who are swift to shed blood, whose tongues are deceitful, and whose feet walk on the paths of destruction.

In the wake of these dictators the heart rending cries of misery, want, and death forever ascend a testimony against them until the day of judgment.

The African has always been sincere in his offers of co-operation, for he has learnt through the centuries that man can only hope to live peacefully and progressively by joining forces with his fellow men against aggression and wanton privilege.

But somehow his motives had always been misinterpreted and misrepresented.

He had no consideration in any of the three fighting services—Army, Navy and Air Force.

His colour had always been against him.

And that is not his fault.

Who dares to blame Nature for his creation?

Every living thing which has blood in its veins has a definite colour—be that white or red, black or yellow.

FEB 3 - 1941

Man always makes a mountain of a mole hill and a wide gate to look like a narrow crevice.

That our Empire is discarding some rotten ideas, snobbishness is patent, but why it requires the exigencies of a long war to bring this about cannot be understood.

That we are surely heading toward a better Empire in which all its peoples, especially for the sixty millions in the tropics, will be united in common bond of brotherhood is probable.

In planning for the Empire, after the war, Africans must have an important consideration.

The future policy of the British Government with regard to the West African Colonies should be based on brotherliness in all sincerity.

Except the Africans are encouraged and helped out of the past that still lingers over them, the Empire will always have a weak link somewhere.

We cannot afford to let the Africans remain backward if our Empire must present a progressive front to the world.

Mussolini knows how Africans can punish cruel and hated men such as he is.

In East Africa, West Africans are contributing a by no means small effort to hasten the crushing defeat of Fascism.

"Fascism," say these five West Africans, "has never been known in Africa.

FEB 3 - 1941

"We are joining the R. A. F for two reasons—the first, to rid the world and Africa of the threat of a Fascist bondage and, the second, to prove to our British brethren that we in Africa can fly."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr Tunde Alakija, another West African from Lagos, has also joined the R. A. F.

BRITAIN O.K.'S WEST INDIAN'S WAR OBJECTION

SEP 27 1941

Plea Of American Wife Aids Mate Who Refuses To Fight For Crown

LONDON. — Dr. Guy Errington Kerr, one of the best known Negro medical practitioners in England who has a practice in the exclusively white district of Cheem, Surrey, appealed as a conscientious objector when called upon to fight for his king and country here recently.

Dr. Kerr, who was born in the West Indies, and who is married to the former Gertrude Gamblin, daughter of a well known Tuskegee grocer, appealed to the London tribunal saying that he objected to taking life, on humanitarian grounds.

"I lived in the United States in the 1920's when gangsterism was rampant," said Dr. Kerr who left America and came to England to escape race prejudice.

SEP 27 1941

"Some doctors entered into agreement with the gangers—which in many cases made their practices lucrative—to treat these men when they were wounded in gun battles with the police.

SEP 27 1941

"I feel," said Dr. Kerr, "that these doctors were as guilty as their gangster patients were in the crimes they committed."

It was Mrs. Kerr who made the best witness for her husband, however. A graduate of Tuskegee institute and of Fisk university, she was formerly girl reserve secretary in the Indianapolis Y.W.C.A. She said that when her husband was 19 and in the United States he had stopped a mob from lynching a man by talking to them. Since then, Mrs. Kerr told the judges, the doctor has been convinced it is never necessary to use violence.

Mrs. Kerr so impressed the judges with her husband's sincerity that they decided to exempt him from all forms of combatant service, but directed that he should be employed on non-combatant duties. The Kerrs have a beautiful home and garden in Surrey.

Negroes Whipping Italy

MAR 1 5 1941

That black Africans must be a very bitter one for Italy to take. Taking their cue from the Germans, the Italians declared that the Negroes of Africa were uncivilized and cowardly, easy to conquer and much in need of civilizing at the hands of the New Empire of the Romans. Now it seems that these semi-savages are too much for the civilization of Rome and that they are teaching these same Romans some lessons in how to retreat before a victorious army chiefly supported by Black fighters.

We are of the opinion that most people, especially in the southern part of the United States, are prone to overlook the fact that Italy is being beaten in Africa by black men. We read the papers about how the Italians are fleeing in panic before the English and how they are being taken as prisoners by the tens of thousands but nothing is said about the fact that many of the soldiers are the majority in many instances, are black natives under the leadership of white English officers in the higher brackets.

History tells us that black men fought nobly and well in the legions of the Old Roman Empire of which the present would-be empire is only a very poor imitation. It is a sad commentary upon the leadership of Italy today that they are being whipped in these modern times by the descendants of the brave Negroes who helped their race to conquer the world a few short centuries ago. Ingratitude is here punished with providential irony.

NAZIS DON'T TRUST NORDIC WOMEN WITH COLORED RUSSIANS

Vichy Government Abrogates Equality Of Negro People

West African Pilot
OCT 7 - 1941
Page 1

LONDON (BM).—The black populations in the French Colonial Empire who, since the Revolution of 1789, enjoyed political equality with the whites, are now disfranchised.

Under the new Constitution which has converted Democratic France into a full fledged Fascist State and pledged to support Hitler's "New Order" in Europe, all Negroes will now be considered the subjects of Vichy.

Senegal, in West Africa, Guadeloupe and Martinique, in the West Indies, and French Guiana, on the mainland of South America, will no longer be represented by Negro Deputies in the French Parliament.

The present black representatives, Mr Galandou-Diouf, the Negro Deputy from Dakar; Mr Gratien Candance, the scholarly black Deputy from Guadeloupe, and Mr Meneville from Guiana, as well as the mulatto Senator, Mr Henri Lemery, have all been expelled.

At the time when France collapsed and the Bordeaux Junta was negotiating to hand over parts of the Colonies to appease Hitler and Mussolini, these men refused to expose the intrigues of Marshal Petain and Mr Laval.

They denounced Mr Felix Eboue, Negro Governor-General of French Equatorial Africa, for continuing the struggle on the side of General de Gaulle.

OCT 7 - 1941

As a reward, Marshal Petain promised them high offices under the new government set up at Vichy, following the signing of the Armistice.

Mr Lemery was made Minister for the Colonies and given the task to recover the Equatorial territories which Governor Eboue detached from Vichy control and placed under the Free French Movement.

He failed to under-mine the influence of Mr Eboue among the Africans and was dismissed from office.

Later, it was reported that he was placed under arrest, but this was denied by a Vichy spokesman, who, however, confirmed his dismissal from the head of the Colonial Ministry.

The fate of the other coloured Deputies is unknown.

One thing is certain, their citizenship and parliamentary privileges have been rescinded.

And under the new regime, former Deputies will receive no salary or pension.

Colonials living in territories still under Vichy control will be governed in future by officials directly responsible to Admiral Jean Darlan, who supersedes General Weygand as Vichy "boss" over French Africa.

Native Chiefs will be used as agents in the villages to impose the orders of the Vichy officials.

They will collect the taxes out of which they will receive a commission in lieu of salary.

Recruiting forced labour for military purposes will also be assigned to the Chiefs.

Already, thousands of Natives have been rounded up and set to work on fortifications at Dakar under German engineers.

It is alleged that Hitler might take over this naval base as soon as the work has been completed.

BAIT TO CATCH NEGROES OFFERED IN BRITISH NEWS

ANP Writer Tells How Much Better Off Race Will Be "After War Has Been Won"

By Rudolph Dunbar
London Editor Associated Negro Press

MAR 14 1941

LONDON, March 13—Olaf Stapleton the philosopher, stated recently: "War, though a huge calamity, is also a great opportunity. It clears the ground for new buildings, new ideas. War brutalizes, but it may also humanize." True. Those are great words. For colored peoples in the British empire, this war will be the means of freeing them from most of the tyrannies of imperialism.

One of the most heartening signs of the day is Anthony Eden's statement in the House of Commons concerning the position of Ethiopia.

The Foreign Secretary's statement conveyed words of magnificent promise. In London it is thought that it would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of the step taken by the Foreign Secretary. Far more than the future the Abyssinian will almost certainly hang upon the decision: perhaps the future of the whole African Continent.

Great praise is due the British Government in recognizing Haile Selassie as His Imperial Majesty to the throne of Ethiopia. This recognition, however, is overdue but nevertheless, it will be welcomed by the colored peoples of the world and indeed, all right-minded white people as well for its promises reparation for a terrible injustice. History has its strange injustices; In June 1936, Lord Simon (then Sir John Simon) said, "I am not prepared to see a single ship sunk . . . in the attempt to restore Abyssinian independence." MAR 14 1941

Future Status of Abyssinia

The future status of Abyssinia must necessarily await the end of the war. I am able to state from authorative source (the nature of which I am not permitted to disclose at present) that, Abyssinia will be given assets of incomparable value after the war. In some circles it is thought that an entirely new chapter in European-African relations has been begun; and that, although no one can yet read the end of it, it cannot but be happier than any that have gone before.

The Emperor of Abyssinia was a progressive ruler. His desire to carry out the reforms his country needed was stronger than the State apparatus at his disposal. He was concerned to obtain foreign assistance to modernise his government. It may be assumed that this help is destined to be given him within the framework of an international agreement at the conclusion of peace. No modern industrial country can live without foreign markets and raw materials therefore, it stands to reason that Abbyssinia must get a loan and technical help. Loans, however, can exploit and enslave especially when it comes to the point of raising black men to the same economic standard as white men.

I reproduce here a magnificent editorial which appeared in the "News Chronical" a leading London Daily which has championed the cause of Abyssinia ever since the outbreak of the Italo-Abyssinian war.

News Chronicle Editorial

"It must have given Mr. Eden a good deal of pleasure to announce in the House of Commons that the British Government would welcome the reappearance of an independent Ethiopian State and that it recognized the claim of the Emperor Haile Selassie to the throne. In January, 1939, a British Premier toasted "the King of Italy and Emperor of Ethiopia" in Rome. That was a black moment for the friends of true peace and international law as it was for the dignified Negus in retirement. Today we live in more strenuous but infinitely more hopeful times. The Emperor's faith and patience will soon be rewarded and the ideals which perished when we allowed Italy to invade Abyssinia will be reborn.

MAR 14 1941

Note well the details of Mr. Eden's statement: "Gone are the days when we might have tried to turn the misfortunes of a rival Power to our own imperial advantage. We have no territorial ambitions in Abyssinia." These words coming from Hitler, would have been derided by the world But the British Government, speaking for the British people, means what it says. From the time being, of course, the military operations in Abyssinia will require temporary Measures of military guidance and control by British. These are to be carried out in cooperation with the Emperor, but the promise is given that they will be brought to an end as soon as the situation permits.

The Emporor himself has stated hen when petace has been made he will still need help and advise in economic and political matters. This, ni the poinion of the British Government, "should be the subject of international arrangement." This is the right line.

If there should prove to be an appreciable time-lag between the final pacification of Abyssinia and the conclusion of general peace, it might be wise for us to underline our disinterestedness by suggesting that the Emperor should choose some non-British advisers in addition to those British advisors with whom he will undoubtedly wish to work. When the war is over, the trusteeship of the white man in Africa will provide one of our greatest problems and greatest opportunities. If it is wisely and unselfishly tackled, as this statement on Abyssinia gives hope that it may be, civilization will have taken a long step forward. The ideal we must aim at is the international control of all colonial administration, with free and equal trade rights exercised in the interests as much of the native population as of the nations which require raw materials and markets.

So far, the British Government has been reluctant to specify its war aims in any detail and in some parts of the world that reluctance has called forth criticism. But it will not be lost upon the world that in the case of Abyssinia, while the issue of the greater struggle is still undecided, we are already seeking to put into practical force an aim which must be regarded as one of the most important of all if we are to build a new international free jealous rivalries and the greedy exploitation of backward people."

TRICKING THE TRINIDADIANS

England, the self-styled Mother of Democracy, is running true to form in Trinidad by trotting out a new constitution for that unhappy colony.

Whenever the terribly exploited serfs in any of Britain's colonial slave pens grow militant and seem on the verge of revolt, John Bull goes into his appeasement act to make them believe they are going to get self-government.

Britain's Secretary of State for the Colonies has now decreed that the Legislative Council will contain as many nominated as elected members.

For the benefit of the unitiated, let us point out that in the few places where colored people vote in the British Empire there are usually more nominated than there are elected members of the legislature, and the nominated members are all officials appointed either by the governor or the Colonial Office.

Thus, if all elected members vote against a government measure, they lose just the same because the nominated members always vote for the government, with the governor casting the deciding vote in case of a tie.

While the new Trinidad Constitution equalizes the nominated and elected personnel, the governor still casts the deciding vote on the closely-contested legislation; but even if he did not, the workers would still lose because most of them are disfranchised by property and wage qualifications cleverly designed to keep the poor from the polls.

After all, are they not merely "the lesser breeds without the law?"

Haile Selassie Tells Troops to Be Merciful To Italians Captured in Fighting in Ethiopia

LONDON, March 26 (UP)—Emperor Haile Selassie, now leading his Ethiopian tribesmen in battle against the Italians, has issued a proclamation urging them to refrain from indulging in any "cruelties" against Italian captives.

The Negus yesterday established headquarters in the Ethiopian town of Burye, about fifty miles northwest of the Italian military base of Debra Markos and about 170 miles from Addis Ababa. Burye had been taken from the Italians by native forces.

MAR 27 1941

Richard Austen Butler, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, informed the House of Commons today that Royal Air Force planes were dropping copies of Haile Selassie's proclamation upon native centers and native troops throughout Ethiopia.

The proclamation says:

"I charge you solemnly to receive kindly and protect those Italians who may surrender to you without arms and not to retaliate with the cruelty that they inflicted upon our people, but to show yourselves to be honorable, humane soldiers.

Conduct at Adowa Cited

MAR 27 1941

"Do not forget that when the valiant Ethiopians made the Italians prisoners at the Battle of Adowa [in 1896] they handed them over to the Emperor without doing them any harm, thus earning for Ethiopia honor and a good name."

Mr. Butler recently informed Commons that Britain could not consent to any mass evacuation of the 200,000 Italians non-combatants from Italian East Africa unless Italy submitted to a "general surrender."

His statement at that time followed reports that the Italians, fearing a bloody massacre of Italian colonists, were attempting frantically to remove them from Ethiopia to escape the native Ethiopian rebellion.

In recent days it has been reported that the Italians are attempting to remove men, women and children from Addis Ababa over the heavily bombed railroad from the Ethiopian capital to Jibuti, on the Gulf of Aden Coast.

Natives Cut a Key Road

Dispatches from Khartum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, today stated that Ethiopian insurgents led by a black-bearded priest had cut the key road linking the Italian stronghold of Gondar, north of Lake Tana in Ethiopia, and the Eritrean capital of Asmara.

The Italians recently have been sending heavy reinforcements along this road to the besieged defenders of Cheren, Eritrea. The road was cut by the capture of forts on both sides of the Takkazye River.

So important is the road that the Italians are expected to make a strong counter-attack in an effort to regain it. But it was believed certain that the Ethiopians would be able, in any event, to hold their positions close to the road and harass any Italians trying to use it.

The fighting priest was reported to have become an implacable enemy of Italy when the Italians burned his church.

The English And Color Prejudice

APR 1 3 1941

By WILLIAM E. PICKENS

Dear Reader: The article by George Padmore in the March Crisis magazine, moves me as much as it moves you. Only I am moved because I know that the article is a considerable distortion about the character of the English in England—while some of you, perhaps, may be moved by the shocking, even though false, intimations of the article that the English are as bad toward colored people as are the Americans, or even as bad as Hitlerites would be if they could. Even the title of George Padmore's Crisis article is a misstatement: that "Hitler Makes British Drop Color Bar." Hitler has not made the British do anything about the color question: we might as well say: "Hitler makes Haile Selassie and Eboue, and other African blacks who have brains in their cranial, rush to the side of the British and fight the Axis powers."—If ever Hitler gets into position to make the British do anything about colored people, he will make them put the Negroes into such a hell of slavery as the world has not yet known.

Two years ago I sat in George Padmore's office in London, when the elder statesman, Mr. Chamberlain, was running to and fro, from London to Munich and Berchtesgaden, trying to persuade Herr Hitler not to start a war, for which Britain and the rest of the world was totally unprepared, save alone for the superiority of the British fleet. At that time I told Padmore and his radical associates, white and black, that it was certainly to the credit of the English civilization that these black men were able to keep their office open and carry on, just short of treason, on that corner in London. In Berlin or Rome or Moscow, their heads would have been in one hole and their bodies in another, long before war started. And in Mississippi—well, in Mississippi, so to speak, they would have been since been in Minnesota—or else.

Once I had more than 60 lecture engagements all over England, and in Wales and Scotland—in all of the larger cities and in many of the smaller and even the smallest places—where the English are English indeed. Also I have been all over the United States, over and over again in most places—so that this I know to be the fact: That, for the Negro, the worst place in England is better than the best place in the United States. There is race prejudice in both countries, and in most others. When one people holds down another, there always develops prejudices against the under group—and the Englishmen, especially those who went abroad as colonials, have had a long conditioning in the business of governing darker races. The colonials abroad in the empire are therefore more nearly like Mississippians—but the English in England are different. The best cities in America, from the Negro's standpoint, are worse than the worst places in England. Seattle, San Francisco, New York are far behind London in the practice of liberality toward Negroes. Seattle is almost wide open to colored Americans (if they are not Orientals), but not quite. Two years ago in London, and many times before, I could roam through the whole town, and stop and step into any public place, and eat and drink, and without receiving any discourtesy could crowd shoulder to shoulder with the thronging English people, without a ripple of displeasure. The only city under the American flag that I have so far found like that is Honolulu, Hawaii—and I am wondering what may have happened there since we have now crowded about 50,000 soldiers and sailors from continental United States into that island fortress.

The anti-British complexes in Padmore's article would give the unknowing the impression that London is like Atlanta or Washington. That is a false impression. None of these places, including London, is quite fit to raise a black child in, but up to this minute London certainly tops the list.

Not until this present war have the British been training black boys from their empire for service in the air corps, and neither has the United States. They have not before needed to do so; and white folk in England are just like the people of any other race anywhere, that in times of peace and plenty only the locally dominant race (Japanese in Japan, pale faces in Mississippi) is inducted into the "fancy" military services, like airplaning and sea-going. In times of peace, when soldiering means only marching through the streets, in well tailored clothes, with rattling drums, blaring horns and flying flags—with no enemy in sight or mind—then, Dear Reader, that is always the privilege of the chosen people, and only a few of them.

But when real war comes, with its trenches and mud, and lice and maggots, and winged death—then the service base is broadened. To say that the enemy is to have credit for "making a people do such a natural thing, has about as much sense in it as to say: "The prospective lice and maggots have compelled the British——." And notice: when the British begin training their black boys for the air corps, they put them in as individuals, training them along with the white English boys—wasting no good money and energy on silly and expensive jim crow. But when the United States starts the Negro for the cavalry or the air service, there is a black cavalry regiment in Kansas and a Negro air unit in Illinois. None of these people is perfect, but the British are ahead—just as truly as they were ahead on the subject of human slavery, refusing to return our run-away Negroes from Canada, and ruling in their bewigged courts that when a slave sets foot on "English soil" and "breathes English air," he becomes "ipso facto free."

Padmore's article is good, but very misleading for an innocent reader. Padmore is a British citizen, and like many others from the West Indies, who have at some time been kicked by some unworthy British colonial, his feelings against the whites of his empire has become bigger than his world statesmanship. Feeling will influence but should not be allowed to dominate sound thinking—Think of Eboue, tall black man from the Caribbean, now governor of French Equatorial Africa; he is taking all the heart of Africa out of the Vichy camp and into the Free French democratic movement. Think of Haile Selassie, emperor of Abyssinia, exile of six years because of the faithlessness of a league of nations; he is now fighting side by side with British comrades, not only for British victory but for Abyssinia. These black men are hard-headed. Hard headed blacks everywhere will choose the same side—for the anti-British side in this fight, from Japan to Germany, and from Moscow to Mussolini, means death to black leadership, and to the black masses it would mean what is far worse than death—SLAVERY.

Colour Bar In British Boxing

AUG 9 1941

According to SAPA's Reuter the question of coloured boxers fighting for British championships was raised recently when Tommy Martin, who is fighting Jack London in an eliminating contest for the Empire heavyweight title, protested that he was not allowed to fight for the British title, has had an echo in Parliament.

The British Home Secretary, Mr. Herbert Morrison, in a written reply to a question, said: "While I am in entire sympathy with the view that there should be no discrimination against British subjects on colour grounds, I understand that there are differences of opinion on the question whether spectacular fights between opponents of different colours ought to be encouraged and that it is for this reason and not from any prejudice against coloured boxers that there is a rule of the British Boxing Board of Control applying, not to all boxing competitions but to contestants for the championship of Great Britain.

Dreiser, Robeson Greet British Peoples Parley

JAN 9 1941

(Wireless to the Daily Worker)

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Theodore Dreiser, noted American author, and Paul Robeson, great Negro singer, have cabled their greetings to the Peoples Convention which opens in London Sunday, it was announced here today.

Dreiser acclaimed the convention's stand for a people's government to replace the imperialist regime of money and privilege.

Robeson hailed it for its "courageous struggle for the freedom and well-being not only of the English but all peoples."

Dreiser's cablegram declares:

"Warmly and hopefully I salute the British Peoples Convention. For I keenly desire that the money and privilege and so power and war-mad imperialist groups that now controls England and the British Empire be replaced by a people's government—a government of the farmers and workers and clerks of England—and no others. For your imperialist group lives and functions for itself—not for your advancement or liberty. It has done nothing for you, nor for the five hundred million inhabitants of the Empire. Nor will it. Set it aside. End this money and privilege war and help the world to a new day. Our American five per cent who control the money of America will fight you—but the ninety-five per cent of the Americans who make America what it is, will come to your aid. Yours very truly, Theodore Dreiser."

JAN 9 1941

Robeson's message read:

"All my warmest greetings to People's Convention. Feels strange not being there to do my bit. From here we eagerly follow your courageous struggle for the freedom and well being, not only of English but all peoples. Magnificent. Carry on. Salud. Paul Robeson."

EBOUE CALLED THE HERO OF FREE FRANCE

FEB 15 1941

West Indian Patriot Strikes First Blow Against Nazism

Adolphe Felix Sylvestre Eboue, civil governor of Chad, rich province in French Equatorial Africa, who was dismissed last September by the Vichy government, was described last week by the famous war correspondent Ireland Stowe as one of the bravest men, black or white, and the first man to strike a decisive blow against the advocates of subservience to Hitler and Nazi Germany.

Eboue, a six-foot, dark-skinned, ex-Martiniquan, and the first black man anywhere to become governor, lost his post when he led a revolt against the authority of the Petain government and joined the "Free France" group of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

Writing in the Daily News, Mr. Stowe said:

"More than by any other individual or group of individuals, one man saved the vast resources and spaces of the French Congo for the defenders of self-government, free men and free speech. Through an almost incredible bit of poetic justice the man who did this was a black man, and a native of the French West Indian island of Martinique.

Trusted Leader

"In its tolerance and lack of racial bigotry the French republic educated him and reared him in both social and political equality. It made him a trusted leader of its colonial civil service in West Africa, a chief administrator in Guadeloupe and finally the civil governor of the extremely strategical province of Chad in northermost Equatorial Africa.

"Because of his upbringing under applied democracy and because of his devotion to the freedom that France gave him as a black man, Adolphe Felix Sylvestre Eboue became the first man anywhere in the farflung French colonial empire to strike a decisive, incalculable blow against the advocates and practitioners of subservience to Hitler and Nazi Germany.

"Today six-foot, dark-skinned, ex-Martiniquan Adolphe Eboue is governor-general, not merely of Chad province, but of all French Equatorial Africa with its 912,049 square miles of territory—a kingdom which is probably dozens of times larger than any black man has ever ruled before. It is his job to govern 3,500,000 natives and many thousands of whites as well, but he enjoys the unqualified respect of Frenchmen and natives alike. After all, he is a Frenchman. Curiously enough, a Frenchman from the Americas.

Highly Strategic Center

"If the pro-Vichy, pro-Nazi French authorities in Dakar could browbeat Governor Eboue into falling in line and abandoning Chad to the puppet government of Petain and Laval, German and Italian troops might one day invade the Sudan from Chad province and so conquer Egypt from the rear.

"Eboue's capital was Fort Lamy a highly strategic military center undoubtedly the most important in north-central Africa. Air lines from both Timbuctoo to the west and from British Nigeria to the southwest converged at Fort Lamy, then continued on the direct route to Britain's Sudan fortress of Khartoum.

"Fort Lamy was also a vital center for French African troops. With these facts clearly in mind, Dakar informed Governor Eboue that emissaries from Vichy were en route to Fort Lamy and ordered him to declare adherence to the Vichy capitulation at once.

"Close friends here describe Eboue as quiet and big, for years a star player of rugby football, a man of exceptional forcefulness and will power.

Joined Gen. de Gaulle

"The bravest black man, and certainly one of the bravest men, black or white, in the vast French colonial empire responded entirely in character. Immediately he sent back word to Dakar that no emissaries of the traitorous Vichy regime would be received by him; that none of them would be allowed inside Chad province and that any or all who set foot within his province would be arrested on the spot for treachery.

"Simultaneously, without consulting any neighboring provinces of the French Congo and without going into a huddle with politicians anywhere, Governor Eboue announced officially that Chad province had joined the 'Free France' movement of Gen. de Gaulle. All his troops, white officers and native men, stood by him. It was the first 'revolt' for freedom anywhere in the French colonies. Incidentally, none of the Vichy emissaries were so lion-hearted as to attempt to enter Chad. There, for the first time, Gen. de Gaulle had French soil upon which he could fight.

Leadership Paved Way

"The leadership of Martinique's native son touched off the spark that prompted all of French Equatorial Africa to declare its fidelity to the French republic. It paved the way, especially in the capital of Brazzaville, for the arrival of another loyal Frenchman shortly afterward. He was Gen. de Larminat, formerly French chief of staff in Syria. He reached the French Congo in disguise, but found that most Frenchmen there were completely in accord with Eboue's action in Chad. Grave doubts existed, however, about resident Gov. Gen. Husson.

FEB 15 1941

"At 2 o'clock in the morning a young, slender, monocled French officer named Capt. Bonnet went to the governor-general's mansion. He told Husson that the French Congo had risen for 'Free France' and Gen. de Gaulle. The governor-general protested, declared that the Congo empire would support Vichy and shouted for the arrest of Bonnet. Without so much as jarring the monocle from his eye, the mild-looking little captain knocked the politically minded M. Husson down. Within 10 minutes he was under lock and key.

"This is how and why Gen. Edgar Rene Maries de Larminat became high commissioner of French Equatorial Africa and M. Eboue, the man who saved the French Congo, became its governor-general."

Haile Selassie Raises Flag At Hidden Ethiopian Outpost

SOMEWHERE IN ETHIOPIA (via Khartoum), Jan. 15.—(Delayed)—Former Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia proudly raised the red, yellow and green flag of his former kingdom in a hidden mountain clearing here today, then set off to the interior to head British-aided Ethiopian tribesmen fighting their Italian conquerors.

The conquering Lion of Judah, driven from his throne in 1936 by Premier Mussolini's troops, came back to Ethiopia in a British army plane.

He flew from Khartoum, British headquarters in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Accompanying him were a British liaison officer, Ras Kassa, his former War Minister and a dignitary of the Ethiopian Church.

JAN 24 1941

The Negus, exultant and determined, gazed down searchingly as the plane circled over the wooded hills of his former kingdom, seeking the landing field prepared by his soldiers. Then the pilot swung his craft through a narrow clearing, its wings clearing trees on either side by a bare 10 feet.

A British staff major greeted the ex-Emperor and accompanied the party on an automobile trip to an Ethiopian encampment, where dignitaries taking part in the welcoming ceremony included the former crown prince of Ethiopia.

INDIA'S NATIVES ROILED OVER "JIM CROW" OF BRITISH

MODERN FARMER

"Democratic Rule" In South Africa Found Not So Hot By Dark-hued Visitors.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

CAPE TOWN, S. Africa, Feb. 20 (ANP)—This city's Indian colony is in a great furore as result of a series of insults heaped upon a group of Indian students who stopped here recently, enroute to Calcutta, from a trip to England.

Spokesman for the students was D K. Basu, prominent barrister of Calcutta. So great was the indignation aroused over the treatment accorded Basu and companions in all places of business catering to the general public, that a protest was made to General Jan Smuts, premier of the Union of South Africa.

Relating their experiences, Mr. Basu said: "The P. and O. ship 'Strathallan' arrived in the Cape Town harbour, and the passengers were allowed to go ashore in the afternoon.

"We hired a taxi and asked the driver to take us to the centre of the town. Immediately we came out of the port, we were stopped by the police, who asked us to show our passes to the office, which was very near that place. Before entering the office to our great surprise, we saw that 'Europeans only" was written on the wall of the office.

"After getting down from the taxi, we wanted to have cold drinks. We entered a restaurant which was near at hand. But the waiter there asked us to clear out, as being dark people we could not have drinks there. Similarly we tried in 10 or 12 restaurants, but without success. In one, the waiter did not object to serving us, but the manager was against it.

"Nearly all the places the reply was that the law of the country would not allow them to serve a brown man, and we were asked to go to the native quarters.

"In one or two restaurants we saw that the European stewards of our ship were allowed to go in and have drinks though we had to come away.

"Then we tried to go to a cinema to see a picture. The girl at the counter asked us to wait and sent for the manager. The manager asked us about our nationality, and on hearing that we were Indians, he said he would not allow us to enter.

"Even the urinals are specially reserved for Europeans, and we were not allowed to enter there either.

"We went to the native quarters. They were dirty, and there was not sufficient light in the streets."

As a result of the incident, a telegram was sent Premier Gen. Smuts from Lahore, India, by Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, president Imperial Indian Citizenship association, pleaded the cause of his countrymen. He wired: MAR 15 1941

"Thanks for your cable and assurance that measures for improving the position of Indians in South Africa are under constant review. With regard to your belief that lots of Indians in South Africa are in many respects happier than in India, you are perhaps referring to their material position. They may be so, but you and I believe that between man and man there should be social justice, and our aim should be a nation of free men and women. Human dignity requires equal opportunity for political, economic and national expression and right of shouldering responsibilities. Until such facilities are afforded to Indians in South Africa true happiness cannot be established. I deeply appreciate your good wishes for progress of India, which I heartily reciprocate for every section of South Africa.

Rene Maran, Famed Author, Nazi Fugitive

By MERCER COOK

MAY 31 1941

Somewhere in Southern France, among the thousands of homeless refugees, is Rene Maran, France's greatest Negro author since Alexander Dumas. Just twenty years ago, M. Maran became one of the most discussed writers in the world when his "Batouala," France's "Native Son," was awarded the famous Goncourt Prize.

When the Nazis took over, M. Maran and his wife were forced to abandon their comfortable apartment in Paris and flee to Bordeaux. As all the banks were closed, he was practically penniless on arriving in this southern French city where he had studied as a boy and where he had published his first book of poems in 1911.

Threatened Suicide

As the German onslaught moved closer to Bordeaux, M. Maran was obliged to seek another refuge. In a desperate letter to the writer, mailed via the Clipper on June 18th, 1940, just after France capitulated, he vowed that he would commit suicide before he would allow the Nazis to capture him. I have had no further word as to whether or not this dire threat has been carried out.

DR. MERCER COOK

There are several good reasons why the Germans would want him. First, he is a Negro, born fifty-three years ago on the island of Martinique. Secondly, he has been an outspoken critic of Hitlerism in books and countless newspaper and magazine articles. And third, he is happily married to a white French woman. The world knows what Hitler thinks of interracial marriages.

Notes on "Batouala"

It is regrettable that American Negroes know M. Maran only through the mediocre translation of his "Batouala." True, it is that this novel is important, for it was one of the first to expose abuses in French Equatorial Africa—abuses which France has since attempted to correct. But several of his other novels, like the "Book of the Brush" and "Oppressed Heart" are definitely superior. Many French schools include selections from the "Book of the Brush" in their curriculum.

His short stories, most of which have African settings, are also widely read in France. Two years ago, he wrote an excellent biography of the African explorer and abolitionist Livingstone. But nor of these books or stories has ever been translated into English.

Unlike most French Negro authors, Maran has preferred to write almost exclusively on Negroid subjects. For about fifteen years, he served in Africa as an official in the French Colonial Service, where his father had served before him. Thus he came to know, better perhaps than any other Frenchman, the problems and life of his African brothers.

His books evince a love both for France and for the Negro, both of which he has criticized and praised impartially. For this he has been often misunderstood and attacked by white and black Frenchmen alike. Never, however, has he sacrificed or prostituted his artistry. And never has he swerved from his convictions.

Since the outbreak of the war, he has contributed regularly to the French Colonial News Bulletin, and several months ago he wrote me that he was preparing a volume on the three Dumas, the General Thomas-Alexander Dumas, who fought under Napoleon; Dumas the Elder, who wrote the "Count of Monte Cristo" and the "Three Musketeers"; and Dumas the Younger, author of "Camille" and many other successful dramas.

Men And Women Of Color Continue Rapid Rise To Prominence In England

Officials Issue Memorandum That Applicants For Work Must Be Considered Regardless of Skin Color

Governmental Heads Make Effort To Abolish Prejudice

LONDON—(By Rudolph Dunbar for ANP)—Ivor Cummings' appointment on the staff of the secretary of state for the colonies following as it does closely on the engagement by the British Broadcasting corporation of Miss Una Marson from Jamaica as a West Indian program assistant, shows that there is a real effort beeing made on the part of the heads of governments to abolish color prejudice and to employ West Indians and Africans in positions worthy of their intellectual attainments and capacities.

Mr. Cummings, an African from Sierra Leone, has been secretary of Aggrey house (an institution primarily concerned with African and West Iindian students residing in or visiting London) for the last seven years. His father, a retired government medical officer, was the first African to be appointed under the secretary of state to what was then the Nigerian Medical service. During the past seven years, Ivor Cummings toiled ceaselessly to improve the conditions of the members of his race resident in Britian. The recognition of his work by the British Colonial office will be a source of great satisfaction to all West Indians and Africans in the British empire.

One of the high spots of Mr. Cummings' career was the coronation of George VI when scores of colored colonials invaded the metropolis. It was Cummings' particular task to see to the finding of suitable accommodations for all, and to see that the visit of his compatriots proved interesting and passed off without the occurance of any untoward events. In the execution of this work of so exacting a nature, he displayed exceptional taact and industry.

Color prejudice in Great Britian has been more prevalent not amongest high officials but among people of slender means and little education. Officials who have played an important part in colonial administration have unsually realized the importance of treating the Negro as a member of the British empire. The colonial student and the worker in Britian were often patronized by the higher stratum of English society.

Cummings assigned himself the delicate task of composing the differences between smaller officials and ignorant renters on the one hand, and people of color whom they had subjected to humiliating treatment on the other. Many Africans and West Indians whose first feelings of loyalty and sympathy towards Britian, threatened to be alienated by the behaviour of uncomprehhending English people, were thus able to obtain satisfaction. Cummings relates a story which is a good example of the way ignorant subordinates attempt to win the approbation of their superiors by insulting and ostracising men and women of color. It also demonstrates the will of cabinet ministers to right misdemeanors committed to the prejudices of colored people.

In his official capacity Cummings reported to Ernest Bevin, the minister of labor, cases in which the staff of various labor exchanges had refused to make any serious effort to find employment for people of color. Mr. Bevin denied that any instructions had been given to the ministry of labor officials to justify them exercising any such discrimination. Mr. Bevin at first found it hard to believe that there could be any foundation for Cummings' complaints, but upon hearing of being produced, Mr. Bevin immediately issued a special memorandum to the effect that in all cases of employment dealt with through labor exchanges, equal facilities should be accorded to all applicants alike irrespective of the particular color of their skin.

In acting with such promptitude. Mr. Bevin was performing his duty as a member of the reconstructed national government whose members in the last year have shown repeated veration whenever their subordinates have concealed from them, similar acts so obviously to the detriment of their role as the leaders of a democratic form of government fighting against totalitarian tendencies from without and within.

The immediate benefits derived as a direct result of Cummings' intervention have been felt by the people of color who are now being readily engaged in government training centres, as armament workers, and in temporary government appointments of a clerical nature.

Mr. Cummings was previously seconded to the ministry of labor to help deal with the welfare of some Jamacian technicians who had recently arrived in England. These men were without suitable clothing and unaccustomed to the British climate. Thanks largely to Mr. Cummings' attention, they suffered hardly any sickness and their families which they left behind in the West Indies are well looked after. The British government has in this connection provided the men with an expatriation allowance each of $5 per head.

Anent India.

There is a certain faction in the United States which seems to exist for the sole purpose of criticizing everything Britain does, in blackening the name of everything directly or remotely British.

Some of these congenital anti-Britishers go so far you'd believe they would be quite pleased if Nazi Germany won the present conflict, if Nazi firing squads were busy all over the world, if every man and woman in the world became nothing but a slave to the Nazi machine, provided Britain was sure to be crushed in the process.

One of the favorite spots of criticism these fanatics like to air when talking against Britain is, "Why doesn't Britain give India her freedom? Why doesn't Britain make India a self-governing, independent country, like Canada? Why did Britain fail to fulfill her promise, made during the first World War, to do this very thing?"

And they think they've posed an unanswerable argument. Thereby, though they don't realize it, they display their complete ignorance about India, about Indian politics, about the social order in India and about recent India history.

For the truth is that the one big stumbling block to independence for India is India herself and her political and racial factions. There are other reasons, but this is the big, insurmountable one.

Varied Races.

It must be remembered that the population of India is made up of various races and various religions. The caste system there is based upon this mixture of races and religions. It is an exaggeration, even, of the racial differences in our south, between Negroes and whites.

Then there are the religious differences. There are, for instance, the Moslems and the Hindus. The Hindus are in the majority, but the Moslems would never submit to government which would give the Hindus the power of a majority. They have for this very reason refused to do anything but oppose all suggestions for India self-government. They are powerful, too, powerful enough to create serious problems. If India was left to herself, there would be one of the bloodiest civil wars the world has seen, soon.

The most powerful individuals in India are the princes. In many sections the population regards the local prince with a reverence and devotion that harks back to the medieval customs of serfs and overlords in Europe.

Those princes enjoy certain privileges and powers under British rule of the country which they fear they would lose if the British withdrew. And they are so strong they could quite possibly take over rule of the entire country, without the British there, and toss the average Indian back into the misery of the dark ages, before the white man came.

It must not be forgotten that the much publicized Ghandi and his followers, too, constitute another serious stumbling block. They call themselves the "noncooperatives" and they are just that. Particularly are they nonco-operative when it comes to anything to do with aiding the British to increase the self-government functions of India and her people.

Demand, But Refuse To Accept.

It may be said definitely that had it not been for Indian obstructionists themselves, India would at this moment be enjoying a very full control of her own affairs. From the period of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms after the last war down to the time of the Simon commission and the government of India act of 1935, which made provision for eventual dominion status, the main obstacles to home rule for India have not been English politicians, but Indian Nationalists.

While constantly voicing their demands for self-government, they have steadfastly refused to accept it in progressive stages. By the acts of 1919 and 1935, the British government offered to India the same progressive training in self-government that Canada and other of the dominions had undergone. This the Indians refused to accept, and the responsibility for this refusal must rest in good part on the shoulders of Gandhi, whose influence over leaders of the Indian National Congress is still very considerable.

BRITAIN GIVES NO DEMOCRACY, EITHER TO WORKING CLASS WHITES OR BLACK SUBJECTS, HISTORIANS ARE SAYING

Harry Elmer Barnes, In New York Telegram, Calls Present Leaders "Stooges for Financial Moguls"

MAR 7 1941

CHICAGO, Ill.—John Goode, writing for the Associated Negro Press in an article which lauds the kind of Democracy which Abraham Lincoln envisoned in his "government of the people, by the people and for the people," summons recent writings of eminent white historjans to prove that the very antithesis of this ideal is represented in the "Democracy" which Great Britain practices and for which the common people of the United States are about to be called upon to defend with their money and probably their lives.

MAR 7 1941

He quotes from Harry Elmer Barnes, eminent American Historian, who wrote in the New York Evening Telegram of August 8, 1939 as follows:

"Great Britain is ruled today by a Tory social and economic autocracy, which is probably the most arrogant, smug, selfish and self-centered group dominating any world state in our time. They are even less interested in humanity and social justice than the Fascist leaders for whom I have less than any admiration.

"A rotten borough system, almost as bad as that which existed before 1832, prevents representative government from functioning in England. In a sample area of England in the last general election the Tories had 1,500,000 popular votes to 1,000,000 for the Liberals and Laborites. But the Tories elected 84 members to the House of Commons, while their rivals elected only one. This is on more Democracy than one of Hitler's fake plebiscites.

"In England today the house of commons does not represent the people, the cabinet does not represent the House of Commons and the Big Four—Chamberlain, Halifax, Hoare, and Simon—that ostensibly run England do not represent the Cabinet. FINALLY THE BIG FOUR THEMSELVES ARE NO MORE THAN STOOGES FOR THE POWERFUL AND OPULENT TORY ABSENTEE LANDLORDS, MINE OWNERS AND FINANCIAL MOGULS." Thus speaks an authoritative American historian.

Up to the first world war the condition of the common people in England was not so bad. Satiated by the immense profits wrung from the 500 million colonial people by the most ruthless exploitation in history, the British ruling group deemed it wise to keep their own workers contented. During the post-war period, however, conditions have been worse. Having fought to make the world safe for Democracy, they found they had made it worse for themselves. Millions out of work for years—the depressed areas—a large number of the people under-nourished. Conditions in the dominions was somewhat better, but definitely worse than in pre-war times.

In an article entitled "India Won't Wait," in Collier's Weekly magazine, June 8, 1940, Jim Marshall writes:

"India has graying grandmothers of 35, sweating 72 hours a week in Ganges Delta Jute Mills for forty-eight cents. India has 26,000 people dying on Bombay streets every year from starvation and worse. India has a population close to 400 Million. Most of these live on the land in incredible dirt, poverty and ignorance. Their average income is $13.50 a year. A high city wage is twenty cents a day. Since the conquest, billions of dollars in wealth have been taken out of the country to England, and the PROFITS of ENGLISH FIRMS in India runs around A BILLION DOLLARS A YEAR, little of which stays in India. IN ADDITION, India pays for the 60,000 white soldiers the British keep in the country and for the Indian Army."

"Judged by our yardstick, India, where more than half the people in the British Empire live, is just as far from Democracy as it is possible to be."

Before the second world war, millions of Chinese suffered under British exploitation. A first-hand account of the cruelty and intensity of that exploitation is given by Vincent Sheehan, at one time the best reporter in the whole world, in his book, "Personal History."

It is probably true that the natives of Africa have suffered most from the English ruling group. Certainly they have received very few benefits from the wealth taken from the country. Gold, diamonds and many raw materials. Thousands sent to work in the mines for three and five years by making some small payment to their chiefs. Deprived of all rights, not allowed to own any of the land where he once owned everything, taxed for the very right to live, he is at the mercy of the landowners, factory and mine owners. MOST CERTAINLY DEMOCRACY DOES NOT EXIST IN BRITISH AFRICA.

The British East Indian possessions, including Burma, Ceylon etc. were taken by the sword and have been kept by the sword. The share of these people in their government is extremely small, the benefits from it, smaller.

MAR 7 1941

The thinking man may ask why this country is so vociferously hailing Great Britain as a Democracy. when we have a good example of the way of life of people in the British Empire right at our own doorstep—the West Indies. Here two and a half million people live under the British flag—white, 3.5 per cent East Indians, 12.5 per cent; Negroes, 82 per cent.

Barbados, population 188,000 and the Bahamas, population 65,000, have Assemblies, elected on a restricted franchise, but decisions of these Assemblies are frequently overruled by a second Chamber, nominated by the Governor. The rest, population 2,250,000, are Crown Colonies, responsibility for their administration resting with the Colonial Office at Whitehall. Thus the greater part of them have no voice in their government.

FOR THE PEOPLE. As to the benefits they get from their government, according to the Commission appointed to investigate the riots and strikes in the years 1934-36, the average day's pay ran from 30 cents for agricultural laborers to one dollar for workers in the asphalt industry in Trinidad. This pitifully small amount barely enabled them to keep body and soul together. The poverty and squalor of the people was so terrible that even the Commission felt obliged to condemn the conditions. Contributing to this state of affairs is the fact that while on the one hand employers are usually associated in some forms of organization, employees are for the most part innocent of trade unionism.

Inasmuch as eight ninths of the population of this coutnry is white, the American white worker may say, "Why should I worry about the troubles of a lot of colored people? That's why they were put on earth, anyhow. To serve us white people." Ah—but he should. If for nothing else but to protect his own standard of living. When the woman in the jute mills of India works seventy-two hours for the weekly wage of forty-eight cents, how is the American employer going to pay him twenty dollars a week and compete with the Indian mills? When in a country of 400 million people the average yearly income is $13.50 and a high city wage is twenty cents a day, the wages of workers thruout the world are affected. If the native worker in the African Gold Mines (the largest in the world) gets only twenty-five cents a day, how can we stay on the Gold Standard and pay our workers five dollars a day? When the West Indian worker on the sugar plantation gets only thirty cents a day, that lowers the wages of all the sugar beet workers in America.

In short low wages of any large group of workers, black, brown or yellow, generally affects the wages of some group in this country, because most of the things produced abroad are produced right here.

Since the great majority of people in this country are workers, it is difficult to see how their interests can be advanced by taxing themselves billions of dollars to aid the Empire which has caused the millions of workers thruout the world more misery and suffering than any similar group in the history of the world. The five billion dollars that same Empire still owes us from the last war came out of the pockets of the American taxpayers.

Rated by the yardstick that Lincoln gave us, the British Empire is a government of the people, for they certainly are government, but how?

By the People. By the Tory Social and Economic Autocracy which Harry Elmer Barnes so eloquently describes in the Evening Telegram.

For the People. Certainly not for the 500 million colonials, neither for the great majority of the white British subjects.

FRENCH NEGRO PATRIOT

A Negro Frenchman emerges as one of the outstanding heroes of the war. This is Adolphe Felix Sylvestre Eboue, the first of the French Colonials to strike a decisive blow at the Nazis.

Today this native of the French West Indian island of Martinique is Governor General, not of one province, but of all French Equatorial Africa, a kingdom immeasurably larger than any Negro has ever before ruled. A man of exceptional forcefulness and will power, he exercises jurisdiction over a population of 3,500,000 natives as well as thousands of white, and enjoys their unqualified respect.

For, as Leland Stowe, special correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, says, he is, after all, a Frenchman. "More than any other individual or group of individuals, one man saved the vast resources of the French Congo for 'Free France'. Through an almost incredible bit of poetic justice the man who did this was a black man, a native of the French West Indian Island of Martinique. The French republic had educated him and reared him in both social and political equality. It had made him a trusted leader of its colonial civil service in West Africa, a chief administrator in Guadalope and finally the civil Governor of the extremely strategical province of Chad in northernmost Equatorial Africa. Because of this, Adolphe Felix Sylvestre Eboue became the first man anywhere in the far-flung French colonial empire to strike a decisive blow against the Axis."

Early last September, Eboue was in charge of Chad Province, the link between French West Africa (then about to repulse the overtures of General de Gaulle) and the overwhelmingly important Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, with its rich cotton-growing valleys. If the pro-Vichy French authorities in Dakar could brow-beat Civil Governor Eboue into falling in line and abandoning Chad to the Government of Petain and Laval, German and Italian troops might invade the Sudan from Chad and so conquer Egypt from the rear.

When the Dakar authorities informed Eboue that emissaries from Vichy were en route to Fort Lamy and ordered him to declare adherence to Vichy at once, Eboue replied that no emissaries of the "traitorous" Vichy Government would be received by him, that none of them would be allowed inside Chad Province, and that any or all who set foot in that territory would be arrested on the spot. He followed up this refusal by the flat declaration that Chad had joined the "Free France" movement. His troops, to a man, stood by him in that declaration against surrender to Nazism.

His leadership and example inspired all of French Equatorial Africa to declare its loyalty to the French republic, and paved the way for the arrival of another loyal Frenchman, General de Larminant, who reached the French Congo in disguise. Events moved fast. Resident Governor General Husson was placed under lock and key after protesting that he would support Vichy. De Larminant became High Commissioner of all French Equatorial Africa and Eboue, enemy of totalitarianism, became Governor General.

His French and native troops are consecrated to a cause they affirm is not lost and to a nation freedom, which may have been saved — oddly enough in darkest Africa, as Mr. Stowe says — by the example and courage of a Black Frenchman.

What a lesson is to be learned from this stirring chapter from contemporary history! The policy of the French republic to give advantages and responsibilities to French Negroes has been gloriously vindicated by this striking demonstration of the inherent capacity of the Negro to rise to situations that call for courage, initiative and leadership, as well as patriotism of the highest order. — INTERRACIAL REVIEW

TERRORIZING MINORITIES

DUSSELDORF, Germany, must be a dreadful town. A minority race in that town is condemned to live in terror from night to night, never knowing when their homes will be dynamited by unknown Storm Troopers. Threats and violence are faced on every hand. If these explosions came from foreign assault, Dusseldorf would be aroused, but as they are no more than the working of racial hatred at home, nothing comes of it, except more dynamitings at the expense of the minority.

MAR 8 1941

The situation in Dusseldorf, which is purely fictitious for present purposes, becomes the more impressive when we reflect that in Dallas, Texas, dynamitings of Negro homes within recent months now number more than a dozen.

We make much talk about freedom. We have had Brotherhood Week. We are getting ready to defend civilization. We make ourselves the champions of the minorities and of their rights to exist. We are bitter in our denunciation of German violence done to those who are too few and too powerless to help themselves. Well?

THE CONDUCT of the Negro race in Dallas under the incitement of all this violence has been highly commendable. The leaders of the colored people recognize, of course, that counter-violence would only bring down destruction. But the patience of the humble thousands who look to these leaders for guidance and to the white people for justice is unparalleled.

Put yourself in the black man's place and ask yourself if you could match the calmness with which he goes about his business in this town. Could you?

WEST INDIAN EDITORS ARE SEGREGATED

NOV 23 1941

In Bermuda Hotels Again

LONDON, Nov. 19—Charges were made last Tuesday by Rudolph Dunbar, London editor of Associated Negro Press, that six colored editors from the West Indies were refused accommodations in Bermuda when the Pan-American Clipper made an overnight stop there because of unfavorable weather. The six editors were being brought here by the British government to learn about the war effort.

Hotels were said to have refused to provide accommodations for the colored members of the party, saying "American guests wouldn't like it." According to Ralph Mentor, editor of Vanguard and member of the party, discrimination against colored members began immediately after the plane had landed at the airport.

After being told by Pan-American officials that unfavorable weather reports had grounded further flights until the next day, arrangements were made by the airlines to furnish travelers rooms and board until the journey could be continued. Immigrations and customs officials began checking passports and baggage, taking the white members of the party first. These men, Graham Miller, M. DeCordover, A. A. Nathan, C. E. Hutchins, R. Moss and Oscar Wight, were sent to the Inverurie hotel along with other white non-members of the party.

No Colored Allowed

The colored members, Gale Cole, Gordon Wilson, Harewood and Mentor, were then carried through the necessary routines and then sent to New Windsor hotel. This hotel had been previously called up and asked for reservations for six persons, but when the party arrived, hotel officials refused to accommodate them because of their color.

However, several prominent colored people offered their homes as resting places for the six discriminated travelers. Rev. Smith offered accommodations for Wilson and Harewood; Mr. Vancrussun, a lawyer, accommodated Gordon; Gale and Cole were put up by Toddings, a white member of the party who had proceeded to Bermuda a few days ahead of the delegation. Mentor secured shelter at Canadian House hotel, the only colored hotel in Bermuda.

Members of the party, after being subjected to insults by white hotels, planned to return immediately to their respective colonies but were dissuaded from this action. Leading citizens of Bermuda were up in arms about the incident, however.

It was said that when Gov. Lord Knollys heard about the incident he dispatched a formal apology by his aide de camp to the group the following morning just as the group was beginning the last leg of their journey. Three members of the colored group, Wilson, Harewood, and Mentor, told the aide de camp what they thought of the treatment accorded them and stated that the aide de camp could quote their remarks to the governor.

Jewish Culture Flourishes in New Soviet Regions

APR 7 1941

By Sam Brown

(Special to Inter-Continent News)

MOSCOW, April 6.—The development of Soviet Jewish culture in the USSR was strikingly illustrated during the past week in Minsk at the conference on Jewish literature in Byelo-Russia which discussed the work of Jewish writers who have been living in Byelo-Russia these past two years and which reviewed the problems confronting Jewish literature.

The conference, the first of its kind, was a landmark in the history of Soviet Jewish culture. Side by side with Jewish writers from the eastern districts by Byelo-Russia were Jewish writers from Western Byelo-Russia, who only recently have been given opportunity to devote all their efforts to advancing Jewish culture and enriching the treasures of Jewish literature. They attended the Conference as equal members of the great army of Soviet writers as members of the Federation of Soviet writers.

Not only prominent Byelo-Russian writers and poets took part in the work of the Conference. The newly organized Jewish sector of the Byelo-Russian Academy of Sciences was also well represented. This new sector of the Academy is engaged in making a study of Jewish literature, language and folk-lore. It has set as one of its major tasks this year the study of Soviet Jewish literature in Byelo-Russia.

When speaking about the development of Jewish culture in the Soviet Union, it must be especially emphasized that the Leninist-Stalinist national policy as carried out in the USSR and as reflected in the Constitution not only of the USSR but also in the constitutions of all sixteen Soviet Republics, has brought about the flourishing of national culture of all 60 nationalities inhabiting the Soviet Union. This has been achieved thanks to mutual cooperation and friendship.

The facilities provided for the development of national culture of each Union Republic are of particular importance to the Jewish people. This can be seen from the distribution of the Jewish population in the Soviet Union. According to the 1939 Soviet census, the Jewish population of the USSR (excluding the Jewish population of the new Soviet districts) exceeds 3,000,000. Of these 948,000 live in the RSFSR, over 1,500,000 in Ukranian SSR, 375,000 in Byelo-Russian SSR, 1,000 in Azerbaijan, 42,000 in Georgia, approximately 51,000 in Uzbekistan and 19,000 in Kazakstan. This explains the need for Jewish cultural institutions in the major Soviet Republics and the coordination of their work. With the incorporation of the Baltic Soviet Republics the scope of this work has been considerably extended, as seen from the example of Vilna.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

However, the development of Jewish culture and institutions is evident not only in the new Republics and districts. During the past few years the work of all Jewish institutions in the USSR made great strides forward. The first three months of 1941 brought about many improvements in this field. The work of various institutions is being coordinated on a wider scale.

APR 7 1941

For example, the Jewish sector of the Institute of Literature and Languages of Byelo-Russian Academy of Sciences now serves as a center for all Jewish institutions in that Republic. The vast resources of the Academy and the assistance of Byelo-Russian scientists will now be utilized in advancing Jewish culture to a much greater extent.

The first steps of the Jewish Sector show the scope of the work. Three volumes of Jewish folk-lore, including a volume on Western Byelo-Russia and a large volume on Soviet Jewish folk-lore have been prepared and are now in print. A Jewish-Russian dictionary containing 35,000 words has also been completed. A Jubilee Edition of "Soviet Jewish Literature in Byelo-Russia" is being prepared for 1942—the 25th anniversary of Soviet Power. Works on the Jewish literary heritage and a Jewish grammar are included in the plan of the Jewish sector as well as in the plan of the Academy Publishing House which will start publishing books in Jewish this year.

One of the tasks of the Jewish sector of the Byelo-Russian Academy of Sciences will be to examine the scientific works on Jewish literature, language and history and the right to confer scientific degrees for outstanding work in this branch of science.

This undoubtedly will attract a large number of young scientists who are devoting themselves to the study of Jewish language, history and literature, to this new center of Jewish culture in the Byelo-Russian Soviet Republic.

The English People and Race Prejudice

By William Pickens

APR 19 1941

DEAR Reader: This article by George Padmore in the Crisis magazine, moves me as much as it moves you. Only I am moved because I know that the article is a considerable distortion about the character of the English in England—while some of you, perhaps, may be moved by the shocking, even tho false, intimations of the article that the English are as bad toward colored people as are Americans, or even as bad as Hitlerites would be if they could.

MR. PICKENS

Even the title of George Padmore's Crisis article is a misstatement: that "Hitler Makes British Drop Color Bad." Hitler has not made the British do anything about the color question, we might as well say: "Hitler makes Haile Selassie and Eboue, and other African blacks who have brains in their crania, rush to the side of the British and fight the Axis powers." If ever Hitler gets into position to make the British do anything about colored people, he will make them put the Negroes into such a hell of slavery as the world has not yet seen.

Two years ago I sat in George Padmore's office in London, when the elder statesman, Mr. Chamberlain was running to and fro, from London to Munich and Berchtesgaden, trying to persuade Herr Hitler not to start a war, for which Britain and the rest of the world was totally unprepared, save alone for the superiority of the British fleet.

APR 19 1941

At that time I told Padmore and his radical associates, white and black, that it was certainly to the credit of the English civilization that these black men were able to keep their office open and carry on, just short of treason, on that corner in London. In Berlin or Rome or Moscow, their heads would have been in one hole and their bodies in another, long before war started. And in Mississippi—well in Mississippi, so to speak they would have long since been in Minnesota—or else.

RACE PREJUDICE IN BOTH COUNTRIES

Once I had more than 60 lecture engagements all over England, and in Wales and Scotland, in all of the larger cities and in many of the smaller and even the smallest places, where the English are English indeed. Also I have been all over the United States, over and over again in most places—so that this I know to be the fact: that, for the Negro, the worst place in England is better than the best place in the United States, There is race prejudice in both countries, and in most others. When one people holds down another, there always develops prejudices against the under group, and the Englishmen, especially those who went abroad as colonials, have had a long conditioning in the business of governing darker races.

The colonials abroad in the empire are therefore more nearly like Mississippians, but the English in England are different. The best cities in America, from the Negro's standpoint, are worse than the worst places in England. Seattle, San Francisco, New York are far behind London in the practice of liberality toward Negroes. Seattle is almost wide-open to colored Americans (if they are not Orientals), but not quite.

Two years ago in London, and many times before, I could roam through the whole town, and stop and step into any public place, and eat and drink, and without receiving any discourtesy could crowd shoulder to shoulder with the thronging English people without a ripple of displeasure. The only city under the American flag that I have so far found like that is Honolulu, Hawaii, and I am wondering what may have happened there since we have now crowded about 50,000 soldiers and sailors from continental United States into that island fortress.

DEMAND PROTECTION FROM SEGREGATION

Cites U. S. Policy In Panama Following Lease of Territory—West Indian Council Asks For Strong Action.

APR 26 1941

By Our London Correspondent

LONDON, Apr. 24.—(Censored)—Islanders have sent a petition to Lord Moyne, Secretary of State for Colonies, asking British protection against American rule in the areas leased as naval and air bases in the West Indies.

The appeal signed by W. A. Domingo of Jamaica, president of the West Indies National Council and Herman Osborne of Trindad, secretary, strongly urged that the British government takes steps to incorporate in the leases covering the bases specific and complete guarantees protecting the local populations from all forms of racial discrimination and segregation on the leased areas. In support of this demand reference was made to the letter on the subject sent to the Colonial Secretary of Jamaica by the People's National Party headed by the colored advocate, Norman Manley, K. C.

JIM-CROW POLICY IN PANAMA CITED

The petition says that "the West Indies National Council is extremely anxious to obviate any friction between the unarmed populations and Americans connected with the bases and is confident that this anxiety is shared by both the British and American governments. However, it is generally known that on the Canal Zone, leased by the Republic of Panama to the United States for military purposes, the very worst forms of racial segregation and discrimination are practiced. It is almost commonly known that a large porportion of the personnel of the United States armed forces is from sections of the United States where it is customary and legal for persons of the colored race to be segregated and subjected to uncivilized and undemocratic racial discrimination and persecutions."

GREAT MORAL RESPONSIBILITY

"By completely excluding the West Indian people from direct participation in the negotiations of the leases which will vitally affect theri lives, property and future development, the British government has inescapably assumed the heaviest moral responsibility for fully protecting the interests of the local populations of the territories in which the bases are being constructed . . The Council feels that it should not be difficult for the British government to secure the cooperation of the American Commission negotiating the leases to include clauses designed to meet the wishes of the local populations."

WEALTHY NEGRO LIVED IN RIGA, 600 YEARS AGO

APR 24 1941

Moscow, Russia—According to a (CNA) Release—Of unusual historical interest in a sentence appearing in an article on a local paper, bearing a Riga, Latavia dateline which mentions the fact that the midday winter sun in Riga "plays on the walls of an ancient mansion built some 600 years ago by a wealthy Negro has been and is much more ubiquitous than prejudiced historians are wont to give him credit. No details are available at the moment of writing as to who this Negro was or how he came to reach, or become wealthy in this far-northern Baltic country before America was discovered.

Rogers Says:-

NAZIS ARE RACE HATERS BUT KAISER HAD COLORED ARMY OFFICERS

BY J. A. ROGERS

J. H. JENKINS of Washington, D. C., writes me as follows: "I was interested in reading your article in which you stated that now and then you chance upon a Negro who wishes a German victory. I feel, however, that if you analyze his psychological process you'll find that his is not really a desire for a German victory but rather a desire to see England suffer. Your description of English discriminatory tactics in Egypt together with various reports of English discrimination against darker peoples, prompts this trend of thought, I feel.

Mr. Rogers

"In the eyes of many they are happy to see an enemy suffer who has beaten them for years and take a chance on a possible greater enemy, who, as you state, may rob them 'wholesale.' This trend to me at least appears understandable.

SEEK HITLER'S ATTIUDE

"WHAT IN reality is Hitler's attitude towards darker peoples When as he does in Mein Kampf describes them as half-apes does he refer to cultured American Negroes whom he has never known or to African savages in the raw? Why could photographs of black athletes talking to German girls openly on a beach in Germany appear in Flash Magazine (colored). This and other one of the athletes (black) walking along a road in Hitler's town with a German girl also appeared about a year ago.

"Why does Hitler line up with dark Japanese? And remembeer the Japs are no fools in lining up with anyone with ulterior motives. Is he willing to see Asia for Asiatics as opposed to England who has reportedly in the past established parks in Shanghai with signs excluding Chinese? Isn't Hitler's racial theory really directed against the Jews whom he hates? Please answer these questions in your column. I am not pro-anything. I wish to know the truth."

THIS LETTER, in my opinion, depicts the state of mind of many Negroes. They are watching the spectacle of two of their enemies destroying each other and wonders which side they must back.

GERMAN SUPERIORITY

The German, as I knew him in his own country, was free from color prejudice; the English were not. And as regards the American I believe there is less color prejudice right now in Berlin than there is in New York City or Washington, D. C.

However, the creed of the Nazi party, and that does not always reflect the German mind, is distinctly anti-Negro. Indeed, the Nazi creed is that Germans are not only superior to Negroes and Jews but to all other whites.

Sometime ago I said in this column that a friend of mine told me that he saw mulattoes in the German army. It now turns out that they must have been white Negroid looking Germans, who had tanned themselves in the sun. I have seen these Germans in their native land, themselves in the sun, they were indistinguishable in color from Negroes.

MAY 3 1941

IN ANY CASE George S. Schuyler wrote, at the time, to the German Bureau of Information, New York City, and the reply was "The German Draft Law makes it impossible that mulatto soldiers are enrolled in the German army."

NEGROES IN ARMY

However, that does not mean that German mulattoes of military age, and there must be a few hundred of them, would be exempt from military service. No, they would ratther be used in the labor battalions, or in dirty work around the camps.

In the war of 1914, however, it was different. There were some Negroes in the German army, and a Negro officer or two. The Kaiser, who was an angel of mercy compared to Hitler, and who was very kind to Negroes, had two Cameroon Negroes in his bodyguard, one of whom, Hari Mambo, I knew personally. The bandmaster of his favorite regiment, Sabac-el-Cher, was a Negro, born in the Royal Palace; while, as I have shown in my "100 Amazing Facts About The Negro," another Negro, Henri Noel, born in Africa and adopted as a son by the Kaiser's grandfather, William I, was an officer in the German army. He was wounded in battle, became an invalid and the present ex-Kaiser cared for him tenderly until his death in 1931.

AS FOR THE British Army, Negroes are enrolled, not only in the labor battalion but as fighting men. And there are now Negro flyers in the Royal Air Force, who train side by side with the white men. The Crisis and The Courier recently had pictures of the same.

THE FALL OF ADDIS ABABA

Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia, fell on the very day Germany launched a new war in the Balkans. It is only five years since Emperor Haile Selassie, now preparing a triumphant return, fled from his palace and Italy annexed his country. Italian energy in the brief period of occupation has been spent chiefly on road-building. As in Libya, these well-laid military highways have served the British well. But it was the railroad leading up over the Ethiopian escarpment that brought the victorious South Africans to the city gates. Thus the one avenue by which Il Duce's armies might have escaped destruction became the instrument of their quick defeat.

APR 7 - 1941

As a symbol Addis Ababa is a prize beyond reckoning. This capital is the heart of an empire of 1,725,000 square miles, a vast region supporting 12,000,000 people. Its capture in what seems almost a single leap of ninety miles from the Awash River shows the complete demoralization of its defenders. Both in Ethiopia and Eritrea there are still isolated Italian forces, but their fate is sealed, for they have nowhere to go, no point at which to rally. Strategically the campaign in Ethiopia is over. At the best its sequel will be a quick mopping up, at the worst a hopeless attempt by the Italians to wage guerrilla warfare from hostile territory. The British conquest of Ethiopia promises early reinforcements both for their armies in Libya and on the Greek peninsula. Its effect on the time-table of the war will be substantial.

Hitler Has Lost War, African Chiefs Find After Ancient Ritual

APR 10 1941

Gold Coast Council Says Great Britain Is Victor

APR 10 1941

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR
London Editor, Associated Negro Press

LONDON—(ANP)—The habit of referring to Africa as the dark continent has become obsolete for the best news of the war so far has come from Africa. There are two quite considerable flashes of light from the "dark continent" which have just reached here. The governor of the Belgian Congo has been broadcasting to his people telling them that the Nazi, with their racial doctrines, are the enemies of the black man. The broadcaster was M. Albert de Vleeschauqer, Belgian colonial minister, and is one of the youngest statesmen.

Another sidelight on Africa is the disclosure of the mystic knowledge. Some time ago the people of Akan held a council at Accra, Gold Coast colony, and decided that Britain has already won the war. Oheneba Sakyi Djan, formerly an editor of the Gold Coast, explained recently that this not really wishful thinking, but the procedure is based on ancient ritual, observed by the Akans before they engage in war.

The Akans believe that "disaster befalls him who makes unjust war and wantonly destroys non-combattants." On both these counts Hitler seems clearly indicated but that is not enough. According to Akan ideas, Britain must win because the Akans hold that the forces of nature are only in favour of those who prosecute war for a just cause.

NAZI RACIAL DOCTRINE AGAIN

APR 10 1941

The Nazis are inexhaustible in their stream of invectives. They are now trying to involve the public mind in a state of barbarous imaginings about the Negro. In a recent broadcast in Dutch which was, of course, intended for Holland and also a bulletin to Yugoslavia the announcer stated:

APR 10 1941

"It was not soldiers against whom German soldiers had to fight on the Somme, but animals; Negroes brought from the deepest interior of Africa. They sat in the tops of the trees like monkeys and attacked the Germans in the rear after they had searched the woods.

"They ambushed German soldiers and mutilated them in the most terrible manner with knives 50 cm. long and sharp as razor blades. They preferred to attack Red Cross and hospital troops because they knew that these soldiers were unarmed."

APR 10 1941

AID WAR EFFORT

Colored peoples from the most remote part of the British empire have shown a magnificent spirit of self-abnegation in their contributions to the empire's war effort. The unshakably loyalty of the black man is the most far-reaching extensions of democracy the world has ever known. By the end of 1940, financial aid given by colonial governments, native rulers and various bodies and individuals in the colonial empire to the British government and to organizations in Britain, totalled well over $100,000,000.

So keen are the natives of South Africa to help Britain that thousands of them have contributed to the interest-free war loans and insisted that they will not lend their money if interest is to be paid on it.

Basutoland has just offered $500,000 from surplus balances for buying aircraft, while other native protectorates have already contributed over $250,000 to war funds. Native chiefs are buying interest-free loans in the names of their sons while many of the tribes are making outright gifts towards the war effort.

BLACK GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Little attention has been paid in England to the recent promotion of M. Eboue, the Negro governor of French Equatorial Africa, to the rank of governor-general. Yet the appointment may have a considerable effect in spreading the appeal of General de Gaulle's movement in other French colonies.

APR 10 1941

There are only five governor-generalships in the whole French Empire. In the Free French empire, M. Eboue is the only one. He was born in French Guiana 50 years ago. The Blum government appointed him governor of Guadeloupe in 1936, and the innovation caused a considerable stir throughout the French empire.

APR 10 1941

As governor of Chad, M. Eboue announced his determination to support General de Gaulle immediately his banner was raised. Another case of black loyalty. In the British empire, there is not even as much as a black district commissioner. And to have a black governor would lower the tone of the British empire.

Thus far Winston Churchill has not stated his war aims but, judging by the new type of leadership he has portrayed to the world, and his priceless faculty of inspiring new courage, there is reason to believe that his war aims will include the end of tyranny and the endowment of freedom for the colonial peoples.

Young Refugees Expose Nazi's Race Discrimatory Practices

FEB 15 1941

Colored Women Sterilized and Made to Serve as Prostitutes for Soldiers—Shunted Around to Various Prison Camps— Colored World War Ace's Children Come to America After Hitler Takes Father's Business.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13—(ANP)—To those readers of Hitler's "Mein Kampf," familiar with his conception of the way members of the "black races" should be treated, reports of the atrocities to which Negroes are being subjected in Nazi-dominated Paris come as no surprise.

In the fun-loving city which American Negroes had formerly regarded as a veritable haven for the oppressed, Hitler's theories have been put into practice, and the fourteen colored refugees who arrived here Monday had terrible tales to tell.

It was revealed that colored women are sterilized and then shunted around to various prison camps in occupied France, where they serve as prostitutes for prisoners and guards. The children remain behind to work as domestics for German and French military authorities; those not old enough to work are given just enough food to keep them alive.

Among the pasengers were the two daughters of Eugene Bullard, only colored aviator to serve in the last war, Jacqueline and Lolita, who told their father that the family's $50,000 gymnasium and restaurant had been taken over by a young German who had been living in Paris before the war, and who turned out to be one of Hitler's fifth columnists. The girls, who were born in France and spoke no English, said: "When we ventured out into the streets, the Germans would laugh at us and call us animals."

Mrs. Arabelle Middleton, formerly of Washington, revealed that she had been forced to leave her 10-year-old son behind with white friends who promised to take care of him "until I am able to get him out."

Hitler O.K.'s Jo Baker; She Returns To Paris

FEB 15 1941

MARSEILLES, France — Miss Josephine Baker opened here at one of the two legit theatres Thursday and attracted a large crowd. Miss Baker came here from occupied Paris where she was allowed to remain incognito by Nazi officials after a direct apeal had been made to Hitler. When the Germans made their blitzkrieg on France and finally reached Paris, Miss Baker slipped out for Holland. She was to have sailed for America from this point but because of her being a native of France (by adoption) could not secure papers.

Then a few weeks ago Nazi officials were struck with the idea that the return of Miss Baker and Mauriece Chevalier who is playing across the street from Josephine, might calm a lot of the unrest that now exists in this country. So Josephine was contacted and given official proof that she might return to France.

When she opened the present engagement there were several prominent Germans in the theatre, who applauded vigorously at Miss Baker's antics and dances. Miss Baker's script and type of dances were all passed by a German and French censor board to make sure that nothing offensive to the Nazi would be displayed. A part of the proceeds from Miss Baker's engagement which has several more weeks to run is turned over to the government for the purpose of feeding the starving thousands here.

BRITISH DISCRIMINATION

FEB 15 1941

British authorities in London have just made public a new law making it illegal for British hotels to discriminate against people because of race or color. Negroes from various parts of the empire as well as from America have often been refused accommodation in many London hotels.

In a recent discussion of the question of color and racial discrimination in the House of Commons, the Home Secretary was asked whether he was aware that the management of certain hotels, as for instance the Anglo-Swiss hotel at Bournemouth, had issued advertisements announcing that they did not cater to members of the Semitic race; and whether he would take steps to prevent discrimination among British subjects.

Mr. Herbert Morrison, Socialist Home Secretary, said in replying to the inquiry, "If any hotel proprietor in this country is guilty of copying Nazi methods in this way, there will, I am sure, be general public repudiation of such action. I am advised that an innkeeper is not entitled to discriminate between one person and another if he has accommodation available, and that a traveller who is refused except when no accommodation is available has a right of action for damages against the innkeeper."

If what Mr. Morrison said is true, then it is all the more surprising that most English hotels refuse accommodation to distinguished Negroes visiting the British capital. One has only to recall the case of the Mills brothers who were turned away from several hotels on their last visit to London.

In Edinburgh, a number of Negro bishops attending a religious conference, not so long ago, were refused accommodation. On that occasion, Sir John Simon, then Home Secretary, had to intervene to secure a place for the clergymen to stay.

There has been no issue of denial of civil liberties more frequently protested against by Negroes in London than that of the difficulty of obtaining hotel accommodation.

Unlike Paris and most continental cities, London is the least hospitable place for people of color, when it comes to finding lodgings. It is to be hoped that Mr. Morrison's observation on this question will have the desired effect, not only for Jews, but colored subjects of the King as well.

Charge Colored Women Sterilized By Nazi Officers

NEW YORK—(A N P)—To those readers of Hitler's "Mein Kampf," familiar with his conception of the way members of the "black races" should be treated, reports of the astrocities to which Negroes are being subjected in Nazi-dominated Paris come as no surprise.

Germany's Problem

THE idea of importing to the United States some 450,000 racial and political scapegoats from German-controlled Europe ought to be squelched immediately by our State department.

The impracticalities of the suggestion are obvious, but over and beyond that, it should be remembered that those 450,000 refugees from Naziism would become charges of the people of the United States, if they were allowed to come here.

Right now Germany is under the necessity of feeding them and giving them shelter, and the German government is itself responsible for their plight.

There doesn't appear to be any good reason why the United States should assume the burden of caring for Hitler's victims, thereby freeing more food and supplies for his armies.

Americans, naturally, feel a deep sympathy for those who have been deprived of their homes, their freedom and who probably are hungry and ill-clad. But we do not believe that this country could afford to add 450,000 hungry people to its already lengthy list of those who are on relief.

The humanitarian instinct of the American would impel him to extend whatever aid he could to a helpless and desperate people, but if we are going into the humanitarian business wholesale, there are even more victims of war outside German-controlled Europe than are in it.

Doubtless many thousands of Britons are suffering from the effects of war, men too old to fight, women and children. And the Chinese victims of aggression are numbered in the millions.

If we have to help the helpless on the other side of the world, we feel it would be safer for the United States to keep away from Germany's problems. And, above all, let Hitler keep his prisoners at home, rather than run the risk of allowing him to send an army here in the name of sweet charity.

Interracial Justice

By ANNA M. McGARRY

The greatest of Mr. Hitler's accomplishments, as the writer sees it, is not his conquering of smaller nations nor his campaign of racial superiority. Neither is new and neither is a feat which could not be accomplished by lesser men. His greatest accomplishment, as the writer views it, is his complete domination of the thinking of the world. Practically no nation is pursuing its regular routine. Either it has thrown its weight into the scales with one belligerent or the other or has been drawn in without its consent or against its better judgment. No one thinks of anything but Hitler and war and armaments; and what will happen if Hitler WINS!

Yet who won in the last conflict and who gained anything from the VICTORY? Twenty-three years ago, we were going through the same feverish pace, to arm, to send our men to camps for training, to help "Save the World for Democracy," to protect the weaker nations from the strong war machine of Germany, under the leadership of the Kaiser.

RESULT OF LAST WAR

Suddenly the firing ceased, the arms were laid down, bells rang out, shouts of joy filled the air everywhere! "The war is over"! Children were clasped in anxious mothers' arms in joy at the prospect that their fathers would return; thousands murmured a tearful "Thank God" that the sacrifice of their nearest and dearest had at last brought victory. A strange reaction set in, relaxation from the suspense of watching casualty lists, months of watching and waiting for the return of the heroes, jubilant demonstrations on their arrival, and finally the period when we all settled down and heaved a sigh of relief that the last boatload of soldiers had returned. Then the endless effort to readjust families, the search for jobs, the discouraging return day after day, the necessity for mothers to continue their employment because husbands could find no employment, hectic weeks and months during which the men could not sleep thinking of the scenes they had left, torn nerves, shattered minds, wrecked bodies and eventually hospitals, cemeteries and asylums for countless thousands.

JAN 23 1941

READJUSTMENT DIFFICULT

Children asking "What's the matter with Daddy"? and mothers tearfully shaking their heads. No one could answer the questions, no one really knew. The cause was locked up in the hearts of the men themselves and seldom could they bring themselves to discuss it even with those closest to them. Years of readjustment during which some never became readjusted, scattered homes, undisciplined youth, reckless gangsters, depression, unemployment, bread lines, WPA and all the other attempts to fill the gay and, finally, the end of the "lane" with its inevitable "turn" and what do we find at the turn? A repetition more deadly and more devastating. And who is the aggressor? The same nation that was "conquered" in 1918. And where is the Kaiser? Out among the tulips probably contemplating the futility of war as a means of settlement.

Isn't there something wrong with the picture? Shouldn't we retrace our steps as we have a criminal do, go over the scene of the crime, reconstruct the scene, trace the story back to its beginning and see why it led up to the crime? Surely there is a reason and a remedy; surely men do not plan these things just for pastime; surely somewhere, sometime, some one will place the searchlight on the hidden canker which ferments and foments and destroys.

THE NEED FOR REASON

"Peace is the tranquility of order." War is its deadly opposite. Yet when war ends we must face the necessity of peace, even if it is only a respite as the Armistice was. Why in the name of the Prince of Peace can we not try to find some other way than this ever recurring destruction of the most precious gift of God—LIFE.

If you believe WAR is the only answer, just lay this aside. But if you yearn to see PEACE in the hearts of all mankind, at least offer a prayer tonight to Him Who is greater than Hitler, greater than all the combined powers of all the nations and Who has promised to send the Spirit of Light to dwell among men. Offer a prayer of penance and supplication that all the mothers of all the world may be spared the necessity of sending their sons into the cauldron of WAR. Pray not for "appeasement" but for A PEACE MEANT—a peace based on JUSTICE—a justice tinged with MERCY—and a return of mankind to the feet of Christ Who dwelt among men to show them the WAY.

Seeing and Saying • By William A. Fowlkes

JAN 26 1941

Falling Back On Black Men

DISPATCHES FROM beleaguered London last week said that Great Britain is falling back on its vast reserve of black manpower, that the Royal Air Force is opening its doors to black pilots.

Who would have thought, say five years ago, that Britain, which like other Nordic - philosophized democracies so long refused to let its darker-hued subjects play with higher types of implements of war would be forced to "lower its dignity" and about face in its ways? Dire circumstances change men's thought quickly.

FOWLKES

The British are finding, according to leading journals, that black manpower is in many ways better fitted for use in the operation of brain-upsetting dive bombers, the speediest of pursuit planes, roaring tanks and other noisy and lightning-like machines of modern warfare. Then, too, on the selfish side. Britain is seeing her white young manpower slowly, but surely, wiped out or crippled by the bombs and fire of an apparently stronger German war machine.

HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

The "about face" of Britain, biggest power on our sphere, should be handwriting on the wall for other nations which pose to be, but actually are not, democratic to their life core. Will America, like Britain, wait until the "ninth hour" to resort to the use of reserves that ALWAYS HAVE BEEN ready, willing and able to GUARANTEE the continuation of her well-proclaimed democratic type of government and peace-exalting civilization?

Daily, thousands of colored youths, fit and ready to aid in the defense of their homeland and eager to be a cog in making ours the "great arsenal of democracy," are being rejected in almost every branch of the Army and Navy service. Their being accepted under Selective Service has been so retarded that today, nearly four months after the draft act went into effect, only a comparative handful of colored registrants has been able to enter camp, even as ordinary privates to be assigned the most menial of tasks. The technical service branches are "not ready" for them. Gestures of acceptance seem as the proverbial drop in the bucket. Orders from higher-ups to "guarantee" equal opportunity of training and service in every branch of the fighting governmental units are either totally ignored, or at most "played with" to the last ditch.

SPECIAL CORPS SET UP

JAN 26 1941

The bars remain in the REAL, well equipped, efficiently manned and courteously-considered branches of that part of our government, presently dedicated to "save democracy" as in World War I. Only by the setting up of SPECIAL corps of services is a pitiful handful of colored Americans being satisfied that an effort is being made to include them in the programs of the higher brackets of army service. The Navy almost totally ignores them, except as messmen, and reports indicate they can't even express ambition in that bracket without expecting to be thrown "in the brig" and dismissed without a hearing. All of this adds to the general confusion and inefficiency of our proposed mammoth defense structure. Add to this greater possibility of sabotage through "without question" acceptance of many whose sympathies are with their "European fatherlands" and who are paid to propagandize and destroy America's gestures to aid certain warring countries.

Someday—and that day may be sooner than any of us think—the unlimited services by black Americans will be welcomed by presently objecting civilian and governmental minds. A real crisis, such as England is experiencing, would probably provide such a change in spirit and purpose. The spirit is changing in England, which became fabulously rich off the techniques of exacting the maximum of black men's sweat and blood in Africa and the islands of the seven seas. It can change here.

NATION HEADED FOR WAR

Our country is fast headed for full participation in the war, unless something happens quickly to change a few leading minds. I, for one, am not so sure that war is not in the eternal plan and would not be the best thing for us. Although a pacifist by nature, I believe that only a great destruction can change the evil minds of nations and individuals that peace and order can reign again.

I do not believe that under the current "orderly" process black men CAN have an expansion of freedom and respect. I see, instead, a tightening of the economic and social vise—more unemployment, more discontent, more discomfort for the masses. Under the present processes, black men are being slowly but surely reduced to serfdom. Only a calamity to controlling minds can change the re-enslavement philosophy, apparently most fertile in the South, but being slowly understood and appreciated in other sections. Only a catastrophe strong enough to change the heart may make men love and appreciate each other, at least for a while.

It was Charles A. Lindbergh,—the other day in testifying before the House committee conducting hearings on the lease-lend bill, who said that he didn't want to see either side in the European war win. He said "it would be a disaster for Europe if either side won." Mr. Lindbergh apparently views the death struggle as it really is and takes cognizance of the European hatreds as they really are. The attitude of mankind is all a-twitter.

LINED UP FOR DEATH STRUGGLE

The nations of the world are lined up for a death struggle, after which would come another "dark ages," certainly darker and longer than that of the middle centuries. It took the "dark ages" to get civilization where it is today (if that is any too far from the barbarism of the stone ages). After those years men tried to develop an understanding and tolerance for each other's domain never before known. Perhaps after the present conflict subsides what is left of men will think more of each other as human beings and free individuals, capable of thinking, feeling and understanding.

It was the learned W. E. B. DuBois who said in a recent speech at Missouri's Lincoln University that the future world will be what black men make it. He may have something there, for black men, today left out of the fighting processes for the most part, MAY be the only ones left to think and operate the processes of civilization. Others seem bent on destroying each other and doing it alone.

Start 'Defend Democracy by Aiding Ethiopia' Campaign

JAN 24 1941

PHILADELPHIA.—A large group of people in Philadelphia have determined to "Defend Democracy by Aiding Ethiopia," and have organized under sponsorship of the Ethiopian World Federation, 1221 N. 10th St.

Concrete proof of the effectiveness of their efforts was demonstrated on last Saturday evening at a banquet which formally opened their campaign where a letter from London, England, over the signature of Emanuel Abraham, chief representative of the "Lion of Judah" in Europe, was read to the assembled hundreds.

MISS RUTH PINCKNEY

This letter says:

"Thank you for your note and for the sum of 12 pounds which you and your committee were so good as to send in aid for Ethiopia . . . Now that their beloved Emperor is back in Africa the valiant Ethiopian warriors are fighting for the freedom of our ancient land with redoubled vigour. We hope that, with Good's power and the moral and material aid of our British and American friends, Ethiopia will soon be freed of the heartless enemy who has been ravaging her for five long years."

This letter was addressed to Miss Ruth Pinckney, 1851 N. Sheridan St., who has abandoned her pursuit of higher education at Temple university in order to devote her undivided attention to this gigantic undertaking.

While no announcement has been made of the financial goal to be set for the aid of the Ethiopian forces, sources close to the sponsoring organization have disclosed that the U. S. Department of State will be asked permission to allow the unit to collect funds here.

Supporters of the drive also expect to obtain the endorsement of such nationally active organizations as the N.A.A.C.P. and the National Negro congress.

At the banquet on Saturday evening, which was arranged according to the traditional ceremonies practised for centuries in Judah Land, Ly Aray Abebe Haile Selas, Ethiopian representative, addressed a direct plea to attending guests who were both white and black.

Following the banquet, Henry L. Feiggens and his troupers entertained with a clever floor show.

Magistrate Joseph H. Rainey and Dr. J. W. Shirley, a former teacher in Africa, were the main speakers on Sunday afternoon at another "Help Ethiopia" meeting in the federation hall. Also on the program was Emmett Jones, president of the federation.

Against a Common Foe

Nothing is more likely to bring together forces that are ordinarily hostile or indifferent to each other, than a common enemy. Such is the case abroad where Prime Minister Winston Churchill, now begging for weapons and ammunition, is lined up with former Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, whose begging some years ago, fell on deaf ears, even those of Winston Churchill.

Some might call it poetic justice that the enemy Churchill is begging for aid to defeat, is the same force Haile Selassie sought help to check five years ago.

In this country, the N.A.A.C.P., the National Urban League, the New York Urban League, church organizations, the press, and scores of other groups are firmly united behind the move to curb discrimination of the army, navy and in emplo ment in our National Defense program. This kind of action ought to achieve some results. The fight has been brought so completely in the open and has become such a part of our domestic struggle, that any person or group of persons would find it impossible to attempt to compromise or sabotage the issue.

We can hardly recall the time when all these groups have been of one mind and one accord on major problems, even though the problems have directly affected the lives and rights of Negroes. It is a well known fact that considerable pussyfooting has been shown on the anti-lynching bill and other measures involving the Race.

Those persons trying to escape responsibility for allowing discrimination to be practiced as the nation goes about the task of preparing its defenses, are going to run into a storm of protest every way they turn. Negroes are determined to dam up every hole and are going to make every official having anything to do with the National Defense program answer for himself—from the chief executive down to the shop foreman in the manufacturing plants. This is one fight, Negroes apparently don't intend to take lying down. It's a healthy sign, and Mr. Average Citizen ought to get in line with some of these groups and lend his help in attempting to crystallize a vigorous and effective sentiment against the evils. There is nothing disloyal about fighting for a chance to help your country prepare to defend itself. It would seem faithless and unpatriotic not to do so.

Col. Julian In The Air

Col. Hubert Fauntleroy Julian is off again to Canada to join the Royal Air Force. He has our best wishes. Three weeks ago dispatches from Ottawa stated that the Colonel who had enlisted in the flying corps there had passed the rigid physical examination, but flunked the flying test and was rejected.

Several days later in New York City, the Colonel invited reporters from the Amsterdam News to witness a flying exhibition at Floyd Bennett Field, where he would attempt to scout reports that he is not an aviator of merit. The reporters who saw the Colonel soar above the field and the city were impressed. Some of them went up with him.

In explaining his difficulties in Ottawa, the Colonel said that when he was ordered into the air, he was cold and exhausted; that he hadn't become conditioned to the weather. Further, he said he was unaccustomed to the heavy army bombing planes, and had hoped he would have been given a chance to acquaint himself with them before going into the air. Now that he has had five hours training in heavy craft, he has gone back to Canada to try again.

While we appreciate the prowess of the adventurous Colonel, we are mainly concerned with the fact that the RAF gave him a chance -something our own flying forces continue to refuse to give Negroes. And the United States is universally looked upon as the leader of Democracy.

We arise to proclaim: What Mockery!

Selassie to Lead Ethiopian Forces Against Italians

JAN 14 1941

(The Associated Press)

London, Jan. 13. — A Reuter's (British news agency) dispatch from Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, today quoted Haile Selassie as saying the "time is not far distant" when he would lead an army of Ethiopian patriots against the Italians who drove him from his throne.

He declared he was pleased with the progress of training his army and added that revolt among his tribesmen was making great headway.

"The days of my former Italian ally who betrayed my country are numbered," he was quoted as saying. "They built fine roads but killed and enslaved thousands of my people, although they failed to break their spirit. I look forward to the liberation of Ethiopia and the establishment of a just and constitutional government."

He said royal war drums were beating nightly and "hundreds of my former soldiers now forced to fight for the Italians understand the message of the drums and are now deserting and rallying to the standard raised at Gojjam by the faithful commander, Ras Mongasha."

Strike to Regain the Land Taken from Them by Italians

NEW YORK.—A London news wireless released to the press here Sunday reported the rebellion of the Ethiopians against Italian forces in Ethiopia and of the activity of Haile Selassie.

The dispatch from Khartoum, Anglo, Egyptian Sudan, was as follows:

"Haile Selassie, dethroned by his Italian conquerors five years ago, is receiving a constant stream of tribal revolutionary agents in this city, only 300 miles from the Ethiopian frontier.

"These native tribesmen loyal to the ex-Emperor have been evading Italian border patrols to cross into the Sudan. Here they receive guns and ammunition furnished by the British and reenter Ethiopia to carry on guerrilla warfare.

Guerrilla fighting has been reported especially heavy in Southern Ethiopia. There have been estimates that 210,000 Ethiopians were active throughout the country.

"Haile Selassie is ready to enter Ethiopia to head the revolt the moment he and the British deem it opportune."

The dispatch quoted Selassie as saying:

"The days of my former Italian ally who betrayed my country are numbered. They built fine roads but killed and enslaved thousands of my people, although they failed to break their spirit. I look forward to the liberation of Ethiopia and the establishment of a just and constitutional government."

BRITISH EXPLOITATION OF BLACK RACE EXTENDS FROM 1583 TO 1920

FEB 21 1941

American Negroes Want to Know What Are John Bull's Aims Now, Before Giving Him Aid.

WASHINGTON—(NNS)— In the bitter debates now raging in the Nation's Capitol over the Lend-Lease Bill, the question of Britain's war aims in the present conflict is becoming of paramount importance. The more realistic opponents of American involvement in the Second World War point a reminding finger to England's unhappy past record in such affairs.

From 1583 until 1920 Great Britain managed to enslave 495 millions of people, and acquire approximately one-third of the earth's surface for her Empire.

The excuse is often made in her behalf that all this is ancient history, that Britain's conquests belong to the past and that they should be overlooked if not forgotten in this present world conflict.

Actually, in the past quarter of a century alone, the British Empire has added to her territory over 1,100,000 square miles—has extended at the same time her rule over more than 11 million additional unwilling subjects. This was the "take" from the First World War—the Cameroons, Tanganyika, South West Africa, Western Samoa and New Guinea, with predominate populations of black men.

In the present war, Great Britain is again silent on her territorial ambitions. A group of keen political observers in Washington remembering the bitter aftermath of World War I, are openly cynical of the future. In light of this semi-official suspicion of British motives, the colored people are asked to aid Britain, an exploiter of colored people, can well ask themselves, first, What Colored Brothers in Africa and the Far East. They Are Being Asked to Aid in Subjugating Them to White Imperialism.

BLACK GOVERNOR IS IN FRENCH COUNCIL

LONDON, Feb. 6.—(Censored)—General De Gaulle, leader of the Free French movement, has conferred one of the highest honors possible on Monsieur Felix Sylvester Eboue, Negro governor-general of Equitorial Africa and Chevalier in the Legion of Honor.

Monsieur Eboue, who was the first French colonial administrator to revolt against his government and join the Free French cause, and was followed by many white leaders, has been made a member of the French Council of Defense of the Free French Empire.

The British government considers this council as the official representative of the Free French Empire, and will collaborate with it on all questions of political and economic importance.

Colonel Hubert Fauntleroy Julian Qualifies For Royal Air Force

JAN 25 1941

"Black Eagle" Still a British Subject—Qualifies to Fight In Air For England—Was Last Active In Finnish Campaign, Where Mannerheim Made Him a Captain.

From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands, scarcely is sufficient to describe the magic carpet over which Col. Hubert Fauntleroy Julian, the intrepid aviator and adventurer known as the "Black Eagle," has trod in his seven-leagued boots to all parts of the habitable and navigable world.

Born in Trinidad, British West Indies, this race-loving soldier of fortune has looked at the faces of dead Russians through the ice on Finland's cold marshes, has swapped wisdom with the philosophers of Bombay and Calcutta, has flown over the awe-inspiring crags of Ethiopia's forbidding mountains, has made contributions to the news pages of the world that have been so fantastic that they seem beyond relief.

Now 44 years old, Col. Julian has recently been accepted as a member of the Royal Air Force of Great Britain. He was scheduled to fly his ship to England, but bad flying weather which prevails at this time of the year, will postpone that flight.

He passed the flying test for the Royal Air force, Dec. 12, 1940.

Although Julian has been resident in the United States for 20 years, he still retains his British citizenship.

Last year he went to Finland to join the Finnish Air Corps.

Gen. Mannerheim, who led the glorious Finnish defense, named Julian a captain in the Finish Air Corps in an order of the day.

EUROPEAN HEADS IGNORE PLEA TO STOP AGGRESSIONS

FEB 22 1941

By JAMES EDMUND BOYACK

(Copyright, 1941 by The Pittsburgh Courier. Reproduction in whole or in part strictly forbidden.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 20—Little did the world realize that when Benito Mussolini's propagandists began their blatant ballyhoo campaign for the occupation of Ethiopia, that forces were unloosed which are destined to revolutionize the lives of men for generations to come.

FEB 22 1941

For on the day Il Duce stood on the balcony of the Palazzo Chigi on the Piazza Del Popolo in Rome bellowing his demands for a greater African empire, a juggernaut was set in motion which since has struck down kings, banished presidents into oblivion, sent prime ministers into retirement and condemned millions to political slavery, slow starvation, widespread disease and sudden death.

Tomorrow, historians will single out this humble soldier in the battle against the Axis as the one modern ruler who outguessed the statesmen thronging the marble halls of the League of Nations; who foretold the present world revolution.

Haile Selassie's story is one of the most dramatic and colorful in our time. It is a tale of irony and faith and hope which might be found in the pages of fiction.

It was the Hoare-Laval plan to sell out Ethiopia which first brought British and French appeasers into the diplomatic spotlight. And it was Italian victory over Ethiopia which gave the appeasement clique its start towards power. Great Britain and France, whose emissaries dominated the League of Nations, refused to invoke economic sanctions against the Italian warlord. Little did they realize that this temporizing with aggression sounded the death knell of the league which rapidly lost prestige and soon was to be buried 'neath the world maelstrom.

While his warriors were still at bay, Emperor Haile Selassie sent personal messages to the league council. He predicted that unless the Italian aggression was blocked, no small nation would be safe. He warned that the powerful nations would ultimately become the victims of the aggressors if they stood idly by and permitted the rape of his country.

Haile Selassie, from his mediaeval palace in that ancient land, told the worlds' statesmen gathered together in the palace on the shores of Lake Geneva, that if Italy conquered Ethiopia it would be the start of a series of aggressions. Uutimately, he declared, the democracies would have to fight for their very lives and civilization itself would be threatened.

Emperor Holds World's Stage

Shortly after, a picturesque little bearded black man appeared briefly on the stage of world politics. His country was then unknown to the average American. Yet he was destined not only to make world history but now is the most discussed statesman in Europe's chancellries.

Six years ago, his fabled land was invaded by Mussolini's fascist legions. Five years ago this spring he was forced to flee his country, a dignified but pathetic figure. His name disappeared from the headlines. His country was heard of no more, because the League of Nations ignored his pleas for help.

Today this strange and mysterious personality again holds the center of the stage. On all sides he is being hailed as Haile Selassie, the King of Kings, the Lion of Judah and Emperor of Ethiopia. He is the hero of the hour.

He Predicted Present Conflict

At the council board of the allied nations his soft-voiced advice is a command. For Emperor Haile Selassie has again buckled on his sword to lead his people against the enemy and drive the fascists into the Red Sea. Now his triumphant return to his rightful throne is measured in miles, instead of years.

Nation After Nation Fell

French statesmen scoffed at this dire prediction. British cabinet ministers accepted the view that the Emperor was aguing only for the salvation of his own country. In the end Mussolini's soldiers swarmed over Ethiopia, with no more than perfunctory and official protests. The democracies had overlooked the fact that the soft-spoken little prophet is a direct descendant of King Solomon, the wise, and the Queen of Sheba. And the prophet's words soon became a grim and disastrous reality.

Among the small nations which have followed Ethiopia into political slavery were: Austria, Czechoslovakia, the Saar, Rumania, Albania, Poland, Denmark, Belgium, Norway and Holland.

Soon France was crushed beneath the invader's heel, its brave soldiers killed, wounded or made slaves of the Nazi overlord. When France was on her knees, Italy "stabbed her in the back," according to President Roosevelt in his Virginia speech.

Britain is fighting desperately for her very existence with invasion threatened almost any week. On Flander's fields more unmarked British graves dot the war-torn countryside. And the blood of Canadians, East Indians, Australians, New Zealanders and other subjects of the empire has darkened the hot white sand of Africa.

Cost Strangles Democracies

The ruinous cost of this war was revaled only this week when the House of Commons granted the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Kingsley Wood, another two and one-half billion dollars to tide the country over until March 31st. At the same time four billion dollars was appropriated to start the new financial year. The present rate of war expenditure is $292,000,000 weekly and no ceiling is yet in sight. England is fast becoming insolvent.

And over the week-end the U. S. House of Repersentatives passed the Administration's "lend-spend" bill granting the President powers to transfer war materials to the allies to the tune of $1,300,000,000 until next July. It seems that we are committed to all-out-aid to Britain at any cost, because an amendment to limit our "aid" expenditures to seven billion was turned down.

But returning to the story of Haile Selassie we find that when he arived in England after his flight from Ethiopia, he set up the pretense of a court. However, appeasers were in power who thought it best to make friends with Mussolini and ignore the tremendous armaments program which was under way in Germany. The Emperor was not permitted to set up a government in exile. Britain withdrew formal recognition.

By 1937, British newspaper writers were referring to the sick refugee as "the most pathetic figure in the world."

And the former Emperor was fighting poverty. He was obliged to sell his home in Bath, his automobiles and family silver. At one time he reached a point when he skipped meals.

King of Kings Kept the Faith

Efforts to meet the economic pinch by publication of his memoirs struck a snag when the British government let him know that it would be politically unwise.

Britain came to regard Haile Selassie as a trouble-maker who was blocking good relations between Britain and Italy. When the Emperor was attempting to bring his case before the League of Nations in 1937, one British writer suggested that "a good brain wave," to silence the ex-emperor would bring joy to every country in Europe.

A year later, Haile Selassie's golden crown and his rdoyal scepter were being presented to Benito Mussolini in Rome. Britain and France were leading a move to free League of Nations members from their obligation not to recognize the Italian conquest.

Britain finally gave de facto recognition by sending an ammassador to Rome, accredited to "the King of Italy and Emperor of Ethiopia."

But still the little Emperor kept faith. Three times Mussolini attempted to get the Crown Prince to go back and reign as Emperor. Once Haile Selassie was offered a large sum of money to abdicate in favor of the Crown Prince. Finally he was offered great wealth and his throne if he would return to his native land as puppet emperor, under Mussolini's orders.

Haile Selassie's answer read: "One day, I, or a member of my family, will go back to my country to the high place where we belong. Until then we live in hope and prayer. I cannot accept personal wealth and security at the Italian price. I must wait, hope, and do my duty."

FEB 22 1941

His Prophecy Had Come True

The dusky statesman waited. He kept in close touch with the Ethiopian tribesmen who were still fighting the Italians and raiding towns and Italian outposts.

Finally he saw the invasion of other small nations. His prophecy had come true. War had burst upon the world like a bombshell.

An ignored black man in England soon found Britain fighting the Italians in Africa. The moment he had long awaited had arrived. Ethiopia would prove an invaluable ally in the gigantic struggle against the aggressors. He redoubled his efforts to bring about the Ethiopian rebellion. Soon after he was in Khartoum, capital of the Sudan surrounded by trusted chieftains. Day and night he feverishly worked, making careful preparations for the coming invasion.

Not long after the British High Command in Cairo announced that Emperor Haile Selassie had established his new headquarters in Ethiopia. And native drums were heard in the stillness of the night across waterless deserts; on mountain peaks and across wild Ethiopian valleys spreading word that the king had returned, and calling all loyal warriors to arms.

So today in his military headquarters deep in Ethiopia a picturesque little bearded black man holds court once again. Across East Africa the war drums roar. And victory is near.

And when the war is ended, Anthony Eden British Foreign Secretary announces, Haile Selassie will enter Addis Ababa, his capital, as the King of Kings, the Lion of Judah, and Emperor of Ethiopia, where he will dispense mercy and justice to all.

Haille Selassie continued to wait, and hope and pray. And finally the moment for which he was waiting arrived. Britain and the Italians were fighting in Africa, and Ethiopia would prove an invaluable ally. Then Neville Chamberlain, the last of the British appeasers fell from power. In his stead rose belligerent imperialist, Winston Spencer Churchill, known for forty years as the stormy petrel of British politics.

This writer knows Churchill well. He directed his press relations when the cigar-smoking historian of war vistied the United States several years ago.

Here was the man of action who would listen to Haille Selassie's plans. Soon the little Emperor was on his way back to his native land in a British bomber, to lead the assault on the Italian East African stronghold.

Sudan Cotton Growing

JAN 2 1941

A circular to shareholders of the Sudan Plantations Syndicate states:—

"It is not possible to give any reliable information as to what the results of the year's working will be. There are considerably larger stocks of cotton and seed remaining unsold than there were 12 months ago, and, unfortunately, these stocks are in a danger area where insurance against risk of enemy action cannot be effected. Every effort has been made to remove them to this and other countries where it would be possible to make sales, but lack of shipping facilities has prevented this, and, although there has been a slight improvement in this respect in the last two months which may not continue, the valuation to be placed upon these stocks while still at risk is very difficult to assess. For this reason, bearing in mind the effect that such a valuation must have upon the balance sheet figures, it would in any event have been desirable to postpone the presentation of the accounts until it is possible at least to reduce the risk at stake. The whole of the 1939 crop has been sold, and under the circumstances fair progress has been made in the disposal of the 1940 crop cotton and seed at satisfactory prices."

A circular in similar terms was sent to shareholders of the Kassala Cotton Company, Ltd.

Natives Representative Council.

According to the Pretoria correspondent of the South African Press Association, in a speech at the opening of the fourth session of the Natives' Representative Council on 25th November the Minister of Native Affairs, Col. Denys Reitz, thanked the Native people for their many generous donations to the war funds and their response to the call for enlistment in the military police. He also expressed appreciation at their "unwavering loyalty" and the law-abiding attitude they had maintained in difficult times. There might still be dark days to face but the Government could, he said, rely on the spirit of calmness and trust which the Native people had shown in the past. Col. Reitz could not be present at the opening owing to a sudden indisposition. His speech was read. The Minister was thanked by Councillor R. H. Godlo (Cape) and Councillor R. V. Selope Thema (Transvaal). Councillor Godlo said they were flattered to think that the Deputy Prime Minister was now in charge of their affairs, and they hoped this would result in more attention being given to them. Councillor Thema said there could be no doubt about the loyalty of the Native people of South Africa. They were contributing all they could to war funds, had cut their meagre earnings and would do more if they were allowed to. The authorities must not be deceived into thinking that this loyalty was a sign of happiness and content. The Native people were loyal because they believed it to be their duty and because they not unnaturally felt that they wanted to do something to help the country in which they lived. Mr. D. L. Smit (Secretary for Native Affairs) said the Department of Native Affairs would go ahead with the policy announced last year of providing money for school buildings and equipment.

The War In Africa

JAN 23 1941

The intensity of the recent British offensive in Egypt and Lybia has had evident repercussions in the European theater of war, and despite the belief that the real issue of the war will be decided in the Battle of Britain, there is widespread opinion the war in Africa will have tremendous influence upon the outcome. This feeling is all the more pronounced since the recent rioting and fighting in East Africa, where the erstwhile Emperor of Abyssinia, Haile Selassie, has been very active in fomenting rebellion by his countrymen and who have been given material aid by the British, who now place considerable store by their probable assistance in the war.

Africans and people of African descent in all parts of the world will follow events there with great interest, knowing that the fate of the African peoples will in great measure be determined by the outcome of the war and will be materially affected by the part which the Africans themselves play in winning the war.

Oddly enough African natives have been employed by the British and the Italians and thus Africans find themselves fighting against each other in a war not of their own choice or making. But the outcome of this war will be of very great importance to the African people, because it will mean, if the democracies win, and they will win, that the African people will come a step nearer to self-government than before. And by the same rule, if by any chance the Axis powers should win, it would mean not only the continued subjugation of the natives, but an enslavement of the Europeans who have been the rulers of the African colonies.

Churchmen and missionaries who have been in Africa tell us of the dreams of the African people that they may some day be the masters of their own destiny, the rulers of their own fate. They tell of the time when they shall "drive the white man into the sea." Whether that dream shall come true in the spirit of good-will and peaceful understanding instead of in terms of hate and war will be determined by the treatment which the white people accord the Africans, who have not only toiled through long centuries to give of their vast raw material stores for the benefit of the white nations but have served as soldiers to win wars which they must have known would keep them in bondage and subject to the exploitation of the Europeans.

By every rule of observation the War in Africa is interesting and furnishes much speculation as to what may happen as the result of the fury that has been unleased upon the hot sands of the Dark Continent.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

JAN 2 1941

ONE RESULT of the splendid victory of the Empire's forces in the Western Desert of Egypt and in eastern Libya has been the capture of great quantities of Italian arms and ammunition, much of which has been and will be sent to our Greek allies, but a good deal of which will be available for prompt dispatch to the Sudan for distribution to the Abyssinians. This possibility coincides with new evidence of the increasing restlessness of the tribes under Italian domination, and of more frequent attacks upon isolated Italian posts, patrols and convoys. In these engagements, in which the Ethiopians are frequently successful, they have often acquired rifles and ammunition, and sometimes machine-guns. Indeed, their standard means of replenishing their scanty store of cartridges and of adding to the number of their rifles has been to surprise the Italian possessors of these coveted accoutrements, and when an uprising becomes general, it will be from the Italians that the revolting tribesmen must expect to secure ever-growing supplies of these necessities. Meantime the great booty left in our hands by the tens of thousands of Italians who have surrendered on the borders of Egypt constitutes a most important means of accelerating outbreaks in Italian East Africa, where modern weapons of insurrection have been lacking, even though deepening discontent has been spreading. To have furnished the Abyssinians with British rifles would have compelled them to look to their rear for further supplies of ammunition, but to give them Italian rifles, and remind them that immense quantities of ammunition can be had for the taking from their hated Italian task-masters, must have an enhanced psychological and practical value.

'Trust No White Nation!' His Warning To Ethiopia

LOS ANGELES, (ANP)—Including some reminiscences of his tour to England, Germany, Russia, France and other European countries a few years ago, Atty. Loren Miller, in an address last week sounded a warning to Ethiopia on post-war repercussions. He said:

"Every fair-minded person, regardless of race, will wish the Ethiopians luck in their new endeavor to drive the Italians out of world's oldest Christian country.

"It is ironical that the English are the chief allies of the Ethiopians in their struggle, ironical because Britain bears the major share of the responsibility for permitting Mussolini to destroy Ethiopia's independence.

"If Selassie is wise he will, while accepting English aid, keep his eyes open and forge an army strong enough to prevent his nation from being sold back to Italian slavery in case the British see a chance to make another deal with the Italian dictator."

Ethiopians Aid As British Take Kassala; Italians Are Fleeing

CAIRO, Egypt—(AP)—British forces, striking with the aid of Ethiopian irregulars, have driven Italian troops from Kassala, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, and were reported Monday hotly pursuing Fascist soldiers fleeing eastward all along the 200-mile Sudanese border front.

A communique of the British Middle East command gave the first news of the Italian withdrawal from Kassala four days ago.

"The Italian troops all along this front are retreating, pressed and harassed by our mobile detachments," it added.

Kassala, only 15 miles from the border of Italian Eritrea, had been in Italian hands since last July and was the last Anglo-Egyptian Sudan city held by Fascist forces. They were said to have abandoned the sprawling city of 20,000 almost without firing a shot.

In the Mediterranean German dive-bombers struck twice at the harbor of Valletta, Malta, during the week-end and the British said "at least" 15 raiders were shot down in Sunday's heavy raid, while one British fighter was reported missing. They said civilian property suffered "extensive damage."

(Berlin dispatches said the crippled British aircraft carrier Illustrious had been attacked Sunday for the third time. DNB, official German news agency, said three heavy bombs hit the 23,000-ton vessel as she lay in Valletta Harbor.

(The German High Command also said "individual German battle planes . . . attacked militarily important objectives in the region of the Suez Canal" Friday night.)

There was no mention by the British of the German claim to have raided the Suez Canal Zone.

Several planes of undetermined nationality made the first night raid of the war on British-mandated Palestine during the week-end also, but there were no reports of casualties or damage, although several bombs were dropped during a 30-minute alert.

The Royal Air Force reported a week-end raid on the beleaguered Italian garrison at Tobruk, in Libya, causing "a huge fire" near gasoline dumps. An Australian squadron was said to have shot down an Italian bomber. Other planes, the British said, raided targets in Italian East Africa and in Somaliland.

(The Italian High Command reported artillery activity in the Tobruk sector and patrol activity in the desert, and added that the Italian Air Force had raided British air bases in the upper Sudan "effectively.")

The British appeared satisfied with the progress of the Libyan offensive and were reported striking hard in Italian East Africa, with light tanks and armored cars knifing eastward from the Sudan.

Weeks of constant patrol activity by the British and by British-equipped and trained Ethiopian guerrillas forced the Italians to leave their "strongly defended positions in and around Kassala," the British Middle East command said.

The British were inclined to give much of the credit for the fall of Kassala to a small but potent undercover army of Ethiopians, which began taking form last July, because it kept the Italian supply lines under constant threat.

Kassala, center of an important cotton-growing district, is about 250 miles east of Khartoum, headquarters of Haile Selassie, who has said the royal war drums were beating nightly in his conquered country and "hundreds of my former soldiers now forced to fight for the Italians understand the message of the drums."

British agents sent into Ethiopia trained the guerrilla forces in the tactics of sniping and ambush, some of them even working close to Adris Abama, it was reported.

ETHIOPIANS ON THE MARCH

Haile Selassie's own army of native troops have driven deeply into Ethiopia while British columns thrust from every point of the compass into that beleaguered land. It has already penetrated 200 miles beyond the Sudan frontier and captured Dembecha, less than thirty miles from Debra Markos, chief Italian stronghold of the whole Gojjam region. From Debra Markos stretches the rocky road that leads to Addis Ababa, 115 miles away. In the southwest another Ethiopian force has captured Iavello.

It is natural that a main drive by the native army should advance by way of Gojjam. That wild province was never completely subdued by the Italians. Lurking tribesmen along the whole line of retreat rise from the scrub to fire on Il Duce's soldiers. This time the advancing troops of the Negus are a formidable body, no longer the helpless natives of other days, discharging futile muskets, at swooping Italian bombers. Armed, drilled and officered by the British, they move forward behind British scout planes, with their wings protected by swarms of guerrilla fighters. It speaks well for their discipline that not a word has come from Rome regarding Ethiopian "atrocities."

Harlem Negroes Fight Against Aid To Britain

NEW YORK—Charging that the Lend-Lease Bill means war and that war is against the interests of the Negroes of the United States, representative residents of Harlem have organized a Negroes Against War Committee, with George S. Schuyler as chairman.

The committee contends that concentration on war production, from which Negroes are largely barred, will lessen New Deal appropriations for relief and relief work from which Negroes have benefited.

It holds that it is criminal to give billions of dollars of American wealth to Britain while millions of Negroes are living in poverty. It calls England the "mother of race prejudice."

Native Troops, Who Secretly Hate the Italians, One Cause of Fascist Defeats in Africa

56f
JAN 17 1941
War

By Rudolph Dunbar

LONDON.—British victories in the northern Africa theater of war over the Italians is responsible, to a large degree, to the secret hate which native troops have for their Fascist masters and Mussolini's failure to obtain their loyalty to his cause. Il Duce's success at home in bulldozing the Italian people into taking the role of international bandits has failed miserably in Africa.

Mussolini deserves no mercy. He is a gangster just as evil and incredibly ruthless as the other sadistic weakling, Hitler. His record is black and his purpose is just as sinister. And to think that the late Neville Chamberlain wanted to be friendly with such a vermin and recognize the theft of Abyssinia!

For the good of mankind and for the future of the world, Britain must exterminate Mussolini who is the living compendum of all evil qualities. What changes time brings; Mussolini began his career as conquerer 17 years ago when his fleet bombarded undefended Corfu. Next, this modern Caesar assailed benighted Abyssinia.

It was there that his son-in-law, Count Ciano, and his son, Bruno, earned glory by machine-gunning native villages. "Oh the joy of bombing villages," chanted young Bruno Mussolini, the adolescent thug, during the Abyssinian campaign, De Bono was not swift and ruthless enough in killing off his legitimate prey.

Mussolini thereupon installed Marshall Badoglio on the gallows with sealed orders to annihilate the unfortunate Abyssinians with mustard gas which caused immeasurable suffering, misery and death. For that, Badoglio was made Duke of Addis Ababa. It is, indeed, great satisfaction to know that such barbarous inhumanities have brought their own swift and bitter retribution.

NEGUS PROPHECY

Just before the collapse of Abyssinia, the negus, saddened and disillusioned, forced to leave his country after his most sanguine hopes had suffered an eclipse made this dramatic statement: "Do the people of the world realize by responsibilities not only to my people but to the world, and do they know that I am holding on to the last citadel of collective security? I shall await until my tardy allies come; if they never come, I would say without bitterness but prophetically that the west would perish."

Today, five years later, this astounding prophecy of the emperor has come true for the west is not only perishing, but, it has returned to medieval darkness. It might be recalled that the emperor and his foreign secretary left London about five months ago for an unknown destination in the Sudan. Since then, very little has been heard about the emperor.

For good reasons known to the British military command and the British government, the Emperor's activities have been a close secret. I can, however, state officially that it is intended by the British government that Abyssinia must be for the Abyssinians and in order to bring about this succesfully, I can assure you that the British government has not been idle in its pursuit.

BRITAIN'S GREATEST FIFTH COLUMN

Italy's Libyan army alone numbers 250,000 whites and thousands of Askaris. She has big garrisons of mixed troops in Abyssinia, who are still trying to repress the emperor's rebels and so make Abyssinia a colony in full sense. The Abyssinians have not forgotten or forgiven.

They have been carefully watching the battle in the Mediterranean and today, they are agog with excitement over Britain's successful campaign in the African theater of war. At the time of writing, it was officially announced in London that revolt in Abyssinia is growing with grave symptoms. Thus it will be seen that the biggest fifth column in the world dwells in the Italian empire and it is on the side of Britain.

Graziani, the Italian commander-in-chief, is entangled in a whole web of intrigue chiefly with the problem of the Libyans who dislike him intensely. So, therefore, he cannot but reckon with the probability of mutiny among his large indispensable native levies who owe him no allegiance except due to the glamour of success.

It was the black soldiers conscripted in Libya who were ordered to hold the front at Sidi Barrani. One of their divisions was comprised of old men and others generally considered unfit for service, since they are suffering from eye trouble and other common desert diseases. A typical case is that of one grandfather serving with his two sons in the same regiment. These men refused to go forward. As members of the Senussi tribe they declined to strike their own clansment in Egypt. As Moslems they wouldn't further violate the holy territory of Moslem Egypt.

MUSSOLINI'S ISLAM SWORD

Mussolini's bogus straight sword of Islam will assume the classical Mohammedan curvature and speedily rebuond to destroy in its path the fleetest Italian. The ghost of the Tripolitan Arab patriot Mukhtar (thrown from an Italian aeroplane) is descending on the disconcerted legionaires of Graziana in the form of 500 kilogram bombs.

The Italians who sealed up the wells of Cytenaica and thus reduced the indigenous population to submission are now themselves being steadily starved and forced by their parching thirst into a capitulation only equalled by the route of the Carthaginians at Zama. Fortunately for the Italians, the British High command is not motivated by the gangrene of gangsterism which understands only capitulation by extermination.

The captured troops freed after 18 years of servile bondage in a service of regime utterly alien to their cultural and political tradition, will now find themselves in a concentration camp encircled with barbed wire in the middle of the burning desert as did 80,000 inhabitants of Cyrenaica, who died a miserable death for the crime of not being the true descendants of the Roman Imperium.

Benito Africanus

JAN 12 1941

Among the conquering Romans whom Benito, the barn-stormer, likes to regard as his predecessors was old Scipio Africanus who "carried the war into Africa."

So did Benito, after a fashion.

But the latest dope from the forecasters is that the British, after cleaning up the Roman "empire" in Africa, are planning to carry the war into Italy and compel il duce to stage a one-man Caporetto.

The Greeks in Albania have captured the strategic stronghold of Klisura, which puts them well along the way to the port of Valona. The British have isolated Tobruk and may soon have all Libya in their hands. Ethiopian tribesmen are in revolt, with Haile Selassie near at hand, preparing to regain his ancient kingdom. Eritriea and Italian Somaliland seem doomed.

Bombing planes have created consternation in Naples and Churchill's appeal to the Italian people is seeping through. They begin to realize the disaster into which their pitiful manikin has led them.

Perhaps little more than a gesture of invasion would be necessary to topple Hitler's flunkey from his tinsel throne.

"All-Aid To Abyssinia" Bill Proposed By Lloyd George In Speech To Parliament

Famous Statesman Urges Government of Britain to Arm Abyssinians Now Revolting Against Italy—"Rifles and Machine Guns Would Regain Abysinnians their Independence," Says Lloyd George.

FEB 1 1941 FEB 1 1941

By OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

LONDON (Censored)—Although the British Government has not yet recognized Abyssinia as a full-fledged ally, Lloyd George, Britain's elder statesman and father of the House of Commons, called upon the government to arm the Abyssinians in a passionate speech in Parliament this week.

"Arm the Abyssinians—a first-class fighting race—who, if given enough rifles and machine guns, would regain their independence," declared the Welsh Wizard, who saved Britain from disaster in the World War.

"The Italians," added Lloyd George, "were good fighters when they had their heart in the fight, but they would not fight in a war in which they did not believe. Mussolini," he said amid cheers and laughter from the members of the House of Commons, "came into the fight as a receiver of stolen goods when he thought the burglary had been accomplished. That is not the way to stir the soul of a nation like Italy, an artistic nation — especially when they find the goods are not there."

ABYSSINIA REVOLT, BRITISH AID PLEDGED

R. A. Butler, the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in reply to a question by G. L. Mander, Liberal, said that information as to conditions in Abyssinia was naturally difficult to obtain, but the movement of revolt against the Italians appeared to be making progress.

Asked what help Britain was giving the Emperor and his people, Mr. Butler said that "It was the policy of His Majesty's Government to extend to Emperor Haile Selassie, as well as to all elements within Abyssinia willing to bear arms against the enemy, all possible assistance in their fight for freedom." This brought cheers from the left-wing members of the House.

P. Noel-Baker, Labor, then asked the Under Secretary whether the Abyssinian National Anthem would be played over the B.B.C., as the National Anthems of Norway, Holland, Belgium, Poland, France and Greece.

Mr. Butler replied that this matter had been brought to the attention of Lord Halifax, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, but at present Lord Halifax thought that the list of National Anthems played over the wireless could not be added to at present.

This reply made a bad impression among supporters of Abyssinia in the House and notice was given that the matter will again be raised in Parliament.

FIRST NEGRO RAF FLIER IS NIGERIAN

FEB 2 1941

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad.—(By Nancy Cunard for ANP)—It is a Nigerian, from Britain's West African colony, who is the first African to be accepted for training as a pilot in the British Royal Air Force. His name is Babatunde O. Alakija, C.B.E., a nephew of the Alake of Abeokuta. He is already with his unit and wrote that he liked it. Was given a fine send-off from the famous Aggrey house in London, to which came many retired Nigerian government officials, including Lt. Colonel Cole, Major Hans Vischer, Lady Guggisberg, and Lady Graeme Thompson.

Mr. Alakija was for many years public school's high jump champion and all-around athlete. He is a relation of Oluwole Alakija whom I knew in London, and who contributed a fine essay on music to my anthology, "Negro" in 1933. This young man was then a student at Oxford; took his degree at law, married an English wife and went back to his native country, Nigeria with her.

Here the ever six foot son of My Marryshow famous Grenada newspaperman and race leader, is on the British Air force in training for pilot's certificate. I have talked with him twice, and a more pleasant young man of color it would be difficult to meet. There are young men of color in training too at Piarco Air school. And five colored Trinidadians I met on the eve of their journey to England to enter the air force there.

FRENCH CONGO NATIVES JAIL NAZI CHIEF

Black French Political Prisoners Set Free By Coup D'Etat

FEB 8 1941

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo—(ANP)—Native officers of the French Congo accomplished a coup d'etat when they arrested the governor-general and administrator of the colony who made known their plans to surrender their forces to the Nazi-controlled government in Vichy.

Following the example of Felix Ebou, black governor of the Chad province, natives of the French Congo revolted and joined up with Gen. de Gaulle, the leader of the Free French armed forces. When Gen. Husson, governor-general of French Equatorial Africa, expressed his official loyalty to the men of Vichy, a group of native officers promptly arrested him along with his administrator. Both men were taken across the border into the Belgian Congo as prisoners.

Other officers and native troops occupied all the official buildings and raised the flag of Free France, and the officers who had been earlier put in prison were set free as well as all native political leaders.

The revolt was a military one backed by the support of the native population. Col. de Larminat, leader of the revolt, has appealed to other colonies to join the revolt. Since then the Cameroons and Gabbon have joined.

IF HITLER WINS!

Here Is What Negroes Can Expect

MAR 8 1941

Hitler and the Nazis are now busy operating a "Hate School" against Negroes throughout the world. Courses in the "Hate School" are formally organized and are taught regularly to clases of German soldiers and civilians. Major Nazi theories taught in these courses are:

1. Negroes belong to an inferior race whose place must be fixed by the white "master race."

2. The free choice of trades and professions by Negroes leads to social assimilation. The occupations of the black colonial peoples and their function in the labor process of the "new order" will therefore be entirely determined by the Germans.

3. Intermarriage between whites and blacks or half-breeds and whites is forbidden. According to the Nuremburg racial law, sexual intercourse between members of the two races is subject to sanctions including the death penalty.

4. Persons belonging to a race other than the white Aryan race will have no active or passive electoral rights in the German colonial empire.

5. Negroes are forbidden access to railways, street-cars, restaurants, motion pictures, and all public establishments. Special conveyances and public establishments will be created for them in both Germany and in occupied territories.

6. Members of inferior races are not allowed to join the National Socialist Party or its subsidiary organizations. Nor can they serve in the army. They must, however, serve in labor battalions.

ABYSSINIA

PROFESSOR H. S. JEVONS

News which has recently reached London, that the Italian authorities are evacuating sick women and children by air from Asmara to Addis Ababa, is interesting in view of the fears which have been expressed in your columns and in Parliament for the safety of the Italian women and children in Abyssinia.

Fortunately there is good reason to believe they are in no danger; for it is a long-established custom of the country that women and children must not be deliberately killed in warfare. The only possible source of danger lies in some of the tribal levies who have deserted from the Italian flag and at some previous time have been ordered or incited to murder men, women, and children indiscriminately. The true Ethiopians are a civilized and Christian people, and all Europeans who have lived among them speak highly of their conduct.

In a Proclamation issued on July 24, 1940, from Khartoum the Emperor Haile Selassie exhorted his warriors and people to treat with consideration Italians who might give themselves up and not to retaliate for the cruelties inflicted on their countrymen. The Emperor said nothing in this Proclamation about sparing women and children, probably because he knew it would be an insult to his people to think that they needed any such exhortation.

Here's One To Bee-lieve or Not On Ethiops

LONDON — (ANP) — A secret weapon used by the Ethiopians to take back their land from the Italians was described last week by Sylvia Pankhurst, noted feminist and liberal, as bees.

Speaking at a meeting celebrating the return of Emperor Haile Selassie to the Ethiopian throne, she said that the native patriots, in the recent re-conquest of the country, had loosed swarms of bees on Italian camps. While the Italians were swatting and fleeing, she said, the Ethiopians would dash in, seize the enemy weapons and turn them on their former owners.

SEGREGATION IN BRITAIN STOPPED IN TIME OF WAR

Negroes And Whites Working Side by Side, Says Report

LONDON, May 15 (ANP)—British government policy is to accept the services of colored peoples in aiding the war effort, according to Iver Cummings, native of Sierra Leone, Africa, who is acting as liaison officer between the British Colonial office and the ministry of labor on behalf of a group of colored technicians who have arrived here from Jamaica, B. W. I., to take part in Great Britain's war program.

"All colored people are now freely accepted among their fellow-workers in the war effort," according to Mr. Cummings, who is also warden of the Aggrey House club here for students of African descent and who formerly acted as advisor to colored students in Great Britain.

"The government's policy is not one of segregation," he adds. "The views of those who favor segregation are only a personal expression and do not reflect the views of the government or of the people as a whole. The acceptance and treatment of my people everywhere in the services and in the factories proves this."

The club members of Aggrey house include A. R. P. workers, senior wardens, auxiliary fire service members and ambulance drivers—in fact, all branches of the civil defense are represented. All the services are open to members of the colored races, any one of whom can receive an officer's commission if he is competent to fulfill the requirements.

At present there are several colored officers—two in the infantry, one in the Royal Army Medical corps and one in the Royal Dental corps. Dabatunde Alkila who is training with the Royal Air Force is a Nigerian of noble birth. He will probably become an officer of one of the West African air crews. There are also three doctors, one dentist and several nurses of African descent working in England.

When the Jamaican technicians arrived in response to British Labor Minister Ernest Bevin's call for volunteers, the welfare officer of that area met them and took them to a special luncheon at which the local provost made a speech of welcome. The senior baillie for Scotland and Major Mackintosh, who is Mr. Bevin's deputy in Scotland, also entertained them.

Each technician was employed immediately, and from the outset enjoyed the status of a trades unionist. In the factories, where many of these colored workers have joined special units of the home guard and air raid precautions, they toil side by side with Britons in whose homes they receive hospitality during leisure hours.

Stimson Denies Report U. S. Plans to Occupy Liberia

WASHINGTON—(By Wire) Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson flatly denied to the New York Amsterdam Star-News Wednesday afternoon that the United States had secretly moved to occupy the Republic of Liberia on the West Coast of Africa in an attempt to outflank Germany's ambitions to seize Dakar in French West Africa, and the Portuguese Cape Verde Islands. The Secretary of War stated:

"War Department denies report of planned occupation of Liberia."

Signed: Secretary of War.

(The Liberian Consul General, Walter F. Walker, in New York City, told the Amsterdam Star-News that he had received no information either from Washington or Monrovia, the capital of Liberia, to the effect that the United States intended occupation of the Republic.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In a move similar to that which effected the occupation of Iceland by United States troops last week, the Roosevelt Administration is said in high official circles to be planning another move that will outflank a possible Nazi occupation of Dakar, Vichy-controlled West African port, and the Cape Verde Islands, by the occupation of naval and aerial bases along the 350-mile coastline of the Liberian Republic.

Although no details of the plan have been disclosed by the Administration, it doubted that the United States would land more than a "protective force" in Liberia with the full agreement and consent of the Liberian Government.

The Negro republic, one of two remaining independent states in the African Continent, is directly opposite Natal, Brazil, and is closer to South America than Dakar or the Portugese owned Cape Verde Islands. The friendly occupation of Liberia and the possession of bastions of defense on the African Continent not far distant from Dakar, it is said, would tend to check Nazi ambitions in the direction of the New World by way of the African coast.

Liberia was established as a colony for freedom by American missionary societies, and was recognized as an independent republic in 1847.

BACK TO AFRICA

The American occupation of Iceland within the German blockade zone and the rumored establishment of American bases in Northern Ireland puts the United States squarely into a shooting war.

The shooting has not started at this writing but it seems inevitable.

This development portends even more extensive action in other strategic sectors, especially since the Administration is now pressing for the right to send American soldiers abroad and to amend the Selective Service Act to keep drafted men in the Army beyond the legal period of one year.

An ominous note in the President's recent "fireside chat" was the reference to the Azores, the Cape Verde Islands and Dakar, which have been considered by all geographers to be in the African zone.

That there is fear of an American attempt to occupy these points or adjacent ones is evidenced by the frantic efforts of the Portuguese and French governments to strenghthen their fortifications.

Since a large part of the fighting forces in Africa already consist of colored troops, we might venture a guess that if and when the Administration's bills are passed, colored American soldiers will be among the first to be sent to fight in Africa.

The Back-to-Africa advocates never thought that this would be the way in which American Negroes would go back to Africa, but time brings about curious and far-reaching changes.

If one accepts the full premise of western hemisphere defense and all-out war against the Axis Powers, American occupation of African strategic points is not only inevitable but necessary.

Ethiopia Leader Here Hopes for Soviet-British Victory

The Negro people, as represented by the Ethiopian World Federation, hope the Soviet Union will defeat fascist Germany in the present war, for on that outcome depends the future of Ethiopia, Wilford E. Lewin, President of Local 1 of the Federation, declared in his office at 2667 Eighth Ave., yesterday.

"I believe that if Germany should conquer Russia, England's chance to survive would be almost nil, and if England is conquered, Ethiopia will be lost," Mr. Lewin said. "The Ethiopian World Federation, is entirely behind President Roosevelt, and if the President of the United States is in favor of supporting Russia to conquer Hitler and fascism, then our organiation is also in favor of it."

In preparation for its third annual convention, beginning tomorrow at 2667 Eighth Ave., the Ethiopian World Federation has issued a "Call to the Black People of America" and an invitation to other Negro organizations to participate in an "Aid Ethiopia Parade" through Harlem next Sunday afternoon.

TEXT OF CALL

The Call reads in part as follows:

"The brutal rape of Ethiopia, recently avenged in part by the joint armies of Britain and Haile Selassie, was and is a terrible sign of things that still may come to the black peoples of the world. The Nazi-fascist beasts which tore at the living flesh of Ethiopia are bent upon spreading their barbarous creed and regime with force of arms. Already they have subjugated 14 European nations. Their hordes hover now like vultures on the African continent.

"Upon the outcome of the present European conflict — involving the Soviet people, of Russia, in Europe and Asia, and their ally, Britain— upon the outcome of this two-front battle, spread over two continents, depends the freedom of the Ethiopian and African peoples.

"Every black man who hopes and plans and fights for manhood rights —in whatever country or clime — cannot help but bestir himself. Every man, woman and child must seize this historic opportunity to march forward unitedly, miiltantly, aided by the most powerful allies history has ever alloted us."

The Call points out that the United States has a "sacred duty" to fulfill in getting necessary material aid to "Ethiopia and her allies," and declares, "We must not fail them!"

Continuing, the Call says:

"With this as a keynote on July 23, the Ethiopian World Federation opens its Third Annual Convention. . . . All colored organizations are asked to elect delegates. To implement this keynote, the convention culminates in a gigantic street parade in which ALL peoples fighting fascist aggression are invited to participate.

"Black Peoples of the World! Unite in the defense of Ethiopia and for the destruction of fascism."

PARADE SLOGANS

The following slogans will be carried in Sunday's parade:

"Freedom and independence for Ethiopia!"

"All-out Aid to Ethiopia, Britain, the Soviet Union and China!"

"Black Men of the World, Unite in the fight to destroy Nazi-Fascist Slavery."

"Put Black Men to Work in Defense Industries—No Discrimination."

"Place Black Men in All Branches of the Armed Forces!"

"Pass the Anti-Poll Tax and the Anti-Lynch Bills."

"Fight Hitlerism at Home as Well as Abroad."

Delegates are expected from Central and South America and from the West Indies. Africa will be represented by people of that country resident in the United States.

J. Finley Wilson is international president of the Ethiopian World Federation. International First Vice-President is the Rev. William Lloyd Imes.

Nazis' Efforts To Dominate Republic Told

Nation Located Just Below Dakar May Get Air Bases

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Contrary to President Roosevelt's declaration that he had no intention of sending any more American armed forces overseas at this time, reports circulating last week gave evidence that the United States is seriously considering buiding an American naval and military base at Liberia and on the west coast of Africa.

The information that Liberia is under consideration came from an administration conference report. Administration officials refuse to discuss the matter but indications are that Liberia has been considered as an alternative to French Dakar, seizure of which has been deemed too risky.

JUST BELOW DAKAR

Liberia is considered of vital importance now because of its strategic position, just below Dakar and opposite the Brazil coast.

In his May 27 fireside chat the President intimated that he would seize the Portuguese Azores, Cape Verde Islands and Dakar in order to forestall occupation by the Nazis if Hitler should invade the Iberian peninsula (Spain and Portugal). Occupancy of such outposts by the Nazis, the President said, would be a threat to the safety of the United States.

Liberia, founded in 1820 under auspices of American societies interested in establishing a colony of freed American slaves, was granted independence in 1847, and is still an American protectorate. Because of close relations with the United States, Liberia is said to be favorable to the building of military posts.

SENTIMENT ANTI-NIZI

Dr. John H. Furbay, former acting president of the College of West Africa, Monrovia, in an interview recently, declared that sentiment in Liberia is strongly anti-Nazi. Fear rides the Liberians that if Germany should get their continent under her thumb, they would soon be in chains, the educator said.

Several months ago Dr. Furbay continued, revolution broke out in Liberia when some educated natives with a German-educated leader tried to assassinate the president and seize the reins of government. The USS Omaha, sent from European waters, arrived just in time to support the government. The revolutionists were arrested and sent to the first concentration camp ever established in Liberia.

NAZI AGENTS IN COUNTRY

Further discussing the recent revolution attempt, Dr. Furbay, who has kept in close touch with friends and conditions in Liberia since he left there two years ago, declared that most outsiders had no notion of the cause of the flare-up. Explaining the situation which exists, he said:

"Twenty-five thousand American Negroes, ex-slaves, rule two million natives. Conflict between the two uneven groups is always smouldering. Lately it has been fanned by Nazi agents who have been into every corner of the republic as traders, anthropologists and in other forms of work."

Well-aware of German race theories, the natives feel alarmed at the threat of Nazism getting a foothold anywhere near them as it would mean slavery for all, Dr. Furbay contends.

LIBERIA MORE FAVORABLE

Army and navy experts are declared to be of the opinion that it would take not only a strong naval force but no fewer than 30,000 men to reduce and occupy Dakar. In the case of Liberia the undertaking would be merely that of constructing a base, once the arrangements were made.

Another suggested site of an American naval and air base in Africa is Freetown in British Sierra Leone.

DARKEST AFRICA HELPS TO FIGHT WAR FOR BRITAIN

Belgian Congo Sends Troops to Kenya.

[This is the seventh of a series of stories on Capt. Corpening's travels to the British front in Eritrea.]

MAR 1 5 1941

BY CAPT. M. M. CORPENING.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Reprinted from yesterday's late editions.]

ELIZABETHVILLE, Belgian Congo [By Mail].—The war has struck into the heart of "darkest Africa," it was found on arrival here. Near Elizabethville is a concentration camp where some 200 German and Italian agitators have been interned.

The colony also is doing its bit to help Great Britain. It is said that at least seven battalions of troops have departed for the Kenya frontier. Many more are in training.

While Belgian spokesmen maintain that Belgium is being reborn here and that the colony is unanimously behind Britain in the war, the British are not fully convinced of this. However, they admit the Congo is pro-English and is entering into the scheme of things on Britain's side.

U. S. Equipment in Use.

Some irony appears in the setup because of England's stipulation in the Treaty of Versailles prohibiting the Congo from having any large amount of military equipment. As a result, troops are rounding into form faster than arms and ammunition are arriving. However, it is said that American equipment is beginning to appear. The troops are all native, with Belgian officers. Those observed here so far are fine looking soldiers.

I discovered a war sidelight here yesterday. When the French capitulated last June, six or seven Belgian planes were confiscated in France and Algiers. Several days later Madagascar officials telegraphed Belgian Congo authorities asking for gas and landing privileges for two French planes which had been ordered home from the French island. Permission was granted and when the planes arrived they proved to be new Lockheeds [made in America] which were worth more than all the Belgian planes confiscated. The Lockheeds now are being flown with the army in Kenya.

MAR 1 5 1941

Congo Is Big Colony.

The Belgian Congo is a colony about 902,000 square miles, approximately 100 times the size of the mother country, has a native population of over 10,000,000 and a white contingent of 25,000, most of whom are Belgians. The colony's wealth is mostly in minerals. It possesses great quantities of copper, gold, diamonds, tin, coal, radium, and oil. There are many copper mines. It is said the copper deposits are the richest in the world.

MAR 1 5 1941

Altho located in so-called "darkest Africa," the territory is far more civilized and developed than most outsiders realize. There are 3,051 miles of railroads, 43,932 miles of roads, 6,279 miles of navigable waterways on which 300 steamers operate, and a lattice-work of government subsidized air lines covering all sections of the colony.

The climate is comfortable the whole year outside the equatorial zone, due to the elevation of the land. In the northern part, at the equator, however, the terrain is lower and much warmer. Malaria and sleeping sickness are the chief health offenders, but the government is making every effort to eradicate them.

MAR 1 5 1941

Lags in Agriculture.

Agriculture is undeveloped, but some gains are being made. Corn, cotton, and fruit are the principal products, with increasing herds of cattle being raised on the unlimited pasture lands, especially in the upland country, which is free of the treaded tsetse fly.

Hitler Makes Britons Forget Old Color Bar

SAVANNAH JOURNAL SAVANNAH, GA

MAR 22 1941

NEW YORK—(SNS)— Fear of Hitler has forced the British to drop the rigid color bar and to enlist Negroes from Africa, and the West Indies, and Indians from India, in the exclusive Royal Air Force according to an article by George Padmore in the March issue of The CRISIS magazine.

Not only has the fear of the Germans broken down the color line in the RAF., but it has caused the heads of British religious bodies, including the Archbishop of Canterbury, to issue a statement to the press urging the wiping out of the color line in all phases of British life.

The letter urges the abolition of color barriers in the colonies: the elimination of discrimination in the hotels and hospitals and the complete wiping out the color line in employment.

The letter further urges the rather astounding step that Negroes be extended "the hospitality of English homes in this country."

clothes together.. you are going to have the time of your life.

Mr. Padmore asserts that the total collapse of France was followed by a serious consideration by the British of the effect of their color discrimination. He declares that the imminent danger of German invasion has forced the British to abandon the color line and to welcome all defenders, regardless of race or color.

The Spirit Of Hitler

Adolph Hitler, the most despicable and hated man in all the world, has become the symbol of ruthless desecration and destruction, both of property and humanity, the manifestation of the spirit of all that is utterly devoid of decency and respect for the rights and happiness of others.

But the strange thing of all is that the spirit of Hitler is far more prevalent in the world than most of us are willing to admit. The ruthless and insufferable economic system that in many other parts of the world has driven so much humanity into a miserable slavery, only slightly removed from death and hell, must be destroyed as much for individuals in all nations as for the nations themselves, whose freedom and liberty have been taken away.

Greed and selfishness which with their slimy smugness have enabled a few people in the world to settle their economic problem seem in so many instances to have left its victims utterly devoid of any sympathy for those who have had the misfortune to be born poor, and who in an effort to serve their fellowmen have chosen to remain poor, rather than give themselves over to the making of money.

The insistence by students of world affairs that the economic structure of the world must be basically changed is a voice that will not be stilled. Wars and strife between the nations of the world are only the epidemic proportions of the germ-laden social order, which lies untouched and unremoved, waiting for some incident to spread the disease and horror over the face of the world.

We talk glibly about the American Way of Life, as if there was something almost divine in what in so many instances is sheer, hollow mockery. But we say little about the Christ Way of Life, the great Founder of which said, when told by some ambitious follower that he would go with him wherever He went: "the foxes have holes and the birds have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

AFTER WAR

WRITER SUBMITS SIX-POINT POST-WAR PROGRAM FOR RACE.

BY MARJORIE MCKENZIE

MAR 22 1941

SIGNIFICANT AMONG the historic commitments of his first call to arms, were these tempting promises in President Roosevelt's address of March 15th at the White House Correspondents' annual dinner.

"There will be no divisions of party or section or race or nationality or religion. There is not one among us who does not have a stake in the outcome of the effort in which we are engaged."

Miss McKenzie

There were those among us who, until recently, harbored doubts that we as a race have a stake in what Thomas Mann has called the "Coming Victory of Democracy." Their apprehensions were skillfully dissipated by Hans Habe's expose of the Nazi Plan for Negroes in the March 1st issue of The Nation. If we are, therefore, now agreed that we may find profit in the onward rush of the new American imperialism, we ought to define our interests.

WHAT IS OUR STAKE?

THE President's speech was expressed in ultimates. He spoke of the distant day when people throughout the world shall have achieved the four freedoms: freedom of speech and expression, freedom of every person to worship God in his own way, freedom from want, freedom from fear. The President believes that all humanity is to attain these ideals through democratic processes. The United States is to become the standard-bearer of the crusade. What, then, is our stake in the new world beauty? What ought we demand from the "arsenal of democracy"? Destiny dictates that America become the proving ground of the pattern of universal liberation. What do the objective circumstances of history expect of this country here and now as an humble beginning of our dream of total freedom? MAR 22 1941

Now is the time for Negro leaders to sit in solemn council and prepare for America a post-war memorandum on what constitutes the stake of twelve million enslaved Negro citizens in the successful outcome of "the effort in which we are now engaged." Now is the time for Negro leadership to draft a blueprint for courageous and collective action. Nazi Germany has a six-point program in its plan for colonial Negroes. We submit that post-war America, as the victorious defender of democracy, should adopt a six-point program for American Negroes.

AMERICA'S PLAN

AMERICA must understand that her victory will be pyrrhic unless such a plan includes:

(1) Economic Freedom—A release from the subtle slavery of a vicious and consistent denial of the fundamental right to acquire skills and to use them to earn a living. Only when Negroes can join labor unions and pay reasonable fees is the right to work universal. MAR 22 1941

(2) Political Freedom—A recognition of the absolute worth of every citizen to insure the successful functioning of the democratic process. This involves such immediate safeguards as the passage of appropriate legislation, including an anti-poll tax bill and a Federal anti-lynching bill. It means proportionate representation in all of the areas of government: Negroes in the Federal and State judiciary, in the President's cabinet, as well as integration into the State and Federal Civil Service.

(3) Religious Freedom—A recollection of the stern and courageous religions that led to the colonization of America. There is no freedom of worship, no Christianity, as long as there exist, in America a white church and a black church.

(4) Freedom of Land Tenure—A realization that the ghetto is a constant threat to those outside its boundaries. The restrictive covenant does not protect the aristocracy, but results in a stratification of society that ends in economic despair for all. Post-war America must be able to say to her Negro citizens, "Every place that the sole of thy foot shall tread upon, that have I given thee."

(5) Freedom in Education—A reaffirmance of the principles of democracy in every classroom in America. There cannot co-exist two equal educational systems when one is for white and the other for black students. A nation can have no supremacy in art, science or athletics when it handicaps itself by eliminating ten per cent of its citizens from contribution and competition. MAR 22 1941

(6) Freedom to Enjoy Civil Rights—A re-application of the fundamental law to extend and guarantee civil rights to all the people. And we shall find that none of these freedoms has substance until the conscience of every American is shocked into a realization that there will be peace and security only if we share our institutions together.

Negroes In New German Order

NEW YORK CITY —(NNS)—For the last few weeks the "Voelkische Beobachter," the official German weekly owned by Hitler has maintained that the "misfortunes befalling" the "Aryan" nations were not caused by the Jews alone—both Jews and Negroes are guilty.

Hans Habe, a French officer who fought side by side with colonial regiments in the Sedan campaign spent time in a concentration camp in Germany, and escaped to this country, reports these facts in an article in the "Nation" magazine. According to him, the Germans are now adopting a fierce anti-Negro policy and such a policy has inspired the following principles: MAR 29 1941

Called Inferior Race

The colored people are an inferior race whose place must be fixed by the white "master race" (German).

The free choice of trades and professions by the Negroes leads to social assimilation, which in turn produces racial assilimation. The occupations of the black colonial peoples and their function in the labor process of the "new order" will therefore be entirely determined by the Germans.

Intermarriage Taboo

Intermarriage between whites and blacks or half-breeds and whites is forbidden. According to the Nuremberg racial laws, sexual intercouse between members of the two races is subject to sanctions including the death penalty.

Persons belonging to a race other than the white Aryan race will have no active or passive electorial rights in the German colonial empre.

Negroes are forbidden access to railways, street cars, restaurants, motion pictures, and all public establishments. Special conveyances and public establishments will be created for them both in Germany and in occupied territories.

Members of inferior races are not allowed to join the National Socialist Party or its subsidiary organizations. Nor can they serve in the army. They must, however, serve in labor battalions. MAR 29 1941

It is easy to imagine the fate of the colored people in a German colonial empire, if the general staff of the German army is already disseminating these six commandments Equal rights for Negroes are always described as a "democratic cancer." It goes without saying that the German lecturers always consider the Negroes of "all continents" as belonging to the same race.

Difference In Jew and Negro Policy

There is one essential difference between Hitler's Negro policy and his Jewish policy. Whereas he makes no attempts to "wn over" the Jews, whom he drives out of Germany or tortures in Germany, with regard to the Negroes he pursues a double objective: he wants both to enslave them and to win them over.

The weaknesses of this policy are evident at once. Ideologically, Hitler is forced to replace his clear-cut distinction between the white Aryans and all other races by a whole hierarchy of races. This creates complications for his propaganda. How can the Germans be convinced that the Jewish race is white but inferior, the Negro race inferior but colored, and the yellow race colroed but equal? MAR 29 1941

Similarily, the attempt to reduce the Negroes to slavery is utterly incompatible with the attempt to win their good will. Hitler's hopes in this respect are based on an oversimplified psychology. He thinks that the Negroes will be grateful for not being made to serve in the German army as they did in the French army where they had to take eighteen months of regular military training and in addition were always used for the most dangerous wartime duties. But these Negroes, it is reported, distrust Hitler's pacifism and they prefer military training to forced labor without wages; which is another way of saying they prefer freedom to slavery.

CANNON FODDER

(Chicago Daily Tribune)

..Gen. Sir Claude Auchinleck, the new commander in chief of the British army in the middle east says that American man power will be needed if the war is to be won "properly."

"I've always thought the war must be won in Europe," he told correspondents in Cairo, "in Germany, on Germany's own soil. Therefore I see as much need for American man power in this war as in the last." Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, whom Gen. Sir Claude succeeded, was of the same oppinion. Neither has fought on Germany's own soil. No British land force has been close to it and none has been on it as the war rounds out its second year. American man power is to break into it and storm Berlin.

The British generals talk of American man power and mean cannon fodder. Man power is a gentler word. The British are waiting until the youth of this country, millions of young men, have been conscripted into military service, and trained or untrained, can be carried across seas to be thrown in masses against the German war machine to be blown to bits, to fight their way into Berlin and revenge the defeats in Norway, Flanders, Greece, Crete, and Libya.

The British people have been taught to expect this. The British generals demand it. They are presenting an overdue note signed by the cannon fodder traffickers of this country. It is natural for British generals who have fought their wars with other peoples' soldiers to have these ideas and make such requisitions. It is not so natural that American society women who collect bundles for Britain should have the same feeling regarding the youth of their country. It is not so natural for war committees, the Aid of the Allies, the Fight for Freedom, the Friends of China, and the Union Now, to echo the demands of the British generals.

But all these people are willing, even anxious, to immolate the young men of America on the battlefields of the whole world and to do it now.

HITLER ORGAN EXPLAINS WHY NAZIS SEEK AFRICAN COLONIES

Must Enslave Native Africans to Insure Living for German Workers—DeGaulle Plans New Future for Free French Colonies.

JAN 4 - 1941

LONDON, Eng., Jan. 2.—(Censored)—"We need colonies to assure a living for the millions of German workers, not as supplementary territory where the worker might live," declares the Schwarze Korps, the organ of Hitler's Black Guards.

The article goes on to say: "The work done in the colonies must aim at attaining the greatest advantages for the Fatherland with the least posible expenditure in man-power. No German farmer, craftsman or colonist will be sent to the colonies...only German administrators who will act as organizers of agriculture, industry, mining, transport, forestry and commerce, serving as the Fatherland's delegates and symbolizing the Reich sovereignty. It must be emphasized that the purpose of the colonies will be to supply the Reich with cheap raw materials. In Africa only natives can produce cheaply," the article concludes.

While the Nazis are planning how to exploit Africa should victory be theirs, General De Gaulle, leader of the "Free French" forces, is back in London, where he is discussing the future of the French Colonial Empire, especially those colonies which now support the General against Vichy.

It is understood that General De Gaulle intends to appoint M. Pierre Olivier Lapie as Governor of Chad in place of the West Indian Negro, M. Felix Eboue, who has joined the War Cabinet of "Free France."

M. Lapie is a former Republican Socialist M.P., aged 39. He is the author of a study of Cromwell, and, until the French collapse, was a liasion officer with the B.E.F., in Flanders.

General Legentilhomme, former Governor of French Somaliland, is expected to take over command of the "Free French" forces in Britain.

Haile Selassie Is in Ethiopia Leading Revolt

JAN 24 1941

Celebrated Return by Hoisting Flag of House of Judah.

CAIRO, Friday, Jan. 24.—(UP) Haile Selassie, ruler of Ethiopia who was ousted by the Italian conquest, entered his country January 15 and is leading a revolt against the Italians with British co-operation, it was announced officially early today.

As soon as Haile Selassie crossed the frontier from the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, he celebrated his return to the kingdom of the King of Kings by hoisting the red, green and gold flag of the House of Judah.

(In London last Tuesday Prime Minister Winston Churchill hinted that great events were in the making in east Africa, where British forces are advancing both from the west and south against Italian East Africa (Ethiopia and Eritrea). Haile Selassie has been in Africa for several months.)

SELASSIE CALLS MEN TO REGAIN ETHIOPIA

Tribesmen Attack Conquerers As British Continue Drive On Italy's Colonies

By RICHARD D. M'MILLAN
United Press Staff Writer

CAIRO, Jan. 24.—British Empire forces and wild Ethiopian tribesmen led by Haile Selassie Friday night were reported hurling back the Italians deep inside Ethiopia in a huge "nut-cracker" offensive Friday.

Aided by British bombing planes, the British and Ethiopian forces smashed at Benito Mussolini's Ethopian defenses from within and without while 2000 miles northward, Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's Army of the Nile blasted a path toward Italy's key Libyan base of Benghazi.

JAN 25 1941

Allied By Negus

Rising in revolt against the Italian conquerors, the Ethiopian rebels were exhorted by the bearded Negus to drive on until their capital of Addis Ababa is taken.

The Ethiopians, well supplied with British weapons, were said to have battled and defeated Italian forces southeast of Lake Tana about 75 miles deep in Northern Ethiopia from the Gallabat area of the Sudan.

On Ethiopia's southern frontier British forces from Kenya drove into Ethiopia at several points.

Two northern prongs of the giant pincers bit deeper into Ethiopia and Italian Eritrea, it was said, one toward the railroad terminal of Agordat in Eritrea and the other deep into the northern mountains of Ethiopia.

The reported large-scale rising of the Ethiopian tribesmen coincided with these trip-hammer blows against Premier Benito Mussolini's African empire:

A continued British advance westward from captured Tobruk and reports that Empire forces have seized control of a vital road junction 50 miles inland from the Italian base of Derna on the Mediterranean Coast, opening the way for an advance on Benghazi, 240 miles west of Tobruk and Italy's last Libyan stronghold before Tripoli.

Pressure by British tank and armored units against the defenses of Derna, accompanied by heavy British air blows against Derna, Maraua an Appollonia at the tip of Eastern Libya.

Reports that British forces have occupied the Italian seaplane base of Bomba, 48 miles west Tobruk, as well as the nearby airdromes of Tmimi and Gazala.

Italian Fall Back

A deeper British invasion of Italian Eritrea from the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and reports that Italian forces have evacuated Keru and Aicota, 50 miles inside Ethiopia near the Sudanese-Eritrean borders, and are retreating westward.

A British Admiralty statement that the 1475-ton submarine Parthian has sunk a heavily laden Italian supply ship of about 7000 tons between Italy and the North African Coast.

NEGROES REFUSE TO FIRE

LONDON, Jan. 2.—(Censored)—British offensive action against the Italian forces along the Sudan-Abyssinian border, is intensifying.

Latest official reports from this area tell of British forces advancing from Gallabat which have driven the Italians out of Metemma, about two miles within Abyssinia.

"As a result of continued aggressive action by our patrols and artillery, Metemma has now to all intents and purposes been evacuated by the Italians, whose patrols venture into the area from the surrounding heights only at night," says a communique from G. H. Q. at Nairobi, capital of Kenya.

JAN 4 - 1941

But what is worrying the Italian high command even more than the loss of an important frontier post, is the rebellious attitude of the Askaris, Italian native soldiers.

BLACKS REFUSE TO FIRE ON BLACKS

Hundreds of Askaris have been shot by the Fascists for refusing to fire upon Abyssinians who attempted to seize the radio station at Harrar.

For ten hours the station was in the hands of Abyssinians and white Italian troops had to shell the place with heavy artillery after the Askaris refused to make an attack.

Italian bombing planes were rushed from former British Somaliland to bomb the revolting tribesmen around Harrar. The rebellious Askaris were disarmed, hundreds of privates shot and non-commissioned officers sent prisoners to Addis Ababa.

PLANS FOR BIG CAMPAIGN

Abyssinians in London tell of big moves that are being prepared by the Emperor.

With the Emperor is his nephew, Ras Chamebru, who commanded an army corps in the war against the Blackshirts and is rated as one of the best guerilla leaders in Africa.

Churchill Explains

JAN 5 1941

IN in speech to the Italian people last week England's Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, told them that what had caused the break in the good relations previously existing between the two countries which now find themselves in reciprocal acts designed for each others destruction was the voting of economic sanctions against Il Duce's country in the Italo-Ethiopian conflict of 1935. He told them how the little country of Ethiopia had come to the League of Nations begging to be admitted. He informed them that England thought she had not reached that point in civilization to warrant her admission but that Mussolini differed. He informed the Italian people that in voting economic sanctions against their country England was simply carrying out the sacred obligations consistent with the solemn pledges into which each nation had entered.

What Churchill did not tell the Italian people was that England did not give the Ethiopians the help they deserved and were promised. He did not tell them that if England had done what was expected of her the outcome of that war would have been very, very different and the outcome of the subsequent aggressions of dictatorial nations would read different in the light of present day events.

From the day that Haile Selassie stood before the representatives of the nations of the world and admonished them that if they failed to come to his rescue in his darkest hour to prevent the imperialism of Italy all smaller nations would suffer a common fate with that of his country, civilization has been retrogressing. Selassie was a prophet who has lived to see the outcome of his prophecy. He saw more than his prophecy come to pass. He has witnessed the defeat of Poland. He saw Czechoslovakia fold up her colors, Norway stoop to the conqueror, France mourn the loss of her independence, Belgium surrender, Holland lose her soverignty and other countries give up to totalitarian aggression.

The moral that future generations may obtain from the Ethiopian conflict is that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. Nations which lacked the strength of their convictions gave only lip service to their pledges. They had no idea of enforcing them in favor of a black kingdom. Now most of those remaining nations are facing the same fate that befell Selassie's kingdom.

White America might observe a moral from the fate of Ethiopia. For if it will deny to its largest minority—the Negro race—its rights, soon the rights of other races and groups, too, will be denied.

British For Democracy? Well They're Also For Jim Crow Bomb Shelters!

JAN 18 1941

LONDON — (NNS) — The actual status of the Negro under British domination, despite England's lip service to "democracy and the freedom of all people" in her present dire hour of need, was sharply brought out in a report on air raid shelters in London, just released.

Viscount Cranley, 27-year-old heir of the Earl of Onslow, who has made a tour of 30 of London's public air raid shelters, in reporting his findings to the London Sunday Times, came out flatly for segregation, stating:

"Division of white and colored shelters should be of mutual benefit."

JAN 18 1941

Thus, even while the rich blood of Negro troops is staining the sands of African deserts in "defense of the Empire," plans are underway to further discriminate against Negro civilians.

THE NEGRO AND WAR

The Plaindealer
Kansas City, Kan.

FEB 7 - 1941

Step by step the European war is being brought closer to our shores. The closer the war gets to our shores the more vividly the unpreparedness of our nation stands out. There are many people in America who hold to the point that we have a just reason for staying out of the present European conflict. They offer as their argument that we have lost nothing in Europe but the life's blood of a former generation, and in almost a similar effort as the one in which the war is being fought today, to make the world safe for democracy.

The dictators of Europe have marched against the democracies of Europe and destroyed them because the democracies were weak morally and spiritually rather than in manpower and armaments. Today our nation is in the midst of one of the greatest peacetime preparedness programs ever launchd in world history. And we venture to say that when our nation has completed its preparedness program she will still be unprepared unless the stigma of racial prejudice is removed from our army, navy and air corps. Every citizen in America should have a right to die for his country if he must die in the branch of service of his choice free of hypocrisy, segregation and racial antagonism.

America can never be strong as an ardent enemy of the dictators and the Axis powers until America realizes that charity begins at home. It is impossible for America to spread democracy abroad when we fail to have a democracy at home. The idea of wiping out racial prejudice and discrimination from our defense program may sound like a myth but we firmly believe that if America is to be strong it must have the support and cooperation of all citizens regardless of race, color or creed. And we do not believe that such cooperation can come about when one group is allowed to trample on the heads of others because of a mere difference in the pigment of one's skin.

'DARKEST AFRICA' PRISON FOR 200 AXIS AGITATORS

Belgian Congo Aids Britain, Sends Seven Battalions to Kenya Frontier

By Captain M. M. Corpening
(The Times-Picayune Foreign Service)

Elizabethville, Belgian Congo, March 16.—The war has struck into the heart of "Darkest Africa," it was found on arrival here. Near Elizabethville is a concentration camp where some 200 German and Italian agitators have been interned.

MAR 17 1941

The colony also is doing its bit to help Great Britain. It is said that at least seven battalions of troops have departed for the Kenya frontier. Many more are in training.

While Belgian spokesmen maintain that Belgium is being reborn here and that the colony is unanimously behind Britain in the war, the British are not fully convinced of this. However, they admit the Congo is pro-English and is entering into the scheme of things on Britain's side.

Some irony appears in the setup because of England's stipulation in the treaty of Versailles prohibiting the Congo from having any large amount of military equipment. As a result, troops are rounding into form faster than arms and ammunition are arriving. However, it is said that American equipment is beginning to appear. The troops are all native, with Belgian officers. Those observed here so far are fine looking soldiers.

Sidelight of War

I discovered a war sidelight here. When the French capitulated last June, six or seven Belgian planes were confiscated in France and Algiers. Several days later Madagascar officials telegraphed Belgian Congo authorities asking for gas and landing privileges for two French planes which had been ordered home from the French island. Permission was granted and when the planes arrived they proved to be new Lockheeds (made in America) which were worth more than all the Belgian planes confiscated. The Lockheeds now are being flown with the army in Kenya.

The Belgian Congo is a colony about 902,000 square miles, approximately 100 times the size of the mother country, has a native population of over 10,000,000 and a white contingent of 25,000, most of whom are Belgians. The colony's wealth is mostly in minerals. It possesses great quantities of copper, gold, diamonds, tin, coal, radium and oil. There are many copper mines. It is said the copper deposits are the richest in the world.

'Darkest Africa' Civilized

Although located in so-called "Darkest Africa" the territory is far more civilized and developed than most outsiders realize. There are 3051 miles of railroads, 43,932 miles of roads, 6279 miles of navigable waterways on which 300 steamers operate, and a lattice work of government subsidized air lines covering all sections of the colony.

The climate is comfortable the whole year outside the Equatorial zone, due to the elevation of the land. In the northern part, at the Equator, however, the terrain is lower and much warmer. Malaria and sleeping sickness are the chief health offenders, but the government is making every effort to eradicate them.

Agriculture is undeveloped, but some gains are being made. Corn, cotton and fruit are the principal products, with increasing herds of cattle being raised on the unlimited pasture lands, especially in the upland country, which is free of the dreaded tsetse fly.

Ethiopians Attack Italy's Garrisons

JAN 10 1941

HAILE SELASSIE

JAN 10 1941

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Jan. 9.—British headquarters indicated tonight another war front may develop in Ethiopia, where natives are reported to have taken advantage of repeated R. A. F. raids to rise against Italian garrisons.

Since Italy declared war, it was stated unofficially, British bombers have attacked every place of importance, including the capital, Addis Ababa, in the one-time kingdom of Haile Selassie.

Wherever possible, the British raids have been followed by attacks of native tribesmen on the Fascist garrisons, the British say.

In some instances, as reported in today's R. A. F. communique, the Italians have been forced to flee. A garrison driven from the post of Guba is being pursued by tribesmen who are closing in, the communique said.

Ethiopians also have been harassing Italian lines of communication, official sources disclosed, causing considerable disruption in movement of supplies to garrisons in the empire.

Haile Selassie himself is in the African war theater, his exact whereabouts unknown. He flew to Africa in September to rally his army after the British announced recognition of his government as the lawful regime of Abyssinia.

A house in Khartum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, was placed at his disposal and soon after Ethiopian tribesmen crossed the border to swear allegiance to him anew.

Later he was reported to have been a target of an Italian air raid on Doro, a border mission post.

The bewhiskered Lion of Judah, assisted by British officers, has been training remnants of his former army in the modern tactics they so sorely lacked when they were conquered by Italy in 1936.

They also have been supplied with newer weapons, and some have mastered the operation of tanks and airplanes.

ITALIANS' POSITION IN ETHIOPIA SHAKY

Troops Holding Wild Tribes in Check Are Cut Off From Aid From Home Country

BRITISH KEEP UP PRESSURE

Blockade Holds Back Supplies While Revolt Is Encouraged to Force Use of Materials

JAN 13 1941

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 12—There is much speculation here as to the effect the British victories in the Libyan desert will have in other parts of the Near East.

While few specific details have come out of Egypt on what is going on in Ethiopia, there is some reason to believe the Italians are having trouble there. The wild Ethiopian tribes have always been restless under Italian rule. Ever since 1935 the Italians have kept their domination of Ethiopia almost entirely by force. Therefore, when Italy declared war one of the first moves the British made was to bring Emperor Haile Selassie out of obscurity and send him to Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, from where he is supposedly rallying his former subjects.

Furthermore, the British presumably are slipping guns and supplies across the Ethiopian border and doing everything they can to promote revolt among the people. That they have had some success seems probable, since a recent communiqué from Cairo describing the fall of Gubba in Ethiopia said that tribesmen pursued the fleeing Italians.

It is argued here that the British military successes must have had their effect in Ethiopia. If the Italians suffer further reverses in Libya, there is believed to be a good chance of further revolts in Ethiopia.

Although little is said here about the Italian strength in Ethiopia, it is obvious that the Italian forces there are not in a particularly good situation. They may, of course, have enough supplies to last them some time; but, with the Suez Canal closed to them and the British in command of the seas, it would appear that there is no hope of reinforcing the troops there or of replenishing supplies as they are used up.

Under the circumstances it would seem reasonable to guess that the British will continue to try to throttle Ethiopia by a blockade, at the same time encouraging the tribesmen to revolt and make the Italians there use up their supplies in suppressing internal disorder.

Chiefs Join Haile Selassie

KHARTOUM, Anglo - Egyptian Sudan, Jan. 12 (AP)—Haile Selassie, dethroned by his Italian conquerors five years ago, is receiving a constant stream of tribal revolutionary agents in this city, only 300 miles from the Ethiopian frontier.

These native tribesmen loyal to the ex-Emperor have been evading Italian border patrols to cross into the Sudan. Here they receive guns and ammunition furnished by the British and re-enter Ethiopia to carry on guerrilla war.

Guerrilla fighting has been reported especially heavy in Southern Ethiopia. There have been estimates that 200,000 Ethiopians were active throughout the country.

Haile Selassie is ready to enter Ethiopia to head the revolt the moment he and the British deem it opportune.

Haile Hopes Again

Of course you remember Haile Selassie and how utterly bereft he once seemed of his Ethiopian Empire. He, indeed, was a king without a kingdom and his outlook seemed pretty hopeless. But Italian reverses in Africa have changed all that.

JAN 15 1941

Selassie, according to a dispatch from Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, is quoted as saying "the time is not far distant" when he will lead an army of his countrymen against the Italians who dethroned him and seized his country. The tribal war drums are beating nightly, according to Selassie, and hundreds of his former soldiers are said to be rallying to his standard.

It is not only Italian reverses in Egypt and Libya that account for Selassie's renewed hope. The British are becoming increasingly active in the Ethiopian region itself. Reports have been received of the routing of an Italian force by a British patrol in the Metemma sector, east of Gallabat in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

This resurgence of hope among Haile Selassie and his Ethiopian fellowers will find its parallel in other subjugated areas of the earth as opportunities for effective resistance improve.

SELASSIE NAMED LIEUT. GENERAL IN ENGLISH ARMY

FEB 8 1941

By JAMES E. BOYACK

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—As predicted last month by The Courier, Ethiopia has become a major theatre of war with Ethiopian, East Indian, South African and British troops today allied in a blitzkrieg to blast Italians out of East Africa.

This week at a special session of the House of Commons in London, Ethiopia will be officially named an ally of Great Britain in the same manner as other governments in exile. The vital difference is the Ethiopian government is leading the battle for the freedom of its country, and is already in the thick of fighting. All other governments of conquered countries are in London.

Six different wide-flung armies have already been launched at the beleaguered Fascist army of occupation, four in the north and west, and two in the south.

SMASH INTO ERITREA

In a lightning move, one column in the north has smashed into Eritrea to capture Agordat, key railhead leading to Asmara, the capital and Massawa, Italy's most important Red Sea port. Forty miles south, column two is engaged in fierce fighting around Barentu in an endeavor to cut off this Italian division from the main body which is retreating back along the railroad toward Cheren, only fifty miles from Asmara. Meanwhile, column three, still further southwest, has swept along Setit River into Biacudi. Column four, based in Gallabat on the Sudan frontier, has forced 8,000 Italian troops into full retreat along the Matemma-Gondar road.

Gondar is a most important military center in the Lake Tana region, and is expected to be most bitterly defended. Laka Tana is only 225 miles from Addis Ababa, capital of the Ethiopian Empire.

Two armies of South Africans and Ethiopians from Moyale in British Kenya have invaded the country, one striking towards Bardera in Italian Somaliland, the other directed straight at Addis Ababa.

ETHIOPIANS OPERATE BEHIND ITALIAN LINES

Important in the Battle of Ethiopia is the role played by warriors of Emperor Haile Selassie. They are operating not only with invading forces, but also behind Italian lines. They are playing havoc with Italian nerves, centering along narrow winding mountain roads, they are hidden behind every rock and tree, pouring volleys into retreating Italian forces and carrying on day and night guerilla warfare.

At strategic points, they send giant boulders crashing down to block motorized equipment and tanks. When the enemy hurriedly deserts them they are met with withering fire from the surrounding hills. By night they place heavy trees across the roads to hold up the retreat.

These rebel Ethiopians are also expertly trained in cutting lines of communication, blowing up ammunition dumps and slaughtering troops coming up with supplies.

In addition the British are aided by efficient intelligence service organized by the Emeror. They always know the extent and disposition of the Italian garrisons. The British also rely on local Ethiopian chieftains to guide them over almost impassable mountainous terrain. These chiefs know every nook and cranny in this wild land.

250,000 ETHIOPIANS

While no official announcement has yet been made of the number of invading forces, it is estimated that Ethiopian rebels have now reached the total of 250,000. Among them are fearless Swahalis, Negro warriors who are today equipped with modern rifles and machine guns instead of spears and ancient shotguns.

Private sources here state that Emperor Haile Selassie has been named Lieutenant General in the British Army. He not only wears a general's uniform, but tanks, armored cars, rifles and munitions have been placed at his disposal. He has British laison officers, a squadron of R.A.F., and a contingent of Australian troops at his command.

It is being widely whispered that the British would have delayed the Ethiopian campaign had not the Emperor convinced them that his warriors were not only loyal to him but eager to fight. He demanded immediate action. Months of work by the King of Kings and his close advisors preceded the campaign. As a result, Italian armies in Ethiopia are today surrounded by enemies both within and without the occupied territory. The Vatican fears for the fate of the embattled 250,000 Italians when methods taken to conquer the country are considered.

GOVERNOR GENERAL COMPLETELY ISOLATED

Since the closing of the Suez Canal, the Duke of Aosta, Governor General and Viceroy of Ethiopia in Addis Ababa, has been completely isolated except for radio communication. While he has had ample time to store up supplies of food, grain, munitions and gasoline before Italy entered the war, it is said these stores are now rapidly giving out, and there is less than one month's supply of gasoline left. This may explain the inactivity of the Fascist air force up to date in face of continuous bombardment of towns and Italian military concentrations by the R.A.F., and South African air force operating from Kenya.

Other sources say that the Battle of Ethiopia may be lost for lack of "a pair of boots." This indeed would be an ironic turn in the wheel of fortune, because Bruno Mussolini returned from the Ethiopian campaign in 1936 covered with medals for his squadrons for "heroic" bombing of barefoot natives with incendiary bombs which spread flames like wild-fire through tinder-dry grass. Thousands of warriors were crippled this way by severely-burned feet.

ITALIANS MAY HAVE TO FIGHT IN BARE FEET

It is known that since Ethiopia has been cut off from home supplies, boots of the fighting forces have so worn out that they will be shortly forced to flight in bare feet like natives, or surrender.

My informant explained that the Greek Evzones were using their big round-toed and betassled shoes to good advantage, "kicking fleeing Italians out of Albania."

In any case, it is now evident that British-Ethiopian strategy calls for the capture of Asmara and Massawa, whence they will strike south to the Red Sea railhead of the Djibouti-Addis Ababa Railroad. This is the famous "life-line" of Ethiopia, nearly five hundred miles long from the coast to Addis Ababa in the interior. This will close the exit for the Duke of Aosta. Meanwhile the capital will be attacked from the north by an army descending from Lake Tana, from the south by the South Africans coming from Kenya.

Haile Selassie is England's Ace Card

FEB 8 1941

The first ruler to lose his throne in the endeavors of the Axis, Inc. to create their "new world order," Haile Selassie has trod a long and hard road since May, 1936, when Mussolini's legionnaires occupied his ancient capital of Addis Ababa and forced him into exile.

The $200,000 he took with him was rapidly spent in providing for his retinue, in paying his $75,000 yearly dues to the League of Nations before which he appealed for non-recognition of Italy's conquest of his country. Further blows came when his present ally, England, refused to turn over to him the $250,000 which was his share of the cable tolls amassed at Addis Ababa during the war, and when France gave to Italy his 21 per cent of stock, worth $500,000, in the Jibuti-to-Addis Ababa railway.

But today, the King of Kings, the Lion of Judah, the descendent of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, is a happy man again. He has raised the red, yellow and green flag of his former kingdom in a hidden mountain clearing in western Ethiopia. After dropping him in 1936, Britain has again recognized him as ruler of Ethiopia and with Britain's help he may again soon sit on his ancient throne in Addis Ababa.

"The political-military situation in Italian East Africa, can be said to be good," Attilio Teruzzi, undersecretary for Italian Africa, told the Italian Senate last July. "But we must remember—since we have nothing to hide—there are still small areas in rebellion."

Since then the Italian position in Ethiopia has steadily worsened. Although the Duke of Aosta, the Governor General and Viceroy of Ethiopia, with his headquarters at Addis Ababa, had plenty of time to store up food, grain, munitions and gasoline before Italy entered the war, the closing of the Suez Canal by the British has cut Italy's East African Empire completely off from the motherland.

Those stores are now giving out. According to confidential sources, the Italians in Ethiopia today have less than one month's supply of gasoline left.

Ethiopia was never completely pacified by Italy. The only thing they could do was to garrison the country (almost 8 times the size of New York State, 350,000 square miles) with small outposts. Almost 300,000 Italian and Libyan troops are spread out across the country today, with only Italian airpower to link the isolated garrisons together.

It was this use of airpower as a force to keep the Ethiopians subjugated which drew forth the charges that the Italians were spraying guerrilla bands from the air with concentrated mustard gas.

If it is true that the Italians have only one month's gasoline supply left, these guerilla bands are England and Haile Selassie's ace-in-the-hole.

The Return of the Black King

FEB 14 1941

THE KING OF Kings, the Conquering Lion of Judah, Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, is King again! . . .Again, a King in his native land. . .Again, A King leading his warriors in battle.

In 1935, Benito Mussolini, mighty in military force, sent his powerful and conquering legions into Africa to overpower and overrun the wild but peaceful regions of the little black kingdom, forcing Emperor Haile Selassie to flee with his family to the protection of English soil.

Overpowered, raped and dying but fighting back, the King of Kings, outclassed in military might but never conquered in spirit, fought an unequal battle he could never win. Fighting the mechanized land and air forces of the superior Italian land and air arms with antedated and outmoded muskets, spears and bows and arrows, the King of Kings was a hapless and pathetic King without an ally. He called upon the League of Nations and received a deaf ear. He stretched his hands to England. England offered a haven for himself and family on English soil but no aid to save his ancestral land and the homes of his native subjects The King of Kings begged mercy of the conquering Romans.

In a few short years, the picture changes.

Many members of the haughty League of Nations of 1935 who heard Haile Selassie plea at Geneva for aid and heard his fateful prediction that the blood of their own proud nations would mingle in the dirt with the blood of black Ethiopia under the heels of the oppressors, have sene that tragic fate overtake their homeland.

In 1935, Haile Selassie looked towards Britain for aid that never came.

Today, the King of Kings is King again. Today, England looks to her ally, Haile Selassie, Emperor of the kingdom of Ethiopia. Arms that could not be sent in 1935, now find secret passage ways and hidden jungle trails to supply and outfit the barefoot warriors of black Ethiopia.

In 1935, Haile Selassie begged mercy of the conquering Romans.

Today, an envoy of Benito Mussolini is reported on an errand of mercy to England. His mission—to seek through England, aid for 100,000 of Mussolini's subjects in Ethiopia who deserted by fleeing the Roman legions, and remembering the Adowa massacre of 40 years ago, want mercy of Haile Selassie.

The King of Kings, Conquering Lion of Judah, Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile Selassie, is King again!

DUCE'S DARK OUTLOOK

Chicago Tribune
Chicago, Illinois

HAILE SELASSIE CALLS HIS FIGHTERS.

The military misfortunes of the Italian Fascists are extending slowly to Ethiopia. It is known that Haile Selassie, who might well have thought to spend the rest of his life in rural England, is back in his own country and that his former subjects are responding to his call. In London the house of commons has been told by Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden that the government will welcome the reappearance of a free Ethiopian state and will recognize the emperor's claim to the throne. Mr. Eden said Britain had no territorial ambitions in the country. Such aid as the British could give in helping the Ethiopians to regain their independence would be given.

When the war returns to Ethiopia, the march of recent events is getting back almost to the jumping off spot, altho the Manchurian episode predates Mussolini's descent upon the African member of the league of nations, whose membership in the league was due to Italian influence. The invasion marked the beginning of the outward movements of Fascism.

Mussolini tested the protective devices upon which Europe was relying for the preservation of peace and they were found to be faulty. In October, 1935, the Fascists, having mobilized 70,000 troops, invaded Ethiopia with an equipment against which the native fighters were unable to contend. By the following spring Haile Selassie was in flight and Mussolini had made Victor Emmanuel emperor of Ethiopia. Later it became known that the invader had been none too sure of himself in this enterprise. If the league of nations sanctions had been vigorously enforced against him, even if no other repressive measures had been adopted, he might have failed.

Europe was dependent upon the mobilization of moral and economic forces to preserve peace and bring disputed issues to arbitration or to the world court. That scheme, to be effective, had to be put into operation with resolve and determination, and when the first test of it was made it fell apart. It was undermined by the conflicting opinions and actions of statesmen which not only separated one nation from another but even divided governments into opposing factions.

When Mussolini started on his African enterprise Hitler was as yet not a menacing figure. He was an astonishing one and the portents were evil, but he had been waiting for the vote in the Saar, provided for by the peace treaty. When the territory voted to return to the German fatherland, as had been anticipated, Hitler had made his first acquisition of territory, but he had done so in compliance with agreements and in accordance with the provision for peaceable settlement of disputed questions.

It is probably idle to speculate as to what might have happened if Mussolini had been put in his place, if Ethiopia had been protected, if the Italian attempt to break down the arrangements had been checked, and the Roman dictator forced to submit to restraints and prohibitions. Certainly when he succeeded and when the protective scheme failed, the shadow of coming events was broad over Europe.

Ethiopia is back on the war map and Mussolini can be rescued only by the Nazi power. Unaided, he would be the first dictator to fall and the Italians the first of the repressed peoples to gain their own liberty. Such good fortune, in all likelihood, will be deferred because the Nazis, if it becomes necessary, will take Italy under protective custody and that, in no man's language, could be regarded as a blessing or a betterment.

A Crown Regained

WHEN France fell into the hands of the Germans England had only Ethiopia to look to as an ally. It had an ally that could be trusted. Despite the fact that Ethiopia had been defeated grieviously by Italy and was struggling under its ruthless domination, the black kingdom was far from being conquered. Today a conqueror sabotages the minds and thoughts of the citizens but the dark people of Abyssinia have remained loyal to the cause of freedom even at the risk of death. A conqueror compels his subjects to surrender arms and "study war no more" but the Ethiopians have never stopped fighting. They have terrorized the Italians. They have slaughtered them. They have fought a type of warfare that has made the alleged conquest a pretty expensive undertaking.

Today Haile Selassie, the Conquering Lion of Judah, now sits on his throne. What his victory means to the world only subsequent events can relate. No one will doubt that it has a significance that can not be minimized by the complexion of those who people his country.

The world will remember the prophecy Haile Selassie made to the League of Nations to the effect that other smaller nations would follow the fate of his country if something were not done to prevent ruthless aggression. It will remember what happened. It will remember that Italy is now fighting England because of differences that arose over the treatment of Ethiopia.

England has atoned for her betrayal of Ethiopia. It has paid a heavy price for that sin. Perhaps subsequent events will show further rewards to the British that may come from the solemn recognition of her sacred agreements.

But whatever fate may await the course of events to follow, England may be assured of one thing—that Ethiopia will ever remain loyal to the cause of freedom and independence.

Hitler Negro's Best Friend In Past 2 Years Says Defense Speaker

FEB 20 1941

"Hitler has been the Negro's best friend in the past two years," facetiously declared Dr. Rayford W. Logan, chairman of the National Committee on the Participation of the Negro in National Defense, and in speaking to over 1,500 people here last Wednesday, in a mass effort to have Negroes integrated into the national defense program.

Head of the history department at Howard university, Dr. Logan declared that both the government and private groups had done more thinking about the Negro as a minority group since the threat of Hitler than ever before. Negroes have also gained more significant positions in the government, he said. The meeting was held at Union Baptist Church, 19th and Fitzwater streets, the Rev. J. E. Kirkland, pastor.

But the facetiousness over, Dr. Logan pointed out the different ways in which Negroes are being left out of the defense program, or how they would have been ignored entirely, if the defense committee and other organizations had not been on the job.

FISH AMENDMENT NO ACCIDENT

The Fish amendment, which outlawed race lines in the Selective Service Act was not by accident, he made known, but resulted from study and preparation of the appropriate bill, and then working to have it introduced.

FEB 20 1941

Similarly, the promotion of Colonel Benjamin O. Davis to brigadier general came about because of the proper "timing," and the proper contacts, he said.

"We must not fool ourselves in thinking that having a few 'Negro advisers' in Washington will automatically save the race from discrimination and oppression," he reminded. "All those 'Negro advisers' are very capable men, with the right intentions, but they are part of a system which it not going to concede any rights or privileges to Negroes easily. In most cases, the naming of a Negro is intended to act as a barrier to direct contact between Negroes and responsible officials.

HOW "ADVISER" FUNCTIONS

Dr. Logan pointed out that for weeks, his committee and other groups have been trying to reach Sidney Hillman, director of labor in the Office of Production Management, but every move has ended at the desk of Dr. Robert C. Weaver, 'Negro adviser" to Mr. Hillman. "There are times when no one else can fill the need but the responsible, policy-forming officer," he said, "and we want Mr. Hillman, not Dr. Weaver."

Dr. Logan recommended that Philadelphians support those organizations working to integrate Negroes into the defense program; that they appeal to their Congressmen and Senators; that they write directly to the President; that they continue knocking at the doors of labor and industry to get jobs, and that they join with all movements working to liberalize the social order.

Sponsored by the Philadelphia Committee on the Participation of the Negro in National Defense, the meeting also heard reports from Dr. John H. Brodhead, showing what steps have been taken locally to secure training for Negroes. Charles Shorter, industrial secretary of the Armstrong Association, told of the business concerns here, with huge defense contracts, that do not employ Negroes. George Craig, regional director of CIO, told that CIO draws no lines against Negroes in its unions.

The Rev. Marshall Shepard introduced Attorney Raymond Pace Alexander who read resolutions; Miss Alberta Norwood introduuced Dr. Logan; G. James Fleming, chairman of the local committee, presided; E. Washington, publisher of the TRIBUNE, appealed for local support; the Revs. John Dillingham, pastor of Faith Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. W. C. Williamson, pastor White Rock Baptist Church, prayed. Music was furnished by the NYA Chorus under the direction of Dr. W. Franklin Hoxter. The Council of Youth Leaders served as ushers.

Haile Slips Through Lines; Mobilizes Men

FEB 1 1941

LONDON, — Emperor Haile Selassie, who fled his country almost five years ago as Mussolini's invaders entered Addis Ababa, is back in Ethiopia to lead his rallying tribesmen in a nationwide revolt aganst the Italians, it was revealed last week by the Ministry of Information.

At the same time the ministry told of British assistance to the Ethiopians, of how 500 important chieftains slipped past Fascist lines to visit their emperor in nearby Khartoun, of wholesale desertions by Ethiopian conscripts from the Italian army to aid in the revolt against their Fascist conquerors, and of details surrounding the fall of Gubba, first Italian stronghold to be recaptured in the drive for liberation.

Almost the whole of Ethiopia is now seething with revolt against the Italians. The guerrilla warriors intend to slaughter their Italian conquerers. The spread of rebellion, led by Ethiopian patriots, is giving the Italians so much anxiety that the Duke of Aosta, the viceroy, visited Fascist troops in the province of Jojjam, bordering on the Sudan, centre of the uprising that is the most serious threat to Italian rule.

As a result, of the duke's visit, Gen. Nasi, who commanded the Italian forces which occupied British Somaliland, has been sent from Addis Ababa, the capital, with strong reinforcements in an attempt to quell the revolt in Jojjam.

East of Lake Tana and the head waters of the Nile there have been costly ambushes on the great main road from Gondar, Italy's main base in northwestern Ethiopia. In Sidamo, in the far south, the Italians have been forced to evacuate the post as they have also in the neighborhod of Maji in the southeast. More trouble is beginning in the Shoa country, north of Addis Ababa. But the patriotic movement most dangerous to the Italian oppressors is centered in the province of Jojjam, south and west of Lake Tana. This area might be called the "Ireland of Abyssinia."

The reinforcements that Gen. Nasi has taken with him include two battalions of Savoy Grenadiers, the guards of Italy. Since Mussolini's conquest, Abyssinia's Ireland has turned solidly against the Italians. A big revolt there in 1938 might well have succeeded had not the leaders disagreed as it was reaching its peak. This weakness is not likely to be repeated now that Selassie is keeping in touch with the rebel chieftains and coordinating their guerrilla campaign.

After his arrival in the Sudan frequent visits were paid by Jojjam chiefs. The 44 royal drums are nightly being sounded from the hill tops and along the frontier. Encouraged by the news that the emperor is here, warriors are burying their differences and class prejudices which hitherto had been the main reasons for backwardness in Ethiopia. Jojjam lies in the heart of Abyssinia and contains some of the country's best stock. Were it to fall entirely under the patriots, it would be a menace to Italian north and south communications. An Italian evacuation of this province would have an immeasurable effect on the rest of the country.

4 Ethiopian Chiefs to Fight With Italians

FEB 19 1941

By Herbert L. Matthews

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Feb. 18.—Four Ethiopian leaders are rallying their tribesmen to fight under the Italian flag against the British, it was claimed in a Stefani News Agency dispatch from Asmara today.

Hailu, Gugsa, Seyyum, Mangascia and Abaleu Burru are the chieftains named. Of these, Hailu and Seyyum have considerable followings. The latter addressed a meeting of Tigraians in Adowa, Stefani says, expressing his devotion to the Italian government and saying that he would lead his men into battle.

As a matter of fact, the last card the Italians feel they can play is not so much against the British as against Haile Selassie, who is severely blamed by Ethiopians for having run away and who, anyway, was not popular, to say the least.

Today's war bulletin tells of the third day of heavy fighting on the Albanian front, but it claims that the Italian lines have held. The enemy, it says, suffered heavy losses. And then comes that ominous phrase which has so often appeared in recent Italian communiques: "Our losses were also heavy."

In Italian Somaliland it is claimed that British attempts to cross Juba River were thrown back. This bulletin gives the fall of Chisimaio, which had not previously been admitted. The Somali covering troops "completed obstructed the harbor" before leaving, it is stated.

University students are no longer exempt from military service, according to a decree issued today, calling up the second half of the 1921 class. Previously, students could volunteer and many had been accepted, but this is the first time they are given no choice.

The 1921 class already had been notified of its call to colors, but many portions of it have not yet been summoned. It is estimated that the class will total between 250,000 to 300,000.

Union Now With Britain

MAR 1 1941

The Movement for "Union Now" between the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations has gained considerable attention in the public press and over the radio both in this country and in England. In his new book, soon to be published, Clarence K. Streit, spearhead of the campaign in this country, very minutely outlines the plan.

In the first place, the domestic and political systems of the respective members of the new Union, will be substantially unaffected. In explaining how the Union could be launched, Mr. Streit points out that there should be established a Provisional Congress of 50 members which would work out all details for the permanent organization.

The 50 members of the Provisional Congress will be divided among the several countries in the Union with The United States having 27; the United Kingdom, 11; Canada, 3; Australia, 3; Ireland, 2; Union of South Africa, 2 and New Zealand, 2.

It is not the purpose of this reference to argue the case for or against the proposition of "Union Now With Britain". Nor is there any attempt to explain the elaborate and complex plan of its protagonists. What impressed us more than anything else about the program and what we are intensely interested in is the title of the plan . . . at least the first two words . . . "Union Now."

The plan for a union or reunion between this country and the British Commonwealth of Nations has been both the hope and dream of many Americans ever since 1776. It seems to us the task of establishing Union Now at home is sufficiently pressing to engage all the attention not taken up with the actual efforts needed to prepare our defenses.

We don't desire to cold water the Union Now plan, but we do believe that before we undertake too seriously the job of effecting a Union between this country and the British Commonwealth of Nations, we ought to busy ourselves and try to effect some semblance of Union at home. Maybe that would help us as Negroes in our struggles to get some of those:

Victory for Ethiopia--Afterwards, What?

By A. M. WENDELL MALLIET

As the Negro and other lovers of freedom throughout the world rejoice in the victorious march of Ethiopian and British armies in Italian East Africa, especially in Ethiopia under the leadership of Emperor Haile Selassie, it would be well for them to ponder the outcome of the gigantic struggle and the possible post-war status of the emperor and his ancient kingdom.

In the tragic history of that unfortunate country, Ethiopia has always been the victim of international double-crossing and perfidy. She seemed to have been spotted for destruction long before the Italian aggression brought the whole matter to a head in 1935.

Menelik's victory over the Italians at Adowa in 1896 opened the way for a three-power pact between Britain, Italy and France, whereby spheres of influence were arranged pending the destruction of the nation's sovereignty. When the Italian invasion started, the British made moral gestures in an effort to "save" the independence of Ethiopia, although British statesmen should have known that Laval, the pro-Nazi mulatto, had pledged French cooperation at the Stresa Conference to Il Duce in his plans to rape Ethiopia.

While Anthony Eden tried to impose sanctions (excluding oil) against Italy, the Hoare-Laval scheme to surrender Ethiopia to Italy was negotiated at the insistance of France, the very nation whose demands and assurances made Ethiopia's entry into the League of Nations possible. One wonders today how such official criminality could have gone unpunished.

In the movement to destroy the Italian empire in Africa, the liberation of Ethiopia is a mere element in a large-scale operation as a result of which the British Commonwealth of Nations will be the chief beneficiary. South African troops are fighting in Kenya; Indian troops are bearing the burden of battle in the mountains of Eritrea; and Australian and British (white) troops are engaged along the front from Sidi Barani, Bardia, Tobruk, Derna, to Bengazi; also those operating with the emperor from the Sudan, and those blasting their way through Eritrea into the heart of Ethiopia.

Unless something unexpected happens, the liberation of Italian Africa, including Ethiopia, will be only a matter of time; and after the victory—what? Well, although Britain and America are in the war for democracy and all that sort of thing, the rise and attitude of Japan in world politics have taught the white world a grim lesson.

Never again, British statesmanship has avowed, will a native state, like Japan, be allowed to rise in might, majesty and splendor to challenge British and white supremacy. Whatever happens, so the story goes, Ethiopia and Emperor Haile Selassie I, will be incorporated into the British imperial system, not as a sovereign self-governing dominion, but as a vassal state in Africa.

The device by means of which the Negus Negasti will be a British puppet is said to be very simple. The cost in money for British Empire participation in the liberation movement will be piled high and made a first charge on the national debt of the new Ethiopia. A treaty with Britain and possibly the Union of South Africa, was said to be in the cards, to regulate the future of the country and its relationship with Britain and the other parts of British African empire.

But Ethiopia need not be sold into colonial slavery. The African peoples throughout the world have given and are giving all they possess for the winning of the war by Britain. The people in Africa and their rulers have given money, resources and men, as has been done in the West Indies. In the United States, 15,000,000 Negroes must bear the brunt of taxation that will be borne and paid by their children's children. Great sacrifices in blood and treasure are demanded and given.

The future of Ethiopia and the black and colored worlds should be made known by a clear-cut statement by the British Government and war cabinet of the war aims of Britain and her allies. Those war aims should provide for the liberation, once and for all, of the exploited and oppressed within British and American democracy. But the Negro peoples must arise and demand that which they desire as their lot after the victory—if there is a victory for freedom, liberty and democracy.

Haile Selassie's Betrayers Return To Beg Forgiveness

ADDIS ABABA, April 11.—(Delayed)—Thousands of Ethiopians, with their shamas wrapped about them, watched today as princes and chieftains prostrated themselves before Haile Selassie and protested their allegiance to the emperor at his headquarters about 100 miles from this capital city.

Wearing the khaki uniform of an Ethiopian field marshal, Selassie sat at the top of a flight of steps overlooking his headquarters courtyard. From a mast fluttered the green, yellow and red royal standard of the Lion of Judah, which bears Selassie's title of "King of Kings."

In the courtyard, hundreds of warriors wearing Italian uniforms waited to offer themselves to the service of the emperor.

From time to time, the emperor used field glasses to study the approach of some of the 6,000 men who were snaking their way across a plain hundreds of feet below the town.

The men scrambled up a hill to the town already crammed with armed warriors rushed forward with rifles raised aloft and threw themselves at Selassie's feet, crying that they were loyal to him and boasting of deeds done against the Italians.

"Each day they come to ask pardon," Selassie said. "I forgive them for I have great confidence even in the loyalty of those who once betrayed me."

When all 6,000 men had reached the town and prostrated themselves before the Emperor, coptic priests wearing yellow turbans and walking beneath red umbrellas held a religious service.

APR 14 1941

War drums had throbbed through this town yesterday when the news was spread that the Emperor's heir Crown Prince Asfa Wosan, had entered Ethiopia again.

The Crown Prince and his younger brother joined their father as a special mission of British officers journey toward Addis Ababa which their troops recently captured from the Italians.

The princes with a small suite trekked through the blistering heat of the Sudan desert to reach their father's headquarters.

I traveled with the British, who preserved tradition even while in the wild country.

APR 14 1941

An old Etonian captain, who will administer the courts of Addis Ababa had his native servant lay out fresh clothes for dinner after his evening bath in the Nile River.

Piles of stores surrounded the adjoining camps of the British mission and the Ethiopian princes.

The biggest case contained the Emperor's ornate saddle on which he may soon ride into Addis Ababa. One battered suitcase was crammed with European toys for the Emperor's grandchildren.

The Fate of Ethiopia

MAY 3 - 1941

Recent editorials in the Negro press and in feature articles have convinced us that there is a lack of clarity on the nature of imperialism and on the question of Ethiopia in particular. This lack of clarity is communicated to the masses of the Negro people. As such it is a positive danger. Let's try to set the record straight.

Ethiopia was added to the Italian Empire not so much because of Italian military might, which has turned out to be no might at all, but due to the treachery of Great Britain and the so-called democratic statesmen in the League of Nations. Italy could have been stopped.

The crucial question was OIL. Denial of OIL, namely sanctions against shipments of OIL to Italy would have seriously handicapped the invaders and would have most probably resulted in the failure of the invasion. This step Great Britain refused to take. The League of Nations under the aegis of Britain refused to take this step because they did not wish to prevent Italy from acquiring Ethiopia.

MAY 3 - 1941

They did not wish to do so because Britain with her empire and France with hers realized that they had more in common with the imperial aims of Italy than they had with any such idealistic drivel as they spotted at Geneva for home consumption. Certainly Britain could understand the desire of the imperialists of Italy. Had they not themselves followed the same ruthless policy of forcible annexations? Had not the imperialists of France followed a like course. Imperialism stretches across national boundaries and though the people may bleed and die in battle yet there remains the closest bonds of affinity between the imperialists themselves. Britain and France being the largest imperialist powers on the continent, having stripped Germany of her colonies after the last war were the masters of Africa. They did not consider the question of Italy getting little Ethiopia great enough to fight about.

They were smug and complacent because they held the lion's share of the colonies of the world. They could afford to let Italy get away with its grab. Not on an abstract principle of right or wrong but when a concrete threat to their continued imperialist domination in the form of Nazi Germany confronted them did they go to war.

It is this which distinguishes this war. Its most characteristic feature is the German struggle on the one hand for empire and the British struggle on the other to retain its empire and to enlarge it if possible.

Africa has always been a pawn in the chess game of the imperialist powers. The natives will watch the coming struggle that is developing on a large scale in North Africa. They know that regardless of who wins it means imperialist slavery for them. They do not need text books on imperialism. They daily feel the lash of imperialist colonial expliotation. It is not for us, the Negro people to take sides with either of these bands of brigands. Our interests in the matter lie along the line of freedom of the people of Africa from subjugation from all sources. We have the right to demand that these people be given their freedom to develop freely and unhampered from any source. This is not a demand that imperialism is likely to grant without a struggle. It is therefore heartening to observe that there is a strong movement in all colonial countries for liberation from the joke of imperialist domination. The interest of the Negro people lies in support of these movements. For only in the death of imperialism can the people in the colonies and in the homelands ever be completely free.

The Duce's Empire

APR 19 1941

ADDIS ABABA has fallen. Eritrea and Italian Somaliland are in the hands of the foe. Eastern Libya was wrested from the Blackshirts months ago. All that is left of the Duce's dream of empire in Africa are the little outposts in the hills of Ethiopia where harried Fascist soldiers are making a last stand against the invading British and the vengeful natives.

APR 19 1941

Millions of treasures and thousands of lives were sacrificed under the burning equatorial sun to realize the ambition of one man—a man who in the ranks led rebellion against military service, but who as a ruler extolled it as the greatest virtue. Delusions of grandeur intoxicated the Duce like the fumes of opium from the pipe of an Eastern dreamer. When in 1936 his invading troops wrested from the inoffensive Ethiopians their capital and their freedom, the Duce puffed out his chest and shouted to his admiring followers: "Italy has her empire at last: a Fascist empire because it bears the indestructible tokens of the will and of the power of the Roman lictors!"

That old wraith of the Roman Empire, or the "Holy Roman Empire," has stirred the ambition of many a petty ruler, and brought death to many an innocent man. But the ancient greatness could never be revived. Nor was its revival desirable, for either the medieval or modern world. The idea embodied in the name "Roman Empire" is domination, and the world needs less domination and more collaboration.

I arrived in Lisbon, Portugal, to await the sailing of the Steamer Siboney of the American Export Lines, which was to take me back to the United States. During my stay here I had a chance to explore the beautiful Portuguese city and compare it with the war-ravaged towns of France and the lazy, slothful Spaniards.

The people were more progressive and congenial than the Spaniards. The tall, modernized buildings, well paved streets, attractive well-stocked stores showed clearly the influence of the American and English dollar and its domination over the Portuguese life.

PORTUGAL SAFEST COUNTRY IN EUROPE

Although the country is overrun with refugees because it has been up to now the safest country in Europe and has felt less the pangs of war than any other European power, I found plenty of food and you can imagine what a relief it was to become acquainted with the Portuguese cuisine after many weary, hungry days traveling through the vaunted, sunny and picturesque Spain.

Although there is evidence on every hand of wealth and good living, there are also many poor and impoverished families. Europe's perpetual poor in this country are no better off than those of other countries. Before this war is over Portugal may be the scene of a blitz and I saw feverish preparation being made to meet the onslaught from whatever quarter it may strike.

Portugal is the richest country in Europe outside of the war zone, and its rich and immense African territory offers a prize that may doom her to extinction. In talking to a Portuguese official I was told that his country was the only one with African colonies that was really doing the most to uplift the natives. I had no way of checking his veracity but from what I have seen of French, English and Belgian Africa, his words did not at all reassure me of the Portuguese benevolence.

It was certainly refreshing and comforting to enjoy once again the brightness of electric light and the warmth of a good stove and the other comforts of civilization that I found in this Portuguese capital. If you have never lived in a blacked-out city where days are nightmares and nights are hell, then you cannot appreciate what this meant to me. Lisbon is the only open door to the European mainland and in the cafes, hotel lobbies and on the principal street corners one can see a motley crowd of foreigners—they are political refugees, spies, deposed rulers, war-weary travelers and homeless derelicts.

OLD AMERICAN CUSTOM COMES OUT OF HIDING

Then embarkation day arrived. We gathered at the Steamship office—some 400 odd Americans eager to get back to the peaceful atmosphere of our homeland.

It did not take me long to know that I was traveling on an American boat. We had not been aboard the Siboney five minutes before I saw that old American custom—segregation, rear its ugly head. We left at six in the evening, just as the gong for dinner was sounding. On descending the staircase to the large, spacious dining room, I noticed that four tables had been especially put in one corner under the mezzanine balcony—reserved for the 16 colored passengers who were making the trip to New York.

MAY 3 1941

Segregation sometimes has a way of working opposite to the intention of prejudiced officials. We had two instances of this on the Siboney. In being set apart from the other diners, it meant we could have our meals on the first call and not have to wait for other sittings where at times it was a mad scramble for a seat at the four dozen tables.

MEN REPRESENTED BEST MUSICAL TALENT

This became a mark of distinction and soon the other passengers were making inquiries about us. They soon found out that the colored men represented some of the best musical talent that appeared in the most exclusive places on the continent. Soon they became the most popular passengers aboard and nightly entertained the passengers on the long crossing.

Among those who composed the orchestra were, Vance Lowry, Wayman Stokes, Jacob Green, Bobbie Jones, George H. Dosher and Wilbur Marshall, with celebrated baritone, William Veasey supplying the vocals.

After dinner the first night out I went out on the deck to get a last look at the disappearing outline of the continent. A sad feeling came over me as I stood there in the quiet darkness reflecting on the tragedy and misery I was leaving for the life, hope and beauty of our democratic land.

I saw the old come to grips with the new in a furious war. The old had become senile and crusted with economic inequalities that had sapped its virility and doomed its people to a slave existence.

GOODBYE TO EUROPE; PERHAPS FOREVER!

I said goodbye to Europe possibly never to see it again. At least never in the form and shape I had grown to love and respect. These are days when the world has little time to reflect on the past but it must, and America in particular, devote all of its energy to shaping the future.

MAY 3 1941

Our ship was brightly lighted with huge searchlights playing on the large American flags painted on both sides of the ship and on its topmost deck, and we passed through the danger zones without incident. But there were moments of anxiety aboard as we passed many blacked out ships that would not answer our signals for fear of revealing their positions to enemy crafts.

As we neared New York a prayer of thanksgiving was offered for the safe return to our homeland.

Royal Medal For Brave African

AN African employe of the Rhokana Corporation at N'kana, Northern Rhodesia, by name Mubengwa Musonda, has been awarded the Edward Medal for gallantry at the mine on March 1, 1940. The London Gazette, announcing this, says that Mubengwa Musonda showed very considerable courage and a disregard for his own safety in saving the life of a European.

MAR 8 1941

The European had just lighted a charge of dynamite in a mass of rock jammed at the top of the main chute, when he fell and was pinned by his legs under some rock. Mubengwa Musonda lowered himself into the chute and supported the European till help arrived and both were brought to safety. The charge, fortunately, did not explode.

The Triumph of Right

Sometimes it is hard for us to maintain our faith in the doctrine which says that "Truth and Justice Will Ultimately Triumph Over Wrong," but the return of Haile Selassie to his throne in Ethiopia somewhat steadies our shaky position and strengthens our failing belief.

JUN 7 1941

Early during the Italo-Ethiopian war, Selassie was offered a puppet kingship by Mussolini, but instead he chose to flee and keep fighting. So far events have proved Selassie was right, although men like the late Marcus Garvey and other well-intentioned Negro leaders denounced him as a coward. But had he not taken refuge in England, at the very center of international affairs, where, with the assistance of friends, he organized public opinion and stirred the moral conscience of the Democracies to the justice of his claim, it would not have been possible for the Emperor to return as the symbol of Ethiopian unity and authority and help drive out the Italian invader.

It must be said to the ever-lasting glory of the United States that it never recognized the Italian conquest as did the Daladier government of France and the Chamberlain government of England. Daladier is in concentration, and France is under the Nazi heel; Chamberlain is dead, and England is in a death struggle against terrific odds because of his weakness and compromise.

Perhaps the world would not be on fire today if France had delivered arms and ammunition already bought and paid for by Ethiopia, and had not cut off supplies from the inland by tying up the railroads at Jibouti. France, more than any of the other European countries, appears to be a victim of its own undoing.

We hope history will not repeat itself. As a rule Black folk never receive rewards commensurate with their deeds, but we hope that when the true story of the part Selassie played in the victory of the Allied cause—and we do shall among the leaders of the world and hope that ultimate victory shall stretch forth her wings and Ethiopia have played in the victory—the King of Ethiopia shall be given his rightful place in triumph.

Negroes Whipping Italy

That black African pill must be a very bitter one for Italy to take. Taking their cue from the Germans, the Italians declared that the Negroes of Africa were uncivilized and cowardly, easy to conquer and much in need of civilizing at the hands of the New Empire of the Romans. Now it seems that these semi-savages are too much for the civilization of Rome and that they are teaching these same Romans some lessons in how to retreat before a victorious enemy chiefly supported by Black fighters.

We are of the opinion that most people, especially in the southern part of the United States, are prone to overlook the fact that Italy is being beaten in Africa by black men. We read the papers about how the Italians are fleeing in panic before the English and how they are being taken as prisoners by the tens of thousands but nothing is said about the fact that many of the soldiers, the majority in many instances, are black natives under the leadership of white English officers in the higher brackets.

History tells us that black men fought nobly and well in the legions of the Old Roman Empire of which the present would-be empire is only a very poor imitation. It is a sad commentary upon the leadership of Italy today that they are being whipped in these modern times by the descendants of the brave Negroes who helped their race to conquer the world a few short centuries ago. Ingratitude is here punished with providential irony.

Hitler Makes Britons Forget Old Color Bar

MAR 18 1941

MAR 18 1941

NEW YORK—(SNS) — Fear of Hitler has forced the British to drop the rigid color bar and to enlist Negroes from Africa, and the West Indies, and Indians from India, in the exclusive Royal Air Force according to an article by George Padmore in the March issue of The CRISIS magazine.

Not only has the fear of the Germans broken down the color line in the RAF., but it has caused the heads of British religious bodies, including the Archbishop of Canterbury, to issue a statement to the press urging the wiping out of the color line in all phases of British life.

The letter urges the abolition of color barriers in the colonies; the elimination of discrimination in the hotels and hospitals and the complete wiping out the color line in employment.

The letter further urges the rather astounding step that Negroes be extended "the hospitality of English homes in this country."

Mr. Padmore asserts that the total collapse of France was followed by a serious consideration by the British of the effect of their color discrimination. He declares that the imminent danger of German invasion has forced the British to abandon the color line and to welcome all defenders, regardless of race or color.

President Roosevelt Speaks On The Lend-Lease Bill

MAR 21 1941

LAST SATURDAY NIGHT, President Roosevelt addressed the nation and the world on this government's stand and intentions as exemplified in the passage of the Lend-Lease, or all aid to England Bill, passed by the Congress of the United States, and signed by him a few days before. It was a great speech and the sentiments, as expressed regarding this country's aims in the passage of the Lend-Lease Bill, its stand with England and her allies, our opposition to attemps at appeasement of the dictators, the call for loyalty, sacrifice and unity of all the people of the nation, regardless of religion, creed or race, we believe, were expressive of the will, the prayer, and hopes of all the people of the United States.

MAR 21 1941

Probably the most significant statement made by President Roosevelt anytime during his tenure of that high office was made in his Saturday night speech when he said "There never has been, there isn't now, and there never will be, any race of people fit to serve as masters of their fellow men."

We believe that any analysis of world history will reveal that most of the evils from which the world is suffering today, including the present brutal and destructive and yet uncertain war, had their origin in a philosophy and ideal, based on the theory of a master race, long existing in the culture, civilized and powerful nations of the world, that are periodically revived and revitalized by such books as Lothdrop Stoddard's "Rising Tide of Color", of about twenty years ago, and the magazine serial "The Yellow Peril" of about the same period.

To millions of colored people in the United States, to the millions of colored people of Africa, Asia, and the islands of the seas, as well as other groups who have suffered because of the past dominance of the master race philosophy, the remarks of President Roosevelt will be heartening and rassuring.

As America goes "All Out" in its aid to England and her allies in the fight against dictatorship and tyranny and for the preservation of Christian civilization and democracy, let us hope, that, in these remarks by the greatest American President of all times—There never has been, there isn't now, and there never will be, any race fit to serve as masters of their fellow men—when victory has been won by England and her allies, a new world philosophy and ideal based on his remarks will be given birth, to the end that, not only here in the United States, but throughout the nations and races of the earth, there will develop and grow, the spirit of universal brotherhood and goodwill, as interpreted by Jesus Himself, which can be the only assurance of the security of Christian civilization and lasting PEACE.

French Leaders Tried To Protect Property And Lost Soul Of Nation

While Political Parties Grabbed at One Another's Throats, Leaders Behind the Scenes Plotted for Rapprochement with Germans to Protect Interests of French Moneyed Classes.

By R. WALTER MERGUSON
(Pittsburgh Courier War Correspondent)

(Copyright, 1941, The Pittsburgh Courier Publishing Company. Reproduction in whole or in part expressly forbidden.)

MAR 2 2 1941

Hundreds of volumes will be written in the years to come in an attempt to answer for posterity the question: "Why did France lose the Battle of France in 1940?" There will be a thousand answers, a thousand explanations. Some will ascribe the victory to the might of German arms without discrediting the French. Others will emphasize the internal weaknesses of the French and the duplicity of her leadership in 1940.

I state above that volumes will be written. It would be more correct to state that books have already and are being written to answer the question.

Interest in the debacle of France is great to students of the past and present because no other major nation in history has ever been crushed so completely so quickly.

In the last so-called World war, Germany was forced by hunger to sue for peace, but Germany, even under the burden of the stipulations of the Versailles peace treaty, suffered no such humiliation as has already been forced upon France.

Less than a year ago, most of the ordinary people of the world regarded France as one of the strong nations. Military experts described the French army as the most powerful in the world. France, Great Britain and Germany were the Big Three of Europe. Japan and the United States were the Big Two of the rest of the world. No one of these great powers, it was thought, could knock the other out in a few days or weeks. Certainly not France, the greatest military power, aligned with Great Britain, the greatest naval power.

WE MUST BELIEVE WHAT WE SEE

But we must believe what we see with our eyes. We saw Germany, the vanquished of 1918, strike May 10, 1940, and, one month later, we saw the Germans take over the government at Paris.

WHY?

Many factors contribute to the downfall of a nation. They may not operate quickly, but they are sure in their effects. Gibbon, the famous English historian, has used thousands of words to describe the factors at work through several centuries in the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.

Probably the last great battle which Rome fought was as the last Battle of France, a battle which Rome lost in a hurry because of years of internal decay.

No one factor may be predominant in the decay of a nation, but I believe that character, the character of a nation, is a heavy contributor.

I would say that French character, as reflected during the recent crisis, by her political and military leaders, led to her ruin.

Let us examine. From the very beginning, this war has been defined as a strange conflict. The French and the English saw the war coming upon them, yet seemed to be in a state of hypnosis. No one, inside or outside France, was able to understand French military and political strategy. Even France's English allies could not understand that. The last final hours found English statesmen vainly and frantically trying to come to an understanding with the French leaders. The pattern of things was bizarre and no explanation was given.

WORLD HAS NOT FORGOTTEN LAVAL'S TREACHERY

You have doubtless read before that France was sold out. For a long time, even in France, I heard that. It is therefore common belief that her unscrupulous politicians placed her on the block. Even though the outside world was not aroused at the time, the world does not forget the treacherous manner in which Laval sold out Ethiopia to the Italians. He was one of the leaders who made French statesmanship a symbol for trickery.

Americans are apt to make the mistake of thinking that the French democracy was somewhat like our own, a democracy in which two or three great parties vie to represent the majority of the people. That is not true of France. The French Republic was overrun with political parties, all fighting one another, none representing a majority. Governments rose and fell almost with the rapidity of a referee's count. There was no stability.

Between the extremes of conservative capitalistic Rights and soicalistic communistic Lefts in France, there were political parties galore. The antagonisms of these parties were irreconcilable This helped France to ruin.

TWO FACTORS ESTABLISHED

Thus we establish two factors: French character as reflected in French leadership and the antagonisms of an uncontrolled number of political parties.

France is more than a defeated nation. France is in a complete state of disintegration and on the brink of revolution. Only the presence of German troops is preventing a recurrence of the bloody civil strife which followed the disastrous Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

Beginning with 1936 when Blum came to power as premier, the political antagonisms were aggravated. The Communists of the Left who were opposed to cooperation with the Socialists fomented strikes and other labor troubles.

When Premier Blum came into power, his efforts were paralyzed by the nefarious activities of the opposing political parties. His sphere of activity was restricted by this reactionary policy although he did much for the working classes; such as, setting up the 48-hour week and providing for higher wages and vacations.

BLUM SHOWED CONCERN FOR WORKINGMAN

Blum's regime marked the first time in which concern had ever been shown for the French proletariat, or workingman. This concern aroused the hatred of opposing political interests. What happened?

Finally, the capitalist Right, observing Blum's reforms, created and financed the P. S. F. (Patronat Social Francais) which had for its object the repeal of the laws set up for the benefit of the working class.

The conservative capitalistic Rights, not thoroughly knowing Hitler's methods and policies, thought that their interests would be better served and perpetuated by collaborating with the Nazi leader.

They were thinking of money. They thought their financial interests would be safer if they cooperated with the Germans to overthrow the French Communists who were demanding that the state take an interest in the welfare of the workingman.

Each French political party, grasping for the other's throat, preferred to see German domination rather than yield leadership of the nation to an antagonist party.

Thousands of Communists in France were thus thrown in jail while Daladier and Reynaud were given full sway to conduct the war to a disastrous end.

FRANCE'S DEFEAT WOULD SERVE AS SHIELD

Laval and Flandin, both destined to become big figures in German-dominated France, were in favor of overthrowing France by war because the defeat of France would serve as a shield for them. They expected England to be defeated at the same time.

They hoped to overthrow the political regime in their own country and to see England defeated so that they might unite with the Germans on a plan to defend French capital, the French moneyed interests.

Colonel DeGaulle saw the plot and embarked at Dunkerque with a French army for England.

LEARNED OF PLOT JUST IN TIME

The English troops were resisting strongly at Louvain in Belgium when they learned of the plot, just in time to save 300,000 men. They were forced to abandon the supplies and equipment of four army divisions in their retreat.

Former Premier Herriot, Colonies Minister Mandel and President LeBrun wished to carry the war over into Africa, but Laval, still playing his game, opposed the move and an armistice with Germany was signed, leaving the French fleet intact at Toulon under German observation.

The German army had already taken and occupied two-thirds of metropolitan France, housing most of her vital war industries and raw materials.

But in spite of this, the French, with their fleet free and a base of operations in Africa, could have carried on the war.

Such action, however, would have thwarted the plans of such men as Laval and Flandin.

WAR FOUGHT IN AIR OF FALSE PROPAGANDA

The war began, was fought, and ended in an atmosphere of false propaganda. The people of France and the people of other countries were fed fake news releases.

At one time, the newspapers were told that the Polish air fleet had successfully carried out a raid on Berlin. The truth is that the Polish air corps never got off the ground having been destroyed on the ground by the Germans.

Later, the press was fed false reports that the Allies were winning in Norway. Vivid descriptions were written of spectacular victory retreats to pre-arranged positions.

For nine months, that was the type of news given the world. That was the kind of news the censors released.

SCHEDULE OF DEBACLE

But the truth is that French leaders of the type named above were conspiring to bring about the downfall of France to serve the interests of the wealthy French. With this plot at work in the background, the Battle of France and the ruin of France proceeded as follows:

May 16—The Germans opened a wedge, sixty miles wide, at Sedan. Twenty-five hundred tanks and 3,000 planes entered the wedge.

May 18—Generalissimo Gamelin issued orders: "Future of France depends upon this battle. All who cannot advance should die on the spot rather than cede one inch of native soil which has been confided to him." (But Laval and Flandin are busy plotting the subjugation of the whole of France to the foe.)

May 20—Weygand replaces Gamelin as generalissimo. The case is hopeless. German motorized units pour into France by the thousands. There is nothing to stop them, for the French soldier refuses to fight and surrenders. The French soldiers throw their guns into the ditches and rivers, discard their uniforms. Officers tear off their insignia, desert their regiments and leave their men fighting without direction.

May 22—The German army reaches Amiens and Arras. Thousands of refugees are on the highways, making the movement of troops well-nigh impossible.

May 29—King Leopold of Belgium capitulates.

June 5—True Battle of France begins. Weygand issues order: "Defend your positions without hope of retreat. The thought of the country being violated should inspire the resolution to remain firm. Our glorious past shows that determination and courage wins. Look before you! In the rear the government has done everything to support you."

Winston Churchill confirmed the report that only a part of the Royal Air Force was used because it was judged beforehand that the battle could not be won. Some of those who took part told me that tank support in the Battle of France or at Dunkerque.

Hundreds of volumes will be written in the years to come in an attempt to answer for posterity the question: "Why did France lose the Battle of France in 1940?" There will be a thousand answers, a thousand explanations. Some will ascribe the victory to the might of German arms without discrediting the French. Others will emphasize the internal weaknesses of the French and the duplicity of her leadership in 1940.

I state above that volumes will be written. It would be more correct to state that books have already and are being written to answer the question.

Interest in the debacle of France is great to students of the past and present because no other major nation in history has ever been crushed so completely so quickly.

In the last so-called World war, Germany was forced by hunger to sue for peace, but Germany, even under the burden of the stipulations of the Versailles peace treaty, suffered no such humiliation as has already been forced upon France.

Less than a year ago, most of the ordinary people of the world regarded France as one of the strong nations. Military experts described the French army as the most powerful in the world. France, Great Britain and Germany were the Big Three of Europe. Japan and the United States were the Big Two of the rest of the world. No one of these great powers, it was thought, could knock the other out in a few days or weeks. Certainly not France, the greatest military power, aligned with Great Britain, the greatest naval power.

WE MUST BELIEVE WHAT WE SEE

But we must believe what we see with our eyes. We saw Germany, the vanquished of 1918, strike May 10, 1940, and, one month later, we saw the Germans take over the government at Paris.

WHY?

Many factors contribute to the downfall of a nation. They may not operate quickly, but they are sure in their effects. Gibbon, the famous English historian, has used thousands of words to describe the factors at work through several centuries in the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.

Probably the last great battle which Rome fought was as the last Battle of France, a battle which Rome lost in a hurry because of years of internal decay.

No one factor may be predominant in the decay of a nation, but I believe that character, the character of a nation, is a heavy contributor.

I would say that French character, as reflected during the recent crisis, by her political and military leaders, led to her ruin.

Let us examine. From the very beginning, this war has been defined as a strange conflict. The French and the English saw the war coming upon them, yet seemed to be in a state of hypnosis. No one, inside or outside France, was able to understand French military and political strategy. Even France's English allies could not understand that. The last final hours found English statesmen vainly and frantically trying to come to an understanding with the French leaders. The pattern of things was bizarre and no explanation was given.

WORLD HAS NOT FORGOTTEN LAVAL'S TREACHERY

You have doubtless read before that France was sold out. For a long time, even in France, I heard that. It is therefore common belief that her unscrupulous politicians placed her on the block. Even though the outside world was not aroused at the time, the world does not forget the treacherous manner in which Laval sold out Ethiopia to the Italians. He was one of the leaders who made French statesmanship a symbol for trickery.

Americans are apt to make the mistake of thinking that the French democracy was somewhat like our own, a democracy in which two or three great parties vie to represent the majority of the people. That is not true of France. The French Republic was overrun with political parties, all fighting one another, none representing a majority. Governments rose and fell almost with the rapidity of a referee's count. There was no stability.

Between the extremes of conservative capitalistic Rights and soicalistic communistic Lefts in France, there were political parties galore. The antagonisms of these parties were irreconcilable This helped France to ruin.

TWO FACTORS ESTABLISHED

Thus we establish two factors: French character as reflected in French leadership and the antagonisms of an uncontrolled number of political parties.

France is more than a defeated nation. France is in a complete state of disintegration and on the brink of revolution. Only the presence of German troops is preventing a recurrence of the bloody civil strife which followed the disastrous Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

Beginning with 1936 when Blum came to power as premier, the political antagonisms were aggravated. The Communists of the Left who were opposed to cooperation with the Socialists fomented strikes and other labor troubles.

When Premier Blum came into power, his efforts were paralyzed by the nefarious activities of the opposing political parties. His sphere of activity was restricted by this reactionary policy although he did much for the working classes; such as, setting up the 48-hour week and providing for higher wages and vacations.

BLUM SHOWED CONCERN FOR WORKINGMAN

Blum's regime marked the first time in which concern had ever been shown for the French proletariat, or workingman. This concern aroused the hatred of opposing political interests. What happened?

Finally, the capitalist Right, observing Blum's reforms, created and financed the P. S. F. (Patronat Social Francais) which had for its object the repeal of the laws set up for the benefit of the working class.

The conservative capitalistic Rights, not thoroughly knowing Hitler's methods and policies, thought that their interests would be better served and perpetuated by collaborating with the Nazi leader.

They were thinking of money. They thought their financial interests would be safer if they cooperated with the Germans to overthrow the French Communists who were demanding that the state take an interest in the welfare of the workingman.

Each French political party, grasping for the other's throat, preferred to see German domination rather than yield leadership of the nation to an antagonist party.

Thousands of Communists in France were thus thrown in jail while Daladier and Reynaud were given full sway to conduct the war to a disastrous end.

FRANCE'S DEFEAT WOULD SERVE AS SHIELD

Laval and Flandin, both destined to become big figures in German-dominated France, were in favor of overthrowing France by war because the defeat of France would serve as a shield for them. They expected England to be defeated at the same time.

They hoped to overthrow the political regime in their own country and to see England defeated so that they might unite with the Germans on a plan to defend French capital, the French moneyed interests.

Colonel DeGaulle saw the plot and embarked at Dunkerque with a French army for England.

LEARNED OF PLOT JUST IN TIME

The English troops were resisting strongly at Louvain in Belgium when they learned of the plot, just in time to save 300,000 men. They were forced to abandon the supplies and equipment of four army divisions in their retreat.

Former Premier Herriot, Colonies Minister Mandel and President LeBrun wished to carry the war over into Africa, but Laval, still playing his game, opposed the move and an armistice with Germany was signed, leaving the French fleet intact at Toulon under German observation.

The German army had already taken and occupied two-thirds of metropolitan France, housing most of her vital war industries and raw materials.

But in spite of this, the French, with their fleet free and a base of operations in Africa, could have carried on the war.

Such action, however, would have thwarted the plans of such men as Laval and Flandin.

WAR FOUGHT IN AIR OF FALSE PROPAGANDA

The war began, was fought, and ended in an atmosphere of false propaganda. The people of France and the people of other countries were fed fake news releases.

At one time, the newspapers were told that the Polish air fleet had successfully carried out a raid on Berlin. The truth is that the Polish air corps never got off the ground having been destroyed on the ground by the Germans.

Later, the press was fed false reports that the Allies were winning in Norway. Vivid descriptions were written of spectacular victory retreats to pre-arranged positions.

For nine months, that was the type of news given the world. That was the kind of news the censors released.

SCHEDULE OF DEBACLE

But the truth is that French leaders of the type named above were conspiring to bring about the downfall of France to serve the interests of the wealthy French. With this plot at work in the background, the Battle of France and the ruin of France proceeded as follows:

May 16—The Germans opened a wedge, sixty miles wide, at Sedan. Twenty-five hundred tanks and 3,000 planes entered the wedge.

May 18—Generalissimo Gamelin issued orders: "Future of France depends upon this battle. All who cannot advance should die on the spot rather than cede one inch of native soil which has been confided to him." (But Laval and Flandin are busy plotting the subjugation of the whole of France to the foe.)

May 20—Weygand replaces Gamelin as generalissimo. The case is hopeless. German motorized units pour into France by the thousands. There is nothing to stop them, for the French soldier refuses to fight and surrenders. The French soldiers throw their guns into the ditches and rivers, discard their uniforms. Officers tear off their insignia, desert their regiments and leave their men fighting without direction.

May 22—The German army reaches Amiens and Arras. Thousands of refugees are on the highways, making the movement of troops well-nigh impossible.

May 29—King Leopold of Belgium capitulates.

June 5—True Battle of France begins. Weygand issues order: "Defend your positions without hope of retreat. The thought of the country being violated should inspire the resolution to remain firm. Our glorious past shows that determination and courage wins. Look before you! In the rear the government has done everything to support you."

Winston Churchill confirmed the report that only a part of the Royal Air Force was used because it was judged beforehand that the battle could not be won. Some of those who took part told me that tank troops had neither plane nor support in the Battle of France or at Dunkerque.

Educator Is Against Trying To Increase White Rule Over Darker Races; Britain No Democracy, Says

CHICAGO, Ill.—Contending that the American people are more overwhelmingly against being led into Europe's war now than they were a year ago, and warning President Roosevelt that the passage of the lease-lend bill gives him no mandate to take the nation into war, President Robert Maynard Hutchins, brilliant young president of Chicago University, took to the radio last Sunday in a nation-wide broadcast and delivered one of the most scathing denunciations of the efforts to send another expeditionary force to Europe that has been heard this year.

He stated that a popular poll of American sentiment shows that 83 per cent of the American people oppose going to war, that during the discussion of the lease-lend bill assurance was given that it was a measure to keep the nation out of war, and pointed out that even Wendell L. Willkie stated that the reason he was for the bill was because it was a measure to keep the United States out of war.

He stated that undoubtedly the American people preferred a British victory over a Hitler victory and were more favorable to China, Greece and Turkey than to the Axis powers, but he denied that any of these nations was a democracy, and stated that we ought to stop calling every country that is or later may go to war against Germany a democracy.

Recalling President Roosevelt's promise to extend his "four freedoms" to people everywhere in the world, President Hutchins stated that to follow the President in such a course we must force the "four freedoms" upon people who might prefer to do without them rather than accept them from the armed missionaries of the United States. He called this a form of U. S. imperialism.

"This new imperialism," Mr. Hutchins stated, "this revised conception of the white man's burden, this modern version of America's manifest destiny, is a repudiation of the Presidential teaching that there never has been, isn't now, and never will be any race of people fit to serve as masters over their fellow men.

As a reminder to Mr. Roosevelt that Britain now holds millions of her own colonists in slavery, Mr. Hutchins said sarcastically:

"Of course we must extend the four freedoms to our 'allies' as well as ot our "enemies.' We must see to it that British possessions throughout the world have them. The hopes held out to India during the last war, disappeared after it, and now held out again, must be fulfilled. China, Greece and Turkey must reform, too. In Latin-American countries we shall have no easy task. Few of them have the four freedoms now. From Mexico to Patagonia we must send our legions to convert our good neighbors by force of arms.

"The President cannot mean this for it is a program of perpetual war, war in Latin-America, war in the far east, war in the South Seas and even war with Britain.

"If there never has been, isn't now and never will be any race of people fit to serve as the masters over their fellow men, how can we tolerate the mastery of the white race over our brown, yellow and black fellowmen throughout the world."

What War Means

"If we go to war to preserve the British Empire and crush the Germans, our fundamental problems will remain. We do not face our fundamental problems by going to war; we evade them. We do not make a just and lasting peace by writing into another treaty the fear, ignorance and confusion that have marred our efforts to build a democratic community at home? If we would change the face of the earth we must first change our own hearts.

Dr. Hutchins touched on the national sin of America neglecting domestic problems to go into war. He showed that we are about to go totalitarian ourselves, and must do so to wage war on totalitarian states.

"Is total war, then the path to freedom? We seek freedom from want and we impoverish ourselves; we seek freedom from fear and we terrorize ourselves; we seek freedom of worship and freedom of speech and we suppress them.

"When total victory has been achieved will the totalitarian administration end? We may find a clew in England. A responsible member of the British cabinet, Sir Archibald Sinclair, publicly supports a proposal that there shall be no elections in England for three years after the war. The reason is clear, poverty and disillusionment will make democracy dangerous.

"What will be America's fate after a long, hard and bloody war? In times of peace we have had 10 million unemployed; we shall have at least that many again. We shall have an enormous debt. Repudiation and inflation may rid us of that, and at the same time of the middle class. Having exhausted our resources in getting guns, we shall have none for butter, houses, relief, social security or education.

We shall have want and fear and may have the kind of freedom proclaimed by one of Napoleon's marshalls to German towns. He said, 'My friends, I bring you perfect liberty. But be prudent. I will shoot the first man who stirs?

"Lord Halifax said on Tuesday that Hitler could never invade England. If he can never invade England, he can never conquer the Western Hemisphere. We in America have a chance to save democracy if we build our defenses and stay at peace. If we enter upon total war to total victory we shall lose that chance, even if we win the victory."

Ethiopian Debacle

APR 8 1941

APART from the events in southeastern Europe, the war takes on its most dramatic forms in east Africa and the Mediterranean. Over London and Berlin, this war may appear to be a struggle for the defense of the homeland, but out in the colonial world there is no question that it is a war for empire. Last week it was the Italian empire which suffered the heaviest blows. Coming into eastern Africa from several directions, British troops have over-run Italian Somaliland; last week the key town of Cheren fell after a long siege, opening the way to Italian bases on the Red Sea. On the central Ethiopian plateau, the town of Harar has fallen, making possible a conquest of the railway that runs to the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa. Mussolini stands to lose a quarter of a million soldiers and an equal number of civilians are cut off from their homeland. At best, the fascisti are now fighting a delaying action to prevent the British from freeing their troops for action in the Near East. To cap it all, the British Admiralty reports the sinking of some five Italian cruisers and destroyers plus a ship of a heavier class. This is a serious blow for the Italian navy, which suffered damage at Taranto back in November. Events like these appear as routine in the week's news but, like the resignation of Marshal Graziani, they emphasize the disintegration of Mussolini's position.

U. S. Plan for Negroes?

Dear Sirs: As a Negro I was very much interested in your article, "The Nazi Plan for Negroes," by Hans Habe in the March 1 issue.

APR 5 1941

What struck me, however, was that the Nazi plan for Negroes approximates so closely what seems to be the American plan for Negroes. The principles listed by Mr. Habe are exactly those with which most Negroes are painfully familiar in this country. True, there are a few cases of comparative freedom for Negroes here, but there are so very few that they scarcely affect the truth of my statement.

APR 5 1941

The Nazi Negro policy seems to be the same as that of France, the British Empire, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, and the United States, except that Hitler wants, or plans, to use Negroes only in labor battalions (as most United States blacks were used in 1917-18), whereas the other white powers permit them to risk their lives in defense of those who despise them.

GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

New York, February 27

APR 5 1941

[What strikes us, on the other hand, is how a responsible Negro leader like Mr. Schuyler can permit himself to draw such dangerously misleading parallels. If the "American plan for Negroes" were anything like the Nazi plan, as described by Mr. Habe, Mr. Schuyler would be in no position to complain about it in American magazines, nor would any editor dare to publish his complaint. It seems too bad that the unquestioned ill treatment of Negroes in this country should drive men like Mr. Schuyler to equate it with a far greater evil instead of emphasizing the need to fight the race mania at home and abroad. —EDITORS THE NATION.]

APR 5 1941

Dear Sirs: As a Negro I am intensely interested in Hans Habe's "The Nazi Plan for Negroes." Mr. Habe's hint about a Nazi massacre of French Negro troops is boldly affirmed in a series of articles which are now appearing in the Negro Pittsburgh Courier. The Courier's European correspondent, R. Walter Merguson, a Negro long resident in France, asserts that more than a half million of France's black troops were murdered by the Nazis. "At no time in the history of the world have so many men, made in the Master's own image, been murdered in so short a time," says Mr. Merguson.

Where Mr. Habe hints that much of the blame is to be placed at the door of the Germans, Mr. Merguson frankly implicates the French for their insistence that Africans must fight au sauvage; that is, in hand-to-hand encounters with knives and pistols. French insistence on Negro savagery rebounded in an equally ferocious Nazi savagery.

Italians Surrender Ethiopian Capital Without Struggle and Flee North; Reports Indicate Great Battle Shaping Up in Africa.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 6.—(AP)—Free French patrols are within eight miles of Massaua, Eritrean port still held by Italians, a communique said tonight shortly after the British announced that their troops had marched into Addis Ababa.

"Leading detachments of our imperial forces reached Addis Ababa yesterday evening," said a Middle East headquarters communique.

The victory marked a rapid swing of 90 miles since Friday.

It was believed the British entered the capital without resistance after the Italian garrison had fled north.

APR 7 - 1941

Italy probably has 70,000 troops scattered in the mountains and deserts and they may attempt guerrilla warfare, or make a stand somewhere between the capital and Aduwa to the north.

But the force is broken and rapidly melting away through desertion from the 100,000 it once totaled, the British said.

Meanwhile, a great battle apparently was shaping up in North Africa, east of Bengasi, which the British have abandoned to Axis forces.

The British said "the concentration of our troops is proceeding smoothly" in that sector.

(Germans and Italians said their forces also were gathering east of Bengasi and continuing their advance.)

At Debra Markos, 120 miles northwest of Addis Ababa, a confusing situation was reported Ethiopian "patriots," led by Emperor Haile Selassie, have had the town surrounded for weeks, and today were reported inside the town.

APR 7 - 1941

A number of other Italian garrisons are holding out in southwestern Ethiopia, but they are reported isolated and are expected to yield gradually to a force of South Africans advancing northward from Yavello and Negheli.

The strongest Italian outpost was reported at Gondar, north of Lake Tana.

The final surge toward Addis Ababa was accompanied by a heavy air raid Friday in which smoke was seen 40 miles away pouring from hangars and barracks, the British said.

The force which reached the capital — largely South African— was part of the column which fought its way through Italian Somaliland, crossed the Ogaden desert, which held the Italians up for months in 1935 and 1936, and seized Diredawa on the Addis Ababa-Djibuti railway.

APR 8 - 1941

Many Big Happenings Witnessed In City In Last Decade

WASHINGTON—For a long remote and primitive African city, set more than 8,000 feet high in the heart of a little-traveled land of roving wild beasts and warlike tribes, Addis Ababa has seen considerable world history within the last decade, says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"Among its headline events were the spectacular coronation there in 1930 of Ethiopia's former emperor, Haile Selassie, 'king of kings and Lion of Judah;' the Italian conquest of the city, his capital, in the Spring of 1936; and now the reported exodus of Italian women and children before the advancing forces of the British and the returned Ethiopian monarch.

APR 8 - 1941

Many Changes Noted

"In the threatened city many changes have taken place in the five-year period of Italian occupation," the bulletin continues. "Streets have been renamed for prominent Italians; for example, the avenues of Mussolini, the Princess of Piedmont, the Dukes of Aosta and Abruzzi, Queen Elena, and 'Vittorio Emanuele III Re e Imperatore' (King and Emperor). Other thoroughfares were given the names of Italian colonial towns, such as Bengasi (Libya), Asmara (Eritrea), and Mogadiscio (Italian Somaliland), the first and third of which have now fallen into the hands of the British. One square became 'The Fifth of May,' so named in commemoration of the date of the city's fall to Italian troops, in the Italo-Ethiopian War of 1935-36.

"According to reports of visitors since the advent of the Italians many of the native monuments have disappeared, including the statues of the Lion of Judah and Menelik II, former king of Ethiopia, which were shipped to Rome.

Population Grows

"Established as the capital of the entire empire of Italian East Africa, Addis Ababa had grown to a population approaching 100,000 permanent inhabitants, by the census of March, 1938. Of these, more than 17,000 were Italians, with some 2,400 other foreigners.

"To the old, sprawling, tree-lined city, with its outlying camps, its small native huts, market places, Greek, Armenian and East Indian shops, the Italian colonists had added, or were in process of constructing at the outbreak of the war, modern public buildings, European houses, flats, small restaurants, general stores, motion picture houses, and hotels, planned for an expected peacetime trade.

"By the Spring of 1938, about a hundred new business concerns were reported to be making arrangements for opening shop, and another hundred were under way. In the native sections, new stone dwellings, with thatched roofs, were rising, while for the Italian residents a separate and purely Italian district was planned.

Coronation Described

"The diplomatic quarters of foreign representatives were already, before the Italian conquest, located outside the city. In their spacious grounds and gardens, the lavishly colored and perfumed shrubs and flowers recalled the fact that the name Addis Ababa means 'New Flower.' At present, however, the United States has no representative there, the American officers having been withdrawn after the Italian conquest of the country.

"Describing the coronation of Emperor Haile Selassie in Addis Ababa's Cathedral of St. George, 11 years ago, the American minister then assigned to Ethiopia wrote as follows in The National Geographic Magazine:

APR 8 - 1941

"'For five hours we witness the unfolding of the ancient and traditional Hebraic-Christian ceremony of the crowning of a ruler of the Empire of Ethiopia . . . The emperor, whose name may be Anglisized as Power of the Trinity, is veted first with his sword of gold studded with precious stones . . . Bestowals of the imperial scepter of ivory and gold and a golden globe of the earth follow. The diamond-incrusted ring, the two traditional lances filigreed in gold, and the imperial vestments are all bestowed in turn with appropriate and lengthy ceremony. Seventh and last comes the magnificent crown . . . Shortly after noon the cannons boom. There is the fanfare of a thousand trumpets. The triumphant ululation of tens of thousands of waiting women is released in waves over the city of the 'New Flower'."

The Shape of Things

APR 12 1941

IN THE SPRING OF 1936 THE PROUD LEGIONS of the resurgent Roman Empire marched into Addis Ababa. Benito Mussolini's son wrote poetically of the beauties of bombing Ethiopians to bits; British statesmen mumbled something about sanctions, and piously washed their hands; the League of Nations wagged a finger and averted its gaze; the Lion of Judah, dignified and moving in exile, warned the statesmen of England and France that their turn would come; and a Fascist official in Rome explained languidly to a correspondent of The Nation: "Empires come and empires go, and Britain's day is done." Now, just five years later, the empire of the New Rome lies in shreds, the League of Nations is one with the dodo, the bumbling statesmen of London and Paris are gone with their wind, their cities attacked with more fury than Benito's son could ever visit on the towns of Ethiopia, and Addis Ababa makes ready for the homecoming of the prophetic Lion of Judah. To complete the irony, the representatives of the empire whose "day is done" are thanked by the Italian Viceroy of Ethiopia for their "protection of the women and children of Addis Ababa." By their conduct, adds the Duke of Aosta, the British demonstrate "that strong bonds of humanity and race still exist between our nations." These are not the words of a belligerent; they sound like the words of the Italian people, who never had the heart to kill and be killed to make an empire for a megalomaniac.

SCHUYLER RAPS HALIFAX TALK, WAS VAGUE

APR 6 - 1941

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 3—In a letter to Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, George S. Schuyler, chairman of the Negroes Against War Committee of this city, scored the statesman's vague and indefinite outline of British war aims. The letter which asks searching questions about Britain's post-war plans for colored subject peoples follows:

"We wish to congratulate you on your very effective speech at the Pilgrims' dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in this city last night. It was a long step toward helping the selfish interest in this country to justify their ultimate entrance into the war on the side of Great Britain. As a promulgation of British war aims, however, it was very weak, vague, and indefinite. It is this vagueness so characteristic of all British pronouncements which convinces us of their insincerity. This is the principal reason why we feel that the colored people of this country and your own colonies should be opposed to this war.

"You spoke very vaguely about freedom, democracy, principles, moral, religious and social, about human rights and many other things, but you were not definite. Certainly not definite enough to warrant Americans fighting and dying to defend the system which you represent.

APR 6 - 1941

"When you spoke about freedom and democracy, were you thinking about the fifty million Negroes in Africa under British rule who have no voice whatever in their government? Could you have had in mind the colored people in your West Indian possessions? Did you have in mind the nearly 400 million people in India?

"We want to know definitely what Britain proposes to do about the freedom of these people. Are they to be permitted to develop their own countries in their own way, or does Britain intend to continue sitting on their backs? This is a question that interests colored people everywhere. Unless they can have assurance that they will receive the same rights and privileges as white people in the British empire, they can have no interest in the survival of Britain."

The Role of the Negro In The Present Struggle

Editor, Journal and Guide: With redoubled ferocity the sorely harassed British troops are reportedly capturing post after post, city after city from the besieged Italian colonies in Ethiopia and Northeast Africa. This is indeed bad news for the American Negro people, for it has been chiefly beneath the burdensome pressure of British Colonial rule that, for many long decades, black-skinned natives of Northern, Central and Southern Africa have labored.

The United Kingdom controls the civic destiny of far over 50 per cent of the total native Negro population of the African continent. Prior to the rise of Mussolini, due to England's superior prestige with regard to sea commerce — excluding Italian Libya and Italian Somaliland — Italy's territorial grasp upon Colonial Africa has been very limited.

However, aided by Germany, Il Duce succeeded in deceiving the Haile Selassie regime into thinking that Italy was friendly toward Ethiopia and in an hour when the Ethiopians least suspected, by launching a swift, merciless modern military blitzkrieg against their black neighbors, succeeded in subjugating Ethiopia beneath modern Italian Fascist rule. The oppression which is now being levied upon the heads of our black brethren, beneath Il Duce's iron law, is a recent happening.

The equally degrading brand of civic executive behavior which for several centuries Great Britain has been dishing out against the Negro masses over whom the United Kingdom holds domain is equally as deplorable as any type of imposition which Italian rulers may have set in motion against our people.

APR 12 1941

Judged in the light of cold truth, neither the British nor the Italians are worthy to maintain political authority over the Ethiopian people. Il Duce is far too arrogant and self-conceited to respect the social rights of his dark-skinned subjects. King George VI, on the other hand, is probably but a puppet in the hands of the prime minister, Archbishop of Canterbury, and other high ranking state and church officials who guide or influence the professional walks of His Royal Highness' daily life.

APR 12 1941

Should England win her present struggle with Italy, it is easily possible that the lot of the Ethiopian natives beneath British rule, will not be as good as our own type of social struggle beneath American political oppression. As Negroes there is but one course for us to follow as far as an exodus from the midst of our present economic handicaps is concerned.

We must pool our resources, steer clear of Caucasian politics, survive the approaching Democracy-Totalitarian war for supremacy, as best we can, and when the respective regimes which now hold us have broken down en masse—in that day—many of the good works of downtrodden individuals of African birth and descent will receive their true reward.

It is so fixed today, under our present world political situation, that even the slightest imposition against the Negro on the part of our Caucasion overlords will in due time rise up to stare him in the face, and if he is not careful, bring about his speedy political, social and economic undoing. As a race let us not openly encourage malicious wrongdoing in high places, not even for the sake of financial fear or personal favor.

Ras Seyoum, Whom Italians Made a Governor, Joins the British in Asmara

REPORTS 5-YEAR SABOTAGE

Asserts That Arms Distributed to Him by Fascisti Were Smuggled to Rebels

KHARTUM, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, April 5 (AP)—Ras Seyoum, doughty black-bearded Ethiopian noble who was Italy's most stubborn foe in 1935-36, but later was appointed Governor of a province by the Fascisti, rode through the British lines into Asmara today and announced that he had been sabotaging the Italian efforts for five years.

APR 6 - 1941

Ras Seyoum is hereditary ruler of Tigre Province and father-in-law of Ethiopia's Crown Prince. As a boy he witnessed the slaughter of the Italians at Adowa in 1896. When the Italians invaded the country again in 1935, he fought with such fury and skill that Fascist generals openly evidenced deep respect for him.

Finally, in 1936, he made his peace with the invaders and went to Rome. Premier Mussolini received him in audience and turned out 25,000 Italian troops for a gala review in his honor.

Ras Seyoum said he then was made Governor of Shoa Province, in the Addis Aaba vicinity. Only last February the Italians announced that he was one of the leaders of a native army opposing the British.

Instead, Ras Seyoum declared today, he duped the Italians completely. They gave him quantities of rifles, which he said were smuggled promptly to Tigre Province to arm his old anti-Italian warriors.

APR 6 - 1941

Finally, when the British swept through historic Adowa, Ras Seyoum slipped away and offered his services to the Imperial Command.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 4—British troops continued to withdraw northeast of Bengazi in Libya today, but it was not known here whether the large opposing mechanized force, at least half of which was German, had thus far occupied the city itself. APR 5 - 1941

The advancing Axis formations, commanded by Italian General Italo Gariboldi, who has succeeded Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, consisted of truck-borne troops supported by tanks and armored cars in sufficient strength to make unwise any attempt by the British to hold positions of scant value to them. Bengazi, atlhough once a valuable port, was said to have been so severely bombed and sabotaged during the British attack and occupation in February that it is now of little use now is prestige and nuisance value.

Some German supplies and men are still slipping through the British blockade in the Mediterranean, but only with greatest difficulty and considerable losses, it is asserted. Troop-carrying German planes are operating, but they are said to be unable to transport important quantities fosupplies or many men.

Long Communication Line

Although the Axis has some bases in the desert between Tripoli and El Agheila, 170 miles southwest of Bengazi, these are only partly supplied as material must be hauled more than 500 miles from Tripoli. Thus the Axis is depending on a long communication line, most of which runs through inhospitable desert. APR 5 - 1941

The Royal Air Force is taking advantage of this weakness. Early yesterday British planes bombed a truck convoy near Brega, thirty miles east of El Agheila. After wacthing missiles burst among the vehicles, setting many fires, the planes swooped low and raked the convoy with machine-gun fire. Tripoli was also effectively bombed, it was announced.

Meanwhile, Italian troops south and east of Asmara are being rapidly overrun by the rapid British advance and more and more prisoners are being added to the 3,000 already counted in the Eritrean capital. APR 5 - 1941

The Italians continue their rapid retreat along the road toward Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital, but extensive barricades along the highway to Massawa in Eritrea have temporarily delayed the British advance on this route. The R. A. F. continues to blast truck concentrations between Assab in Eritrea and Dessye in Ethiopia. An Italian encampment on the Adowa-Gondar branch of the vital north-south road system has also been bombed and strafed.

[In the naval phase of the warfare in Africa, the British announced, two Italian destroyers were scuttled in the Rea Sea by their crews. This brought to five the number of Italian destroyers lost in that region this week.]

Before withdrawing from Bengazi, the British completed the destruction of military facilities with fire and high explosives. The British assert that the withdrawal will continue "until such time and place as the commander-in-chief believes we will be able to give battle with advantage to ourselves."

A well-informed British officer, speaking to correspondents today, said, "Remember Sidi Barrani," but he would not explain how far the present operations might parallel the earlier British retreat and subsequent attack. He said that "Germans were already in Tripoli when the British first occupied Bengazi, but then were insufficiently organized to aid the Italians."

[The British believe the Axis forces in the Bengazi area consist of at least two motorized and mechanized divisions totaling 20,000 men, The Associated Press reported from Cairo.]

Informed British sources say that the Axis campaign or diversion was meant to release British pressure on Cheren and Asmara in Eritrea by forcing a withdrawal of troops, but that preparations broke down and the drive was launched three weeks late. The British believe that the chief object of the drive

Lion of Judah Gets Pledges Of Warriors

APR 14 1941

ADDIS ABABA, [AP]—Thousands of Ethiopians, with their shamas wrapped about them, watched Sunday as princes and chieftains prostrated themselves before Haile Selassie and protested their allegiance to the Emperor at his headquarters about 100 miles from this capital city.

Wearing the khaki uniform of an Ethiopian field marshal, Selassie sat at the top of a flight of steps overlooking his headquarters courtyard. From a mast fluttered the green, yellow and red royal standard of the Lion of Judah, which bears Selassie's title of "King of Kings."

In the courtyard, hundreds of warriors wearing Italian uniforms waited to offer themselves to the service of the Emperor.

From time to time, the Emperor used field glasses to study the approach of some of the 6,000 men who were snaking their way across a plain hundreds of feet below the town.

The men scrambled up a hill to the town already crammed with armed warriors, rushed forward with rifles raised aloft and threw themselves at Selassie's feet, crying that they were loyal to him and boasting of deeds done against the Italians. APR 14 1941

"Each day they come to ask pardon," Selassie said. "I forgive them for I have great confidence even in the loyalty of those who once betrayed me."

The Fate of Abyssinia

MAR 13 1941

THE end of the shameful Italian escapade in Abyssinia seems to be in sight. The patriot troops and our imperial forces are advancing steadily. When Greece the other day was visited by an earthquake, the rescue of the victims was impeded by deliberate air raids from the Italian Air Force; it is a comfort to think that such lack of humanitarian scruple will not be found amongst their Abyssinian enemies, but, whatever kindness be shown them, the plight of the Italian women and children stranded in Abyssinia must be serious. MAR 13 1941

The British opposed the admission of Abyssinia into the League of Nations; it was the Italians who pressed for it. In those days we questioned whether Abyssinia was conforming to the standards we deemed civilised. To-day the return of Haille Selassie heralds, as we have reason to hope, a "new order" for his country. During his years of exile he has been concerned for a new version of the Bible in the language of his people. Those who know how he has been educating his sons and how he has been taking his own sufferings suggest to us that both he and, through him, his country will have cause to say to the Italians: "As for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive." We may rightly hope, that before long a free Abyssinia may be Christian by vision as well as by tradition.

The Beginning Of The End

APR 16 1941

The war cannot be won in the Balkans. But the beginning of the end could very well be effected there. If the battle of the Balkans actually takes place, as now seems close to inevitable, the war will really enter its decisive phase.

This battle represents immense dangers to both sides — and both for some time have been hesitant to run the risk. Now it looks as if the strategists may have decided that the possible gains are so great that it is worth the gigantic gamble.

As TIME puts it, "For Germany, a setback in the Balkans would be more than Germany's first outright military defeat in World War II. It would be the turning point of the war.

"For Britain, a decisive defeat at Salonika (or anywhere else in the Balkans) would be more than another Narvik or another Dunkirk. It would mean the destruction of Britain's only existing victorious army; the closing of Europe's back door; the forcussing of the entire war upon the British Isles—where, in the last analysis, World War II must be decided." HUTCHINS

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESIDENT ASKED TO ACT AGAINST UN-DEMOCRATIC POLICIES AT SCHOOL

BY HORACE R. CAYTON

LAST week Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, made a radio address on the subject of war. The reaction of the press to this talk varied from hearty approval to condemnations which linked Hutchins with Lindbergh and others whom they characterized as Fascist-minded.

The Negro press, however, was almost unanimous in its approval, for Hutchins called attention to the economic position of the sharecroppers, the political disfranchisement of southern Negroes and the irrational racial prejudices such as were manifested in the Marian Anderson incident.

Mr. Cayton

We find ourselves in some disagreement with the enthusiastic reaction of many of the Negro writers. Such statements, to wide audiences, by a national figure do much to bring before the public the problems of the Negro. Nevertheless, we feel that the motives and sincerity of the author of such statements should be scrutinized carefully. To this end we are addressing an open letter to Mr. Hutchins seeking clarification on a few points which are bothering us.

My dear President Hutchins:

I have read your speech carefully, and am sincerely disturbed because if what you said is true, I have had you all wrong for the past four years. I did not know that you were particularly disturbed about the Negro problem. As a matter of fact, I have accused you (before many audiences and in print) of being callously indifferent to the fate of the Negro community in Chicago. Now, I find that I was wrong and that you are championing the cause of, not only Negroes but of all the downtrodden underprivileged people. I am also startled because I thought you were the "ivory tower" sort of fellow who did not want to mix in these practical problems.

Mortimer Adler, your friend and adviser, has stated in a reply criticizing your statement that "President Hutchins is a man of good will whose integrity cannot be questioned." It is just this point that bothers me. If your integrity cannot be questioned and if you were absolutely sincere, then one would expect to find that you had some real interest in extending to the Negro (whom you single out for special treatment) an opportunity for greater participation in this democratic order.

This is the point that bothers me. I want to believe that you are a man of integrity and that you are motivated by the praiseworthy feeling which you express for the downtrodden. Your record, however, seems to indicate that this is not the case.

You know that the University of Chicago has aided and abetted the writing of restrictive covenants. These covenants have hemmed the Negro into an area too small to accommodate his population and has resulted in increased rentals to a group that is less able to pay than any other in the city. These covenants have also been responsible in a measure for the terrible overcrowding and doubling-up of families in rotten, rat-infested buildings. Just last week five people were burned to death in a building (for which they paid rent) which was without light, water or toilet facilities.

Your response, Mr. Hutchins, when questioned about the restrictive covenants sometime ago, was to give them your sanction. You started this letter, which was addressed to the Negro press, with the statement that "there was no unavoidable prejudice at the University of Chicago." You knew when you made that statement that Negro girls were not allowed in most of the residence halls and in none where meals were served. That Negro men were only permitted in one of the residence halls. That Negro medical students were restricted in number and in their activities in the clinics. You also knew that Billings hospital did not receive Negro patients except through Student Health.

Previous to your radio address, I have never heard of you making any statement, gesture, or of taking any action to modify the difficulties of the Negro student, or to assist the Negro community of Chicago. You may have done these things but I did not hear about them and I have been pretty active in the Negro community and on campus. It seems to me that you discovered Marian Anderson two years too late. It seems to me that you discovered the plight of the sharecropper and the disfranchisement of the Negro when it was convenient to do so for some other motive.

Now, Mr. Hutchins, I may be wrong and I would be happy to admit it if you would try to convince me. The way to do it and the way to show that you are a man of integrity—that you are not just discovering the Negro to hide some other motive for your stand on the war—would be TO DO WHAT YOU SAY THIS COUNTRY SHOULD DO. That is, I think you should start to act as if YOU believe the Negro should participate more broadly in this democracy. I think you should start right in at your own back yard.

Now I don't want to tell you how to run the University of Chicago; but I must say that if you do not do something after this statement, everyone will see through what to me appears to be a bluff. If you are sincere, why not bring the prestige and power of your office to bear on some of the problems that I have outlined?

Why continue to refuse Negro girls rooms in the dormitories because their presence might offend "some of our southern girls who have never been intimate with Negroes." Why not go a step further, as New York university has done, and appoint to the faculty one of the preeminent Negro lecturers in the field of the humanities, the biological, social or physical sciences.

These are things, Mr. Hutchins, that you could do without the aid or permission of the Business Office, which, you say, determines the policies in regard to the restrictive covenants. Further, you could, if you wished, come out in a statement against the policies of the Business Office.

As I stated at first, I may be wrong and you may have secretly held all these opinions which you have (for the first time to my knowledge) stated publicly. In that case, if you will give me a ring I will get together a committee of Negroes who will be glad to meet with you and attempt to work out some solution for these problems. These people would gladly accept your intellectual leadership.

We need friends and need them badly; but until you have demonstrated in some way that Negroes again are not being used as a smoke screen, you may be a "man of good will," but I will continue to consider what you have to say as coming from "NO FRIENDLY VOICE."

Yours very truly,
HORACE R. CAYTON

THE WAR IS CHANGING THE STATUS OF THE DARKER RACES

THE Rev. S. B. COLES, Negro missionary from the American Missionary Society at Uganda, West Africa, who is on leave in this country, was a recent visitor to The New York Age office and reports that the present war is effecting widespread changes in Africa. For the first time in history the British are arming the natives and are sending out daily broadcasts in English, Portugese and in several native dialects thanking the Africans for their loyalty and the support being given the cause of the Empire.

According to Rev. Mr. Coles, the British attitude towards the natives has been considerably modified and liberalized in the past year and many rights and privileges formerly denied are now being accorded the blacks. This is especially true in West Africa where the educated colored residents hold many responsible jobs in the operation and maintenance of the transportation system, in the customs service and in the hospitals. The native chiefs are in complete control of the cocoa industry and there are many wealthy tribesmen among them.

He told of one instance in which a native chief sent a personal gift of 10,000 pounds to London to help prosecute the war; and of another chief who gives annually a thousand pounds to the local hospital work. Rev. Mr. Coles said that Africa offered excellent opportunity to technically trained Negroes from this country in many lines of endeavor.

A similar report comes from India as to the changing attitude of the British government in their time of need, and with the crisis in the Pacific, the Australian natives should be receiving better treatment.

In discussing the concessions given the Africans and other darker races, especially the Ethiopians between ourselves and a well-informed Harlemite, he offered the following cynical opinion—

MAR 1 1941

"The more we look at it, the more we are convinced that The King of Kings will eventually succeed in chasing the Italians out of Ethiopia. That is, of course, with the help of his allies, the British. The British could have given The Lion of Judah the same help way back in 1935 in the original Italo-Ethiopian war, but appeasement of dictators was the policy then, not only of Britain but France, America, Poland, Greece, Finland, Norway, and all the rest of the so-called democracies. We have only to look at the record of the League of Nations vote upon Haile Selassie's moving plea to see who was in favor of democracy in 1935.

"Now the picture has changed. Great Britain is in a hole and anything goes, even arming African natives, something which the British have studiously avoided for more than a century.

"But the Lion of Judah's troubles will only begin after he has been successful in his drive against the Blackshirt Bum. Then Haile will have to chase his allies out.

MAR 1 1941

"Just as sure as shooting, the British are going to hand out the line that their presence is needed in Ethiopia in the event of victory in order to "protect" the country in case the Blackshirts should come back. From then on, it's in the bag for the Downing Street umbrella toters. First, protection, then a protectorate. That is the essence of British foreign policy in dealing with darker races."

All this may be true, but in our opinion no one willingly gives up rights and privileges once won and if the present suicidal trend of the Nordics continue the British will have a hard time making their subject races return to pre-war status.

Despite discouragements in the United States the Negro as a racial group is bound to gain through this war whereever his service is needed and used, and the technical knowledge he receives from the war could hardly be gained in ten years of peace.

BAIT FOR "SUCKERS"

MAR 14 1941

It is as plain as day that British propagandists are convinced that a new bunch of American "suckers" are born with each new generation and that old "suckers," previously hooked, quickly heal and are as eager to bite again as the inexperienced youngsters.

This thought comes to mind after reading the essay which British news censors permitted Rudolph Dunbar, a representative of the Associated Negro Press, to send to the United States and which appears this week in this and other Negro newspapers.

We would be recreant to our duty as a newspaper if we did not appraise the Dunbar article for just what it is: a piece of propaganda, the probable intention of which is to get American Negroes warmed up for the British Cause and made willing to fight and die to preserve for British plutocrats the world empire they have amassed.

"Plague on Both Your Houses" is and of a right ought to be, the attitude of every Negro American as he or she views the latest episode in Europe's age-old struggle over the right to exploit millions of members of the darker races in Asia and Africa.

Dunbar lets us know that he has inside information on how much better Negro subjects of the British Empire are going to be treated after Britain has won the war. That kind of information might afford inspiration to Negroes who are under the British flag. It, at best, is only interesting to American Negroes. It offers no excuse whatever for Negroes wanting to go to Europe to fight for Britain and wait on the outcome of the war to see if Britons, whose reputation for truth and veracity is nil, will make good on their promises.

Negro Americans have no reason whatever to become elated over the amount of publicity the slick Britons are dishing out about how gloriously they are fighting to re-establish Haile Selassie on his throne as the Emperor of Ethiopia. Britain had her chance to prove her interest in saving Ethiopia for Hailie Selassie several years ago. Britain's attitude then, as Mr. Dunbar reminds us in his article, was expressed by its Lord Simon, who said "I am not prepared to see a single ship sunk in the attempt to restore Abyssinian independence."

Now it can be admitted that American Negroes have something more than an academic interest in seeing Hailie Selassie restored to the throne of Ethiopia. But at the same time, American Negroes are unlike some other minority groups in America in that they are not so selfish as to want the United States to sacrifice the labor and the lives of American citizens in a futile effort to settle wars in all parts of the world.

Negroes of the United States have a vivid recollection of the American attitude toward Mussolini's rape of Ethiopia. There was no undue alarm over the brutal slaughter of the unoffending people of that little African country; there was no outcry against the way Britain and France "appeased" the Italian Fascists; that was a time when the press of the United States propagandized against America becoming involved in a European war and blitzkrieged their readers with World War pictures which showed the horrible deaths American soldiers met on the battle fields of Europe in the "War to end all wars."

Negroes have a right to contend that there is not now going on in Europe anything for which Americans ought to be called upon to give their lives, or for which they should be called upon to make any other kinds of sacrifices, that is of any more importance to America than was the challenge to stop Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia. Just as "America First" was the watchword in the United States five or six years ago, so "America First" should be our watchword now.

It is sheer speculation to believe that old sinners against humanity like the British ruling class will abandon their way of life and begin giving decent treatment to the oppressed people of the British Empire. It is sheer wickedness upon the part of the American people to suffer privation and death in an effort to save the British Empire or any of the other gangs of European racketeers.

We hope and believe that Britisher Rudolph Dunbar will fail in his attempt to stir up any enthusiasm among American Negroes for going to Europe to fight for the preservation of plutocracy. American Negroes are sufficiently engaged right now trying to preserve Democracy here at home.

Hail Ethiopia

HAILE Selassie's victory over Italy is now complete. At last Mussolini has taken away every Italian soldier that was able to leave Ethiopia alive.

To the liberty loving people throughout the world this is of inestimable significance. It means that the yoke of totalitarian influence has been broken from the necks of the first victims who fell under the dictator's heel. It is a good illustration of the principle that industry and perseverance are the factors that will aid in destroying evil.

JUL 13 1941

Ethiopia has been courageous. Its people have never stopped fighting. Though the first to be the victim of the proposed new world order they never surrendered. No other people in Europe have maintained the stamina, the earnestness, the stability and the patience that the Ethiopians have demonstrated. They, with the aid of England, reconquered a territory that had been considerably improved by their conquerors. This fact, of course, does not make the Italians happy. They were never convinced that their leader was making a sane investment when he entered upon his imperialistic war against Ethiopia and the present status of things in that little black kingdom fortifies their convcition.

The entire world is the better off because of the success of Ethiopia. It strengthens the conviction of those who love freedom and liberty to know that right has prevailed over might.

JUL 13 1941

The black people of the world are especially proud of the courageous fight that Ethiopia waged against the aggressor nation. It gives them courage to continue their fight against the forces that would deny equality and justice. Long live Ethiopia!

Negro Parley Demands Total War Against Hitler

Ethiopian World Federation Parley Hears Pleas For All-Out Aid to British, Soviet Peoples; Judge Hueston, Mrs. Moore Key Speakers

A total war against Hitlerism was demanded by Judge W. C. Hueston of the third annual convention of the Ethiopian World Federation at its night session Wednesday. Not until the Negro people who are interested in the freedom of Ethiopia and of Africa gave "totally" of their time and their talents in the building of one strong organization would they be able to contribute much toward the destruction of Hitlerism, he said.

Judge Hueston, who formerly presided over an Indiana municipal court, is Commissioner of Education of the Independent Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the World, a teacher of law in the Terril Law School, Washington, D. C., and an official of the Ethiopian World Federation. He was speaking in response to a brief address by Mrs. Audley Moore, representing the American People's Mobilization. Mrs. Moore had urged the convention to insist not only on all aid to Ethiopia but aid also to Great Britain, China and the Soviet Union.

SUPPORTS APPEAL

Judge Heuston emphasized his Americanism, declaring that he was "an American first, last and all the time." Nevertheless, he added, he "heartily" believed in Mrs. Moore's "message" calling attention to the fact that fascism at home should not be overlooked.

"This convention should fight courageously for equal privileges and opportunities for the black man and for nothing less," he said.

Picturing civil, economic, political and social rights as the "whole loaf," Judge Heuston said that the Negro in the United States cannot be satisfied with "half a loaf." The time has come for the Negro people to realize what their rights are and to go after them, he declared.

The brief speech which brought forth Judge Heuston's remarks was made by Mrs. Moore in the form of greetings from the American People's Mobilization and from the Court of Calanthe, a woman's fraternal organization which had been meeting in convention in New Rochelle and to which she had been a delegate. Mrs. Moore emphasized the need for "unity and courageous action on the part of all progressives." She said she was going as a delegate this week to the National Convention of Colored Women's Clubs in Oklahoma City.

J. Finley, International President of the Ethiopian World Federation, asked that Mrs. Moore be given a badge as an honorary delegate to the third annual convention of the Federation. He said that such a "splendid woman" and "fine representative" of Negro womanhood should be allowed to present the Federation's "fraternal greetings" to the women's convention and to urge them to support the Ethiopians' struggle for freedom and the struggle for freedom of the Negro people everywhere.

Mrs. Moore then stressed the anti-fascist character of the fight for freedom the peoples of the world are making, and pointed out that these anti-fascist fighters are white as well as black.

A telegram was read from John P. Davis, National Secretary of the National Negro Congress. The telegram said in part:

"Since 1935 when the fascist hordes [illegible] through their land bringing slavery and death to thousands of their countrymen the Ethiopian people have refused to give up their fight for full freedom and independence. Their struggle has been a symbol of hope to the black people and other oppressed groups throughout the world and has won for the Ethiopian people the admiration of all mankind.

JOINT STRUGGLE

"Bloody but unbeaten, these heroic people, with the aid of the British people, have routed their fascist oppressors and are now on the road to regaining their full independence. Today they have taken their stand beside the courageous people of the Soviet Union, Great Britain and China in the struggle to strike the death blow to Hitlerism.

"The struggle of the Negro people for freedom is a worldwide struggle. The advances made by the Ethiopian people toward freedom and independence give heart and encouragement to the fight of the Negro people in America against oppression. Recognizing this growing determination to win for themselves full economic, political and social justice, President Roosevelt has issued an executive order prohibiting discrimination in defense industry. The Negro people understand that full citienship rights and an end to jim-crow can be fought for and won in America only if we give full support to all those who want to wipe Hitlerism from the face of the earth.

"That is why the Negro people support the President's recent declaration pledging the full aid of this country to the Soviet Union and all other countries fighting Hitlerism. The National Negro Congress supports the aims of your convention for full aid to Ethiopia and her allies. We offer full fellowship and cooperation with the Ethiopian World Federation."

A telegram was received also from the Jewish People's Committee.

The conference yesterday was devoted chiefly to routine business in preparation for the parade next Sunday afternoon and for the mass meeting in Renaissance Hall, 138th St. and Seventh Ave., immediately afterwards.

During the morning, there was general discussion from the floor, delegates expressing their views on issues raised in the Wednesday night meeting. Wilford E. Lewin, president of Local 1 of the Federation, urging close cooperation with all organizations fighting against fascism, noted the entrance of Ben Davis, of the Daily Worker, and interrupted himself to pay a compliment to Mr. Davis' bravery in his fight, "in the very heart of the South," for Negro rights.

FOUR DEPUTIES JAILED UNDER NAZI REGIME

French, Germans Discuss Partitioning Of English Holdings In Africa

(Chicago Defender Foreign Correspondent)

LONDON.—As part of the program of French collaboration with Germany, Chief of State Marshal Petain has ordered the arrest of all Negro deputies.

This order came simultaneously with the publication of the new French Constitution which cancels political rights and equality that the black populations in the French colonial empire had enjoyed since the Revolution of 1789.

The Negro deputies affected by the Marshal's order are: Gratien Candace, the scholarly deputy from Guadeloupe; Galandou Biouf, from Dakar; George Moneville, from French Guiana; and Henri Lemery, from West Africa.

(The French House of Deputies, is comparable to the lower house of our congress. The deputies referred to in this story, therefore, are similar to our representatives.)

The decision to place these men under arrest was reached during the early stages of negotiations now going on for the occupation of Dakar by Germany.

In return for the loan of Dakar in French Senegal, Casablanca and other ports in North Africa as military and naval bases against Britain and as jumping-off points to invade the American continent, Hitler has promised Vichy British territory in West Africa.

British Colonies To France

According to the agreement between Fuehrer Hitler and Marshal Petain, after the war the British colonies in West Africa, notably Nigeria, Gold Coast and Sierra Leone would be attached to the French empire, but "jointly" exploited by Germany and France.

The German mission already in Senegal comprises many hundreds of Nazi agents who are placed to watch over the French colonial officers and administrative heads. All Negro officials have been dismissed and the black troops are being replaced by white French prisoners of war who are given their freedom on condition they agree to serve under Vichy.

In French Morocco great anxiety is felt among the French officers and officials because of the important German concentration in Spanish Morocco. The former firm of Manesman, the great German mining company has been set up in the Riff to exploit the mineral resources.

For his support General Franco has been promised part of Morocco now under French control. Franco also hopes to recover Gibraltar from Spain.

Nazi Victory Over Russia Threatens Liberty, Claims

NNC Leader Urges Race to Support Aid to Allies and Fight Fascist Forces Working at Home.

Nazi Germany's present struggle with Soviet Russia has a close bearing on the aspirations of colored American citizens, says L. A. Glenn, executive committee member, Western Pennsylvania National Negro Congress. "A Hitler victory over the forces of Great Britain and the Soviet Union would be a grave threat to our liberties and to our national existence," he continued.

"The Negro people, particularly, are deeply concerned about this struggle and its ultimate outcome, for they realize that a Hitler victory would mean the spreading of all the evils of fascism in the United States—race hatred and race superiority. We support President Roosevelt's announced program of aid to all the peoples of countries fighting Hitler," declared Mr. Glenn.

The militant Western Pennsylvania leader assailed those who would aid Hitler in this country by trying to make our aid ineffective. He named Senator Wheeler, Lindbergh, Norman Thomas and Herbert Hoover as being in this class.

Vigorously asserting that Negroes must support the giving of aid to the victims of fascism abroad and must also fight fascism at home, Mr. Glenn said, "The existence of jim crowism in the armed forces and in industry, especially defense industry; the restriction of the right to vote; the oppression of the Negro people by the Hitler-like Ku Klux Klan and the Black Legion, threaten our democracy and stand in the way of national unity. These blots must be wiped out of American life."

Supporters of Ethiopia March Against Hitlerism

Aid to USSR, Britain, China, Death to Fascism, Demanded by Negro and White Paraders

By Eugene Gordon

The third annual convention of the Ethiopian World Federation came to a close yesterday afternoon in one of the most brilliant demonstrations for freedom of the oppressed that the Harlem community has witnessed for years. From the silent dignity of the leading contingents, representing various lodges of the Federation, to the chanting formations representing the National Negro Congress, the International Workers Order, and other organizations, bringing up the rear, there was clearly a united front against Hitler and Hitlerism at home and abroad.

The parade began as scheduled at 142nd St. and Bradhurst Ave. at 2 P. M., headed by leaders of the Ethiopian World Federation with their banners and flags. Most of the paraders wore the uniforms of their lodges, dark blue, with Sam Browne belts, and white with the Ethiopian national colors draped across the chest as a sash. Here and there two persons carried a life-size portrait of the Ethiopian emperor, Haile Selassie.

Occupying an honored place near the head of the column was a contingent of the Royal Order of Ethiopian Hebrews — Sons and Daughters of Culture, Inc. There was a large number of black rabbis in this group. Closely following were the Emergency Defense Cadets with their drum corps, boys and girls in khaki uniforms.

The parade and the line of march were well policed but there was nowhere any sign of disorder. The brilliant color of the demonstration as manifested in the flags, banners and uniforms won applause. Loudest applause, however, came for the latter and longer contingent representing lodges of the International Workers Order, the National Negro Congress, the Workers Alliance, and other organizations armed with fighting slogans borne aloft on placards.

Many persons along the line of march, which took in a great square in the heart of the Harlem community, remarked with variations on the earnestness of men and women who would rather parade in the hot sun in behalf of "a cause" than go to a beach.

U. S. MAY BUILD AIR BASES IN LIBERIA

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31—(ANP)—Contrary to President Roosevelt's declaration that he had no intention of sending any more American armed forces overseas at this time, reports circulating last week gave evidence that the United States is seriously considering building an American naval and military base at Liberia on the west coast of Africa.

The information that Liberia is under consideration came from an administration conference report. Administration officials refuse to discuss the matter, but indications are that Liberia has been considered as an alternative to French Dakar, seizure of which has been deemed too risky.

Liberia is considered of vital importance now because of its strategic position, just below Dakar and opposite the Brazil coast.

Liberia, founded in 1820 under auspices of American societies interested in establishing a colony of freed American slaves, was granted independence in 1847, but is still an American protectorate. Because of close relations with the United States, Liberia is said to be favorable to the building of military posts.

Dr. John H. Furbay, former acting president of the College of West Africa, Monrovia, in an interview recently, declared that sentiment in Liberia is strongly anti-Nazi. Fear rides the Liberians that if Germany should get their continent under her thumb, they would soon be in chains, the educator said.

German ruthlessness is a diobolic thing . . a giant octupus which destroys everything in its wake!

I've seen practical illustrations of that ruthlessness at work. I've seen the Germans tear the bleeding heart of France from its body and lay it bare upon the cold-rugged earth of this historic nation.

The Germans, as I write these lines, are in full possession of Paris. And they are stuffing down the throats of their helpless subjects the Hitler policy of Aryan supremacy. Germany likes nothing Negroid . . despises and hates everything black.

Make no mistake about it . . Black Americans . . German rule and control of the Eastern hemisphere would symbolize the end of the Negro's hopes and ambitions for years to come.

And if, through political and economic pressure, this country would become involved in the grim holocaust which is engulfing untold millions of people today, you would be fighting for your own liberty and freedom as well as for the freedom of this country which you are so proud to call your own.

FAMOUS MONUMENTS TORN DOWN BY NAZIS

No longer do the famous monuments, erected in honor of the achievements of Black people, adorn and decorate the public squares of Paris.

As does the Statue of Liberty represent freedom and liberty to those who reach our shores from foreign ports, so did these monuments symbolize a type of civilization which was definitely against the new German policy.

Like Rome and Greece, France expressed her sentiments honoring achievements of famous people in lasting stone! The background and the chapter-by-chapter story of this once powerful empire, wrought from the sweat, the blood, the toil and the labor of generations of working people, became volubly expressive in these massive symbols.

These monuments were done singly or in groups, according to the conception of the sculptors who created them. At the close of the great World War, two very beautiful monuments were unveiled in honor of the Black Soldier for his part in contributing to the final victory of France.

One was in the city of Rheims. The other was in Paris.

When the Germans arrived, the very first villainous act they committed was the complete destruction of these monuments.

ELIMINATED FROM ALL LINES OF WORK

Following destruction of the monuments, the Germans began the elimination of Negroes from all lines of work. This restriction was especially felt by our group of musical artists, who immediately found themselves without employment.

In furthering this ban, there were many French people who concurred with Germanistic ideas and policies.

MAR 15 1941

Their "about-face" attitude and their duplicity surprised many Negroes, even those from the islands of Martinique and Guadaloupe, who have always been so proud of their French lineage and political connections. These people were a sad and disillusioned group. They had always taken pride in the fact they were more pro-French than the native Frenchman himself. But now, judging from the attitude of some of those with whom I talked, the opinion was expressed that their islands would be better governed, and that more progress would be made, if the United States were to take them over.

The great mass of French people know nothing at all of their colonies. They are so ignorant of the true status of these people that they ofttimes take their colonials for foreigners. The same unpleasant and embarrassing reflections are made against the colonials as are made against foreigners.

In France, to be called a "dirty foreigner" is the same as using an epithet over here. Frenchmen, meeting these people, would insult them by inquiring as to their presence in France, and very pointedly suggesting that they return to their own country. (Of course, I do not refer to tourists in these observations, because tourists always had something to spend.)

JIM-CROWED WHILE KIN FOUGHT AT FRONT

MAR 15 1941

Favoritism was another scourge of Old France. A colored lady from Martinique, a French colony, entered a store to buy some coffee and was told to return to her own country for it. At that very moment her son was a soldier in the French Army and was serving on the Maginot Line.

Another lady, also from Martinique, took her seven-year-old child to the Community school. she was told that her child could not be taken because he was black! Her husband, and the father of the "jim-crowed" youngster, as well as her brother, were at that moment soldiers in the French Army and were doing service at the front.

I quote these incidents to show that even in "liberal" France, where Americans have been taught to believe that the "color line" simply does not exist, there are barriers. And this country is partly responsible for the growth of the idea.

There is also carried on an implacable war against the Jew. Many thousands of them found asylum in France when they were expelled from Germany.

MAR 15 1941

But Germany says today that among these refugees were some of the crack "fifth columnists." These caused a great deal of trouble in France. As a result, the Jews were blamed for these wicked activities to such an extent that the French government began to put all Jews . . men and women alike . . in concentration camps.

JEWS AND NEGROES BARRED EVERYWHERE

When Herr Hitler arrived in Paris, his ruthless anti-Jewish campaign continued with increased severity. The wealth of the Jews was confiscated. Laws excluded them from the liberal professions and their businesses were severely controlled. By decree, since November 1, 1940, all businesses operated by Jews must be publicly placarded with a large sign, printed in both French and German, reading: "This Is a Jewish Enterprise."

If more than 50 per cent of the capital in any business is Jewish, the business must be managed by an Aryan of "pure blood," on a 66 2-3—33 1-3 division. In many of the first class hotels, especially where the Germans are installed, Jews and Negroes are not allowed entrance or service.

Jews, as well as French people, cannot leave the occupied zone. If such a thing were possible, it wouldn't be long before no one would be left, as practically everyone I saw wanted to escape German domination and persecution.

Germans in Paris are no longer obliging to Americans. They know that this country is looking with apprehension on the spread of Nazism.

Just before I left Paris, three employees of the U. S. Embassy were, at the request of German authorities, removed from their duties because, for several months they had been hiding three British subjects, accused of being spies in the Embassy building.

Mrs. Elizabeth Deegan from North Carolina, who could smoke three packs of cigarets a day but was still so perfunctorily and indifferently cool when answering questions asked by colored Americans who desired information relative to returning to these shores, was one of the three arrested in this affair.

MAR 15 1941

Of course, it might not be generally known, but it is the policy of the United States government NOT to employ competent Negroes in its foreign governmental service.

GERMANS INTEND TO STARVE FRENCH

Since the German occupation of France, the curfew is in vigor from midnight until 5 o'clock in the morning. During this time no one is allowed to leave their homes. If you are caught out, the German night patrol will take you to the nearest police station. You will not be released until the next morning, even if your explanation is of the best.

At 5 a. m. people begin going to the stores. It is still dark. They form long lines, standing for from three to four hours in order to buy something to eat. Food is becoming very scarce in Paris and restrictions as to its use are unusually severe. The day I left Paris there was scarcely anything on display in the market places.

Apparently, the Germans intend to starve the French into even more humble submission. I believe, however, that their course of action might become a boomerang, because they are creating a feeling of deep, bitter animosity and loathsome contempt. It is to Germany's advantage to have complete French collaboration, but the "starving-out" process proves the victor does not know French psychology. Such methods militate against the complete success of Franco-German understanding. Never was there a greater mistake, for the French are becoming more stoic, more determined and moe pro-English.

In order to obtain food, one must have a food card. Even then, food is ofttimes lacking. I have seen thousands of housewives stand for long hours in this freezing cold, only to find out when their turn arrived to be served, that everything was sold out. The only thing to do would be to return the next day. Then, possibly, the same thing would happen again.

With the scarcity of milk, one must do the same thing in order to have two gills of milk. All food-stuns have been carried away to Germany, especially pork, of which the Germans are very fond. For four months before I left France I had not seen an egg. The same can be said of coffee. Since last summer, we drank roasted barley sweetened with saccharine, for the stock of sugar was very, very low. During the Franco-Prussian war and the siege of Paris in 1871, rats sold for a high price as food. It looks as though the same conditions will be experienced once again.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS ARE MOST RESENTFUL

The most resentful group against the occupation of the Germans are the students of the universities. There have been several uprisings and a number of killings . . by German soldiers. I remember one such incident in the Latin Quarter one Saturday night, when unarmed students insulted some German soldiers in one of the cafes near the Sorbonne university. Two of the group were killed. As a result, the university was closed and the entire faculty dismissed. This also included the closing of Sainte Genevieve library.

body that was inimical to the Ethiopian cause five years ago. At that time they would not permit Professor Jeze to continue his classes in the University Law School for no other reason than that he was the legal representative of Ethiopia at the League of Nations.

My last promenade in Paris was in Montemartre, but it was in the day time. Because of the complete blackout which has been in vigor for the 16 months I was there, it would have been impossible to see anything in the night. I saw rue Pigalle, rue Fontaine and Place Blanche.

They were such lively, gay spots a few years ago. Today all that is changed. Most of the cabarets are closed and "For Rent" signs are pasted on the windows.

ONCE FAMOUS SPOTS ARE ALL CLOSED NOW

Eugene Bullard, flying ace of the last war, left his popular cafe restaurant in rue Fontaine before the Germans arrived and is now in New York City.

Brick Top's once famous place is closed and there is nothing left to indicate that her cabaret ranked with the most successful that Paris has ever seen. I strolled in the adjacent streets and found everything dead and deserted, but for the German soldiers, who come there in great numbers.

I went to the rue Fontaine and passed the cabaret of Josephine Baker. It is now transformed into a movie house. Fifteen years ago, on any evening, it would have been impossible to gain entrance, so numerous was her clientele. Prince and potentate, mandarin and maharajah; they all came to enjoy her syncopated entertainment and to sip of the rare wines and champagnes of France.

I was told Miss Baker and her titled Italian husband had gone to Brazil in South America. Again, someone said she was in Nice on the blue Mediterranean. In either case, it was impossible for me to verify the statement, for Paris is cut off from the outside world.

The only musician I found was Bobby Jones, and he was getting ready to return to America. The good old days of the twenties have died and it looks to me that Paris will never reach the pinnacle of success and popularity which once made of it the "playground of the world."

African War Is 'Not Settled,' Says Red Army Paper

MAR 19 1941

(Wireless to the Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 18.—The imperialist fight for the control of Africa is now becoming a protracted struggle, Colonel Popov says, in his weekly military review in the Soviet army organ, Red Star.

Despite what may appear to be brilliant successes on the part of the British troops in Africa, it seems that General Sir Archibald Wavell "has not got big reserves as his disposal," Colonel Popov says, and the likelihood of receiving new reinforcements from Australia or India is not great. Hence, says the Soviet expert, the British are at this time, especially in view of the Balkan crisis, obliged "to regroup their forces and desist from further offensive operations in North Africa," while both sides jockey for positions of vantage in the coming engagements.

The review is in part as follows:

"Spring has set in on the principal theatres of war. The winter campaign which brought so much disillusion to Italy has been completed. Nonetheless, Britain has not attained decisive successes. The victories won by the Greeks in Albania and by the British in Libya have not brought Britain closer to solving the strategic tasks of the war.

SITUATION IN WEST

"The situation in the west cannot be considered sufficiently definite. With the arrival of spring the danger of invasion of the British Isles becomes more acute. At the same time this by no means lessens the significance of the blockade. It is not for nothing that the foreign press is paying much attention lately to the struggle on Britain's sea routes. Britain and her overseas friends are seriously apprehensive of the possibility of the repetitions of 1917 events in the new situation. Indeed, since the end of February, the activity of the Germans on sea has increased. On the other hand, the British have undoubtedly consolidated themselves in the air and the R. A. F. is actively counteracting the air operations of its enemy.

"The struggle in the air, which at one time slackened down, now reveals a tendency to develop anew.

"The situation of the British in the Balkans is, as before, considerably complicated. The local assaults of the Greek troops have gone on since the end of February, determined by the desire to improve their positions, and taking into account the definite offensive plans of the enemy.

MAR 19 1941

"As regards the activity of the Italians during the last few days, it is confined at yet to preliminary operations of local importance. This is to be explained by the striving to ensure themselves the district of Tepelini.

NORTH AFRICA FRONT

"With the front in North Africa becoming stabilized, the struggle over the sea routes in the central part of the Mediterranean continues to be of major importance. The possibility of using the Mediterranean routes today plays an exceptionally important role for both sides. The blockade by the German air corps of the Sicilian strait, over which the German reconnaissance planes are constantly patrolling, is apparently quite effective. At the same time the Italo-German planes, which have their base in Sicily, are by systematic mombings rendering the air and naval base of the British in Malta ineffective.

"During the day raids the attacks of the German dive bombers are carried out under the cover of smoke screens. The favorable flying conditions on the North African coasts are making it easier for the German air corps to execute its second task, namely, to carry out air operations against the land troops and rear of Wilson's army stretched along the only highway.
